Member States shall specify, in accordance with their national law and having regard for Community law, the implementing conditions for this paragraph.

6 Article 1 of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007 (OJ 2007 L 335, p. 31) ('Directive 89/665'), which is headed 'Scope and availability of review procedures', provides in the third subparagraph of paragraph 1 thereof as follows:

'Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive 2004/18/EC, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law.'

Italian law

7 Directive 2004/18 was transposed into Italian law by Legislative Decree No 163/2006 of 12 April 2006 (GURI No 100 of 2 May 2006, Ordinary Supplement), which codifies the rules governing public procurement.

8 Article 38 of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 provides as follows:

'1. The following persons shall be excluded from participation in procedures for the award of … public works contracts, supply contracts and service contracts, and may not … conclude any related contract:

(c) any person who has been the subject of a conviction that has the force of res judicata or a penal order against which no appeal lies … in respect of serious professional conduct offences to the detriment of the State or the Community; …

(f) any person who, in the reasoned assessment of the contracting authority, has been guilty of serious negligence or bad faith in the performance of any contract awarded to that person by the contracting authority which published the contract notice; or any person who has been found guilty of serious professional misconduct on the basis of any evidence which the contracting authority may establish;

9 Article 78(1) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 is worded as follows:

‘For all contracts … the contracting authorities shall draw up a report containing at least the following information:

(h) where necessary, the reasons why the administration has decided not to award a contract …’

10 Article 79(1) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 provides as follows:

‘The contracting authorities shall notify without delay the candidates and tenderers of decisions taken concerning … the award of a contract … including the grounds of any decision … not to award a contract for which there has been a competitive tendering procedure …’

11 Article 11(9) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 specifically refers to the administration’s power to withdraw, suspend or modify its own measures in the following terms:

‘Once the final award has taken effect, and subject to the exercise of the administration’s power to withdraw, suspend or modify its own measures in the cases in which it is so authorised by the provisions in force, the contract shall be concluded … within 60 days.’

12 The administration’s power to withdraw its own measures is provided for, as a general principle applicable to all administrative procedures, in Article 21d of legge n. 241 — Nuove norme in materia di procedimento amministrativo e di diritto di accesso ai documenti amministrativi (Law No 241 introducing new provisions relating to administrative procedure and the right of access to administrative documents) (GURI No 192 of 18 August 1990, p. 7). That article is worded as follows:

‘Where so justified on grounds of public interest, where there has been a change in the factual situation or where the initial assessment of the public interest has been reappraised, any administrative measure having long-term effects may be withdrawn by the body which adopted it or by any other body so authorised by law; as a result of the withdrawal, the measure withdrawn shall be ineffective.’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

13 By decision of 28 December 2010, the AREU announced an open tendering procedure for the award of a contract for the supply of ‘services consisting in the transportation by road of organs, tissue, biological material, surgical equipment and patients for transplant operations’. That contract was to be for a two-year period, with the possibility of extending that period by a further 12 months, and was to be awarded on the basis of the economically most advantageous tender.

14 Three of the four companies which participated in the tendering procedure for the award of that contract were rejected by the selection committee after the technical bids had been evaluated. The only company remaining in contention, namely Croce Amica One, was provisionally awarded the contract by decision recorded in a report of 10 May 2011. However, in view of the fact the requirements laid down by national law for the purpose of ‘what is referred to as the “mandatory” verification of any anomaly identified in the tender’ were met in the present case, as the points awarded for the price and those awarded for the other assessment factors were equal to or greater than four-fifths of the corresponding maximum thresholds set out in the call for tenders, the contracting authority requested evidence in support of the technical bid submitted by Croce Amica One. After carrying out that verification, the selection committee concluded, by decision recorded in a report of 23 June 2011, that the tender was anomalous.

15 At the same time, in preliminary criminal law investigations concerning, among others, the legal representative of Croce Amice One in respect of fraud and intentionally false statements, the competent authorities seized documents relating to that company for investigative purposes.

16 By memorandum of 21 July 2011, the AREU notified both Croce Amica One and another company which had participated in the procurement procedure at issue that it had initiated a procedure for the cancellation of the invitation to tender, in accordance with the power available to the administration to withdraw, suspend or modify its own measures.

17 By act of 8 September 2011, the director general of the AREU decided not to proceed with the definitive award of the contract to Croce Amica One and, at the same time, to cancel the entire tendering procedure. By that act, the contracting authority expressed the view that, 'given the circumstances described, apart from the anomalous nature of the tender, the AREU [could] not in any event, for evident reasons of expediency and reasons connected with the principle of sound administration, proceed to award the services contract to the tenderer Croce Amica One … nor, given the vital nature of the services in question, [could] it postpone the award of the contract pending the outcome of the criminal proceedings or even the conclusion of the investigations currently under way'.

18 The contracting authority did not launch a new tendering procedure for the award of the public contract in question and extended the existing service contract with two associations.

19 By action brought on 2 November 2011, Croce Amica One challenged the contracting authority's decision of 8 September 2011 referred to at paragraph 17 above before the referring court, seeking the annulment and provisional stay of the decision. It also lodged a claim for compensation for the damage which, in its view, it had sustained as a result of the decision.

20 By decision of 14 May 2013, the Tribunale di Milano (District Court, Milan) indicted the legal representative of Croce Amica One, along with another accused, in connection, inter alia, with the offence of obstructing a public tendering procedure, on the basis that, in order to be awarded the contract, the person concerned had submitted 15 false statements claiming attendance on a course for the safe driving of ambulances.

21 The referring court considers that, in general terms, without prejudice to the exercise of the power available to the administration to withdraw, suspend or modify its own measures in connection with public contacts, the contracting authority concerned — which was acting, ostensibly, on grounds of administrative expediency deriving from the fact that criminal investigations were ongoing concerning the legal representative of the company to which the contract had been provisionally awarded — failed to have regard to Article 45 of Directive 2004/18, in the light, in particular, of the 'personal situation of the candidate or tenderer' as defined in that provision.

22 The referring court therefore considers that, under that provision, a tenderer may be excluded only where the tenderer has been convicted by a judgment having the force of res judicata.

23 The referring court is also uncertain, from an EU law perspective, as to the full extent of its own jurisdiction in that regard, taking the view that its jurisdiction cannot be confined to review of procedural flaws vitiating the exercise of the administration's powers. That court considers that not to accept that the administrative court enjoys extensive powers to review the facts or legal concepts, such as the fact that, in the present case, there has been no definitive finding as to liability in criminal law of the legal representative of the company to which the contract was provisionally awarded, would be totally at odds with the spirit and rationale of Article 45 of Directive 2004/18.

24 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia (Regional Administrative Court, Lombardy) has decided to stay proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) Is it consistent with Community law for it to be permissible for a contracting authority, in the exercise of its power to withdraw a decision in relation to a public procurement procedure pursuant to Article 21d of Law No 241 of 7 August 1990, to decide not to proceed with the definitive award of the contract merely because criminal investigations are pending vis-à-vis the legal representative of the company to which the provisional award was made?

(2) Is it consistent with Community law for there to be a derogation from the principle of the finality of findings of criminal liability, as expressed in Article 45 of Directive [2004/18], on grounds of administrative expediency, which is a matter to be determined by the administrative authorities alone?

(3) Is it consistent with Community law for there to be a derogation from the principle of the finality of findings of criminal liability, as expressed in Article 45 of Directive [2004/18], where pending criminal investigations concern offences relating to the tendering procedure covered by the measure adopted by the administration in accordance with its power to withdraw, suspend or modify its own measures?

(4) Is it consistent with Community law for the decisions adopted by a contracting authority in matters of public procurement to be open to unlimited review by a national administrative court, in exercise of the jurisdiction conferred in matters relating to public procurement, covering the reliability and the suitability of the tender, and thus going above and beyond the limited cases of clear absurdity, irrationality, failure to state adequate reasons or error as to the facts?'

Questions 1 to 3

25 By questions 1 to 3, which it is appropriate to consider together, the referring court asks, in essence, whether — where the conditions for the application of the grounds for exclusion set out in Article 45 of Directive 2004/18 are not fulfilled — that article precludes the adoption by a contracting authority of a decision not to award a contract for which a procurement procedure has been held and not to proceed with the definitive award of the contract to the sole tenderer remaining in contention to whom the contract had been provisionally awarded.

26 The formulation of those questions and the reference to Article 45 of Directive 2004/18 may be traced back to the fact that, on 8 September 2011, the director general of the AREU decided, first, not to proceed with the definitive award of the contract at issue in the main proceedings to Croce Amica One and, second, to cancel the related tendering procedure.

27 It should be noted at the outset that, notwithstanding the reference in the request for a preliminary ruling to Article 45 of Directive 2004/18, it is apparent from the documents before the Court that the measure contested in the main proceedings is a decision by a contracting authority withdrawing an invitation to tender and cancelling the procurement procedure. That decision is different from a decision relating to the exclusion of a tenderer under Article 45 of the directive.

28 In that context, it should be observed that, while the Court has not been apprised of the precise reasons for the withdrawal of the invitation to tender at issue before the referring court, that court would appear to associate the conduct of Croce Amica One's legal representative only with the grounds for exclusion relating to criminal law and entailing a conviction by a judgment that has become final, namely the grounds set out in Article 45(1) and (2)(c) of Directive 2004/18. It is useful to make clear that the grounds for exclusion set out in Article 45(2)(d) and (g) of the directive also give contracting authorities the power to exclude any economic operator who has been guilty of grave professional misconduct proven by any means which the contracting authorities can demonstrate, who is guilty of serious misrepresentation or who has failed to supply the information required for the qualitative selection of the tenders, without there being any need for the economic operator concerned to have been convicted by a judgment that has become final.

29 A decision to withdraw an invitation to tender for a public contract must comply with Articles 41(1) and 43 of Directive 2004/18.

30 Article 41(1) of Directive 2004/18 requires contracting authorities to inform candidates and tenderers as soon as possible of such decisions and to state the grounds for the decision, while Article 43 of the directive requires them to refer to those reasons in the report which it is obliged to draw up for any public contract. However, Directive 2004/18 does not contain any provision concerning the substantive or formal conditions for such a decision.

31 It should be noted in that regard that, according to the Court's case-law, Article 8(2) of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54), a provision similar to Article 41(1) of Directive 2004/18, does not provide that a decision by a contracting authority not to award a public contract is to be limited to exceptional cases or has necessarily to be based on serious grounds (judgment in Fracasso and Leitschutz, Case C-27/98, EU:C:1999:420, paragraphs 23 and 25).

32 Similarly, the Court has also held that, although Article 12(2) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), a provision also similar to Article 41(1) of Directive 2004/18, requires the contracting authority to notify candidates and tenderers of the grounds for its decision if it decides to withdraw the invitation to tender for a public contract, there is no implied obligation on that authority to carry the award procedure to its conclusion (see judgment in HI, Case C-92/00, EU:C:2002:379, paragraph 41).

33 However, the Court has been careful to point out that the requirement to communicate the grounds for a decision to withdraw an invitation to tender is dictated by the concern to ensure a minimum level of transparency in public procurement procedures to which EU rules apply, and hence compliance with the principle of equal treatment, which forms the basis of those rules (see, to that effect, judgment in HI, EU:C:2002:379, paragraphs 45 and 46 and the case-law cited).

34 The Court has also held that Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 requires the decision of the contracting authority withdrawing the invitation to tender for a public contract to be open to a review procedure, and to be capable of being annulled, where appropriate, on the ground that it has infringed EU law on public contracts or national rules transposing that law. Furthermore, the Court has stated that, even in cases where the relevant national legislation gives the contracting authorities a wide discretion in relation to the withdrawal of invitations to tender, the national courts must be able, pursuant to Directive 89/665, to check the compatibility of a decision to withdraw an invitation to tender with the relevant rules of EU law (see judgment in HI, EU:C:2002:379, paragraphs 55 and 62).

35 Accordingly, EU law does not preclude Member States from providing in their legislation for the possibility of adopting a decision to withdraw an invitation to tender. The grounds for such a decision may thus be based on reasons which reflect, inter alia, the assessment as to whether it is expedient, from the point of view of the public interest, to carry an award procedure to its conclusion, having regard, among other things, to any change that may arise in the economic context or factual circumstances, or indeed the needs of the contracting authority concerned. The grounds for such a decision may also relate to there being an insufficient degree of competition, due to the fact that, at the conclusion of the award procedure in question, only one tenderer was qualified to perform the contract.

36 As a consequence, provided the principles of transparency and equal treatment are complied with, a contracting authority cannot be required to carry to its conclusion an award procedure that has been initiated and to award the contract in question, including where there remains only one tenderer in contention.

37 In view of the foregoing considerations, the answer to Questions 1 to 3 is that Articles 41(1), 43 and 45 of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that, where the conditions for the application of the grounds for exclusion set out in Article 45 are not fulfilled, that article does not preclude the adoption by a contracting authority of a decision not to award a contract for which a procurement procedure has been held and not to proceed with the definitive award of the contract to the sole tenderer remaining in contention to whom the contract had been provisionally awarded.

38 By its fourth question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether, under EU law, the competent national court may conduct a review of a decision of a contracting authority in the exercise of its unlimited jurisdiction, that is, a review enabling it to take account of the reliability and suitability of the tenderers' bids and to substitute its own assessment for the contracting authority's evaluation as to the expediency of withdrawing the invitation to tender.

39 According to the Court's case-law, the decision to withdraw an invitation to tender for a public procurement contract is one of those 'decisions taken by the contracting authorities' in relation to which Member States are required, under the third subparagraph of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665, to establish in their national law review procedures designed to ensure that the relevant substantive rules of EU law on public procurement contracts or the domestic provisions transposing those rules are complied with (see, to that effect, judgments in HI, EU:C:2002:379, paragraph 53 to 55, and in Koppensteiner, C-15/04, EU:C:2005:345, paragraph 29).

40 Since Directive 89/665 does no more than coordinate existing mechanisms in Member States in order to ensure the full and effective application of the directives laying down substantive rules concerning public contracts, it does not expressly define the scope of the remedies which the Member States must establish for that purpose. Therefore, the question of the extent of the judicial review exercised in the context of the review procedures covered by Directive 89/665 must be examined in the light of the purpose of the latter, care being taken to ensure that its effectiveness is not undermined (judgment in HI, EU:C:2002:379, paragraphs 58 and 59).

41 It should be noted, in that regard, that the function of the review system is governed by the third subparagraph of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665, which provides that Member States are to take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive 2004/18, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed EU law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law.

42 It follows that the review procedures established by that provision serve to ensure that the relevant rules of EU law, in particular those laid down in Directive 2004/18, or national provisions transposing those rules, are complied with.

43 It must be borne in mind that review of legality cannot be confined to an examination of whether the decisions of contracting authorities are arbitrary (see, to that effect, HI, EU:C:2002:379, paragraph 63).

44 Therefore, such remedies entail a review as to whether an act was lawful, not a review of whether the act was expedient.

45 In the absence of specific EU legislation in this field, the detailed provisions governing judicial review must be established by national procedural rules, subject to compliance with the principles of equivalence and effectiveness (see, to that effect, HI, EU:C:2002:379, paragraph 68). Accordingly, the national legislature may grant the competent national courts and tribunals more extensive powers for the purpose of reviewing whether a measure was expedient.

46 The answer to Question 4 is therefore that EU public procurement law, in particular the third subparagraph of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665, must be interpreted as meaning that the review referred to in that provision constitutes a review of the lawfulness of decisions adopted by contracting authorities, the purpose of which is to ensure that the relevant rules of EU law or national provisions transposing those rules are complied with. It is not possible for such review to be confined to a simple examination of whether the decisions adopted by contracting authorities are arbitrary. On the other hand, that does not mean that it is not open to the national legislature to grant the competent national courts and tribunals the power to review whether a measure was expedient.

Costs

47 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the referring court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fifth Chamber) hereby rules:

1) Articles 41(1), 43 and 45 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts must be interpreted as meaning that, where the conditions for the application of the grounds for exclusion set out in Article 45 are not fulfilled, that article does not preclude the adoption by a contracting authority of a decision not to award a contract for which a procurement procedure has been held and not to proceed with the definitive award of the contract to the sole tenderer remaining in contention to whom the contract had been provisionally awarded.

2) European Union public procurement law, in particular the third subparagraph of Article 1(1) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007, must be interpreted as meaning that the review referred to in that provision constitutes a review of the lawfulness of decisions adopted by contracting authorities, the purpose of which is to ensure that the relevant rules of EU law or national provisions transposing those rules are complied with. It is not possible for such review to be confined to a simple examination of whether the decisions adopted by contracting authorities are arbitrary. On the other hand, that does not mean that it is not open to the national legislature to grant the competent national courts and tribunals the power to review whether a measure was expedient.

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 15 May 2014,

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114) and the scope of the principle of res judicata in the event of a situation which is incompatible with EU law.

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Impresa Pizzarotti & C. SpA (‘Pizzarotti’) and the Comune di Bari, the Giunta comunale di Bari and the Consiglio comunale di Bari following the publication of a market investigation notice with a view to providing the Italian judicial authorities with a new single headquarters bringing together all the courts of Bari (Italy).

Directive 92/50/EEC

3 Article 1(a) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1) provided:

‘For the purposes of this Directive:

(a) public service contracts shall mean contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a service provider and a contracting authority, to the exclusion of:

(iii) contracts for the acquisition or rental, by whatever financial means, of land, existing buildings, or other immovable property or concerning rights thereon …

4 Article 1(a) of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54) defined ‘public works contracts’, for the purposes of that directive, as ‘contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a contractor and a contracting authority as defined in [Article 1(b)], which have as their object either the execution, or both the execution and design, of works related to one of the activities referred to in Annex II or a work defined in [Article 1(c)], or the execution, by whatever means, of a work corresponding to the requirements specified by the contracting authority’.

5 The activities referred to in Annex II to that directive include the following activities in Class 50 (‘Building and civil engineering’): ‘[g]eneral building and civil engineering work (without any particular specification)’ (sub-group 500.1) and ‘[c]onstruction of flats, office blocks, hospitals and other buildings, both residential and non-residential’ (group 501).

Directive 2004/18

6 Article 1(2) of Directive 2004/18 provides:

‘(a) “Public contracts” are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services within the meaning of this Directive.

(b) “Public works contracts” are public contracts having as their object either the execution, or both the design and execution, of works related to one of the activities within the meaning of Annex I or a work, or the realisation, by whatever means, of a work corresponding to the requirements specified by the contracting authority. …

7 Article 16 of that directive, entitled ‘Specific exclusions’, provides:

‘This Directive shall not apply to public service contracts for:

(a) the acquisition or rental, by whatever financial means, of land, existing buildings or other immovable property or concerning rights thereon; …

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

8 On 14 August 2003, the Comune di Bari (Municipality of Bari) published a ‘market investigation’ notice with the aim of creating, as soon as possible, a new single headquarters which would be suitable and appropriate to host all the courts of Bari. That notice was published in, inter alia, the Official Journal of the European Union of 23 August 2003 (OJ S 161).

9 The notice required tenderers to commit themselves to commencing construction of the planned work by 31 December 2003. It required clear and exhaustive indications of the costs to be paid by the municipal authorities and the Ministero della Giustizia (Italian Ministry of Justice), and of the arrangements for payment, having regard to the fact that the public resources available amounted to the EUR 43.5 million already allocated to the project, to which the sum of EUR 3 million was to be added corresponding to the annual rents paid by the Comune di Bari to lease the premises housing the courts concerned. The notice was accompanied by an annex, drawn up by the Corte d’appello di Bari (Court of Appeal, Bari), which was intended to provide an ‘official and exhaustive framework of structural, functional, and organisational requirements’ (‘the framework of requirements’) relating to the creation of the planned judicial complex.

10 Four proposals were submitted. By Decision No 1045/2003 of 18 December 2003, the Comune di Bari selected Pizzarotti’s proposal. That proposal indicated that part of the complex built would be sold to the Comune di Bari for the sum of EUR 43 million and that the remainder would be leased to it for an annual rent of EUR 3 million.

11 By a note dated 4 February 2004, the Ministry of Justice informed the Comune di Bari that the public resources available for the project in question had been reduced to EUR 18.5 million and asked it to verify whether, having regard to the proposals received, it was possible to bring the project to fruition within the limits imposed by that new financial framework. By a note dated 11 February 2004, the Comune di Bari asked Pizzarotti to indicate whether it was prepared to go ahead with the already initiated procedure. Pizzarotti replied to that request in the affirmative, reformulating its proposal to take account of the reduced public resources available.

12 The expected public funding was cut off completely in September 2004.

13 Following the removal of that funding, Pizzarotti submitted a second proposal to the Comune di Bari, setting out the possibility of completing the work intended for letting which was contemplated in its initial proposal.

14 As the authorities took no action, Pizzarotti initiated proceedings before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Puglia (Regional Administrative Court, Puglia) seeking an order obliging the Comune di Bari to act.

15 After that court dismissed the action, by Judgment No 4267/2007 the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) upheld the appeal brought by Pizzarotti against the judgment at first instance. Finding that, in the light of the Ministry of Justice's note of 4 February 2004 reacting to the amended financial framework, the procedure had not been brought to an end by the approval of the outcome of the market investigation, the Consiglio di Stato decided that the Comune di Bari, 'in compliance with the principles of reasonableness, good faith and the protection of legitimate expectations, [was obliged], lending cohesion to its actions, [to] bring the procedure to a genuinely appropriate conclusion, examining, in the context of the proposals received, the possibility of the works being accomplished within the constraints of the amended financial framework'.

16 The appeal brought by the Comune di Bari against that judgment was rejected by an order of the Corte suprema di cassazione (Supreme Court of Cassation) of 23 December 2008.

17 Having, in the meantime, received an application seeking enforcement of its Judgment No 4267/2007, by Judgment No 3817/2008 the Consiglio di Stato found that the Comune di Bari had failed to act and ordered it to give full effect to the operative part of Judgment No 4267/2007 within 30 days. It appointed the Prefect of Bari as Commissario ad acta so that, in the event of continued non-compliance, he would take — possibly through a delegate — all measures necessary for enforcement of that judgment.

18 On 21 November 2008, the Commissario ad acta delegated by the Prefect of Bari acknowledged that Pizzarotti's proposals were valid and, accordingly, found that the procedure initiated by the market investigation notice concerned had achieved a positive outcome.

19 For its part, the Giunta comunale di Bari (Bari Municipal Council) terminated that procedure, claiming that Pizzarotti's second proposal did not comply with the requirements of the notice.

20 Pizzarotti and the Comune di Bari each appealed to the Consiglio di Stato. Pizzarotti claimed that, in the absence of any contractual commitment from the Comune di Bari for the purposes of completion of the new planned judicial complex, the latter had not correctly complied with the Consiglio di Stato's Judgment No 3817/2008. The Comune di Bari criticised the lack of any finding that the conditions for completing the project had worsened, affecting the progress of the procedure.

21 By Enforcement Decision No 2153/2010 of 15 April 2010, the Consiglio di Stato upheld Pizzarotti's appeal and dismissed that of the Comune di Bari. It considered that the action of the Commissario ad acta was incomplete, given the absence of any 'genuinely appropriate conclusion' within the meaning of its Judgment No 4267/2007. It ruled that the measures necessary for the specific implementation of Pizzarotti's second proposal had to be adopted, and set a time-limit of 180 days for bringing the procedure to an end.

22 By a document dated 27 May 2010, the Commissario ad acta concluded that 'the market investigation notice of August 2003 [had] not had a positive outcome'. He supported that conclusion by arguing, with regard to Pizzarotti's first proposal, as reformulated in 2004, that the loss of part of the public funding made it impossible to achieve the objective pursued by the Comune di Bari. He stated that Pizzarotti's second proposal, concerning the lease of buildings to be created using private funding, was totally inappropriate in the light of that objective.

23 An appeal brought by Pizzarotti against that document was upheld by the Consiglio di Stato by Enforcement Decision No 8420/2010 of 3 December 2010. Emphasising the inconsistent nature of the conclusions concerning the notice which were set out in the documents of 21 November 2008 and 27 May 2010, it took the view that the only valid conclusion was the one contained in the first of those documents. It reaffirmed the need for the Commissario ad acta to initiate the procedures necessary for the adoption of Pizzarotti's second proposal and annulled the second of those documents on the ground that it infringed the principle of res judicata.

24 Subsequently, the new Commissario ad acta appointed by the Prefect of Bari took all the measures necessary for the adoption on 23 April 2012 of a 'town planning modification' in relation to the Comune di Bari's general development plan, with regard to the land affected by the construction of the planned judicial complex.

25 Pizzarotti contested that decision before the Consiglio di Stato on the ground that it was in breach of the principle of res judicata.

26 In that context, the Consiglio di Stato asks, first, whether a contract for the lease of a property for future completion, taking the form of an undertaking to let that property, is equivalent, despite the presence of elements characteristic of a lease, to a works contract falling outside the scope of the specific exclusion clause set out in Article 16(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18.

27 Second, if it is assumed that that contract constitutes a public works contract, that court asks whether it may hold that a judgment having the authority of res judicata — in the present case its Judgment No 4267/2007 — is ineffective in so far as it has led, by reason of subsequent enforcement decisions and measures by the Commissario ad acta, to a situation which is incompatible with EU law on public procurement. It points out in that regard that, by virtue of its own case-law, it may, under certain conditions, supplement the original operative part of one of its judgments by an implementation decision, that possibility giving rise to what it terms 'progressively formed res judicata'.

28 In those circumstances, the Consiglio di Stato decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'1. Is a contract to be concluded for the lease of something in the future — even in the form, suggested most recently, of an undertaking to let — equivalent to a public works contract, albeit with certain elements characteristic of a lease, with the result that such a contract cannot be included among the contracts which are excluded, under Article 16 of [Directive 2004/18], from the scope of the rules on public procedures?

2. If the answer to Question 1 is in the affirmative, may a national court — specifically, this referring court — hold that the ruling made regarding the events under consideration (as described in [this order for reference]) is ineffective in that it has enabled a situation which is contrary to [EU] law on public procurement to persist and, therefore, is it possible to enforce a final judgment which is contrary to [EU] law?'

Admissibility of the questions referred

29 Pizzarotti gives two reasons for its serious doubts as to the admissibility of the questions referred.

30 First, it submits that the request for a preliminary ruling fails to identify the correct EU legislation to be applied in the main proceedings: it seeks an interpretation of Directive 2004/18, whereas that directive was adopted after the date on which the Comune di Bari decided to publish the market investigation notice concerned, namely 14 August 2003, and is thus not applicable to the main proceedings.

31 In that regard, it should be borne in mind that the applicable directive is, as a rule, the one in force when the contracting authority chooses the type of procedure to be followed and decides definitively whether it is necessary for a prior call for competition to be issued for the award of a public contract (judgment in Commission v Netherlands, C-576/10, EU:C:2013:510, paragraph 52 and the case-law cited). Conversely, a directive is not applicable if the period prescribed for its transposition expired after that point in time (see, to that effect, the judgment in Commission v France, C-337/98, EU:C:2000:543, paragraphs 41 and 42).

32 In the present case, Directives 92/50 and 93/37 were applicable on 14 August 2003, the date on which the Comune di Bari published a 'market investigation' notice with the aim of creating a judicial complex in Bari. Those directives were also applicable when, in September 2004, following the amendment to the financial framework in connection with the complete removal of public funding, the Comune di Bari decided, according to the information which it has submitted to the Court, that it was necessary to initiate a new selection procedure rather than negotiate the conclusion of a contract 'for the lease of something in the future' directly with Pizzarotti without first issuing a new call for competition.

33 By contrast, Directive 2004/18 was not applicable on those dates, as — pursuant to Article 80(1) thereof — the period prescribed for transposition of that directive did not expire until 31 January 2006.

34 That said, the concept of 'public works contracts', which is referred to in the first question, is defined in similar terms in Article 1(a) of Directive 93/37 and Article 1(2)(a) and (b) of Directive 2004/18. In addition, Article 1(a)(iii) of Directive 92/50 and Article 16(a) of Directive 2004/18 use identical wording to define the scope of the exclusion which is also referred to in the first question.

35 In those circumstances, the fact that the referring court erred in identifying the provisions of EU law to be applied to the present case cannot affect the admissibility of the questions referred (see, to that effect, the judgment in Zurita García and Choque Cabrera, C-261/08 and C-348/08, EU:C:2009:648, paragraph 39).

36 Second, Pizzarotti submits that the main proceedings are characterised by the presence of judicial decisions of — in particular — the Consiglio di Stato which have the authority of res judicata, which makes the request for a preliminary ruling — particularly the first question — manifestly inadmissible. It claims that an answer from the Court to that question can have no effect on the outcome of the main proceedings in view of (i) the significance attributed to the principle of res judicata by EU law, at the expense, as the case may be, of remedying a breach of that law, and (ii) the lack of any obligation for an administrative authority to go back on a final decision which proves to be inconsistent with EU law.

37 However, an argument of that kind concerns the substance of the main proceedings and, more specifically, the subject-matter of the second question referred by the Consiglio di Stato.

38 In the light of the foregoing, the questions referred are admissible.

39 By its first question, which must be rephrased to reflect the provisions of EU law which were applicable to the main proceedings at the material time, the referring court asks, in essence, whether, on a proper construction of Article 1(a) of Directive 93/37, a contract containing an undertaking to let buildings which have not yet been constructed constitutes a public works contract despite having elements characteristic of a lease, and is not, therefore, covered by the exclusion referred to in Article 1(a)(iii) of Directive 92/50.

40 In that regard, it should be borne in mind from the outset, first, that the question whether a transaction constitutes a public works contract for the purposes of EU legislation is one of EU law. The classification of the proposed contract as a 'lease', highlighted by Pizzarotti and the Italian Government, is not decisive in that regard (see, to that effect, the judgment in Commission v Germany, C-536/07, EU:C:2009:664, paragraph 54 and the case-law cited).

41 Second, where a contract contains both elements relating to a public works contract and elements relating to another type of contract, it is necessary to refer to the main object of that contract in order to determine its legal classification and the EU rules applicable (see, to that effect, the judgments in Auroux and Others, C-220/05, EU:C:2007:31, paragraph 37; Commission v Italy, C-412/04, EU:C:2008:102, paragraph 47; and Commission v Germany, EU:C:2009:664, paragraph 57).

42 In the main proceedings, it can be seen from the case-file before the Court that, at the time when the conclusion of the contract in question was proposed to the Comune di Bari by Pizzarotti, the works for creating the complex referred to in that contract had not yet begun. In those circumstances, the main object of the contract is the creation of that complex, which the subsequent letting of the complex necessarily presupposes (see, to that effect, the judgment in Commission v Germany, EU:C:2009:664, paragraph 56).

43 As the German Government has pointed out, it is also necessary, in order for it to be possible to conclude that there is a 'public works contract' for the purposes of Directive 93/37, that the execution of the planned work corresponds to the requirements specified by the contracting authority (judgment in Commission v Germany, EU:C:2009:664, paragraph 55).

44 Such is the case where that authority has taken measures to define the characteristics of the work or, at the very least, has had a decisive influence on its design (see, to that effect, the judgment in Helmut Müller, C-451/08, EU:C:2010:168, paragraph 67).

45 In the main proceedings, recital 10 of the draft 'undertaking to let' — which is mentioned by the referring court as being the latest suggested form of the contract proposed to the Comune di Bari by Pizzarotti — refers to the framework of requirements which had been drawn up by the Corte d'appello di Bari for the purposes of publishing the market investigation notice in question. Article 7 of that draft reserves the right for the authorities to verify, prior to accepting the work, whether it complies with the framework of requirements.

46 That framework specifies the various technical and technological characteristics of the planned work and, on the basis of a set of statistical data relating to judicial activity in the district of Bari (number of civil and criminal cases, number of hearings per week per court, number of judges or prosecutors, number of members of administrative staff, criminal investigation staff or security service staff, number of lawyers admitted to the Bari Bar, and so on), lists the specific requirements of each of the courts coming within that judicial district (number of offices and of courtrooms, conference rooms, meeting rooms and archive rooms required, surface area of rooms, methods of internal communication), along with certain common requirements, such as car park capacity.

47 Contrary to the assertions of Pizzarotti and the Italian Government, that framework of requirements puts the Comune di Bari in a position to have a decisive influence on the design of the work to be constructed.

48 It follows that the main object of the proposed contract in the main proceedings is the execution of a work corresponding to the requirements specified by the contracting authority.

49 It is true that, as the referring court notes, the draft 'undertaking to let' also includes certain elements characteristic of a lease. Before this Court, emphasis has been placed on the fact that the financial consideration to be paid by the authorities corresponds, under Article 5 of that draft, to an 'annual rent' of EUR 3.5 million, to be paid over the 18 years of the contractual term. According to the information provided by Pizzarotti and the Italian Government, this overall consideration, amounting to EUR 63 million, is far lower than the total estimated cost of the work, which is almost EUR 330 million.

50 However, it should be borne in mind in that regard that the decisive element for the purposes of the classification of the contract concerned is the main object of that contract, not the amount paid to the contractor or the arrangements for payment (judgment in Commission v Germany, EU:C:2009:664, paragraph 61).

51 Moreover, as the discussion at the hearing has shown, neither Article 4 of the draft 'undertaking to let', under which the contract automatically terminates after 18 years, nor the provision of the Italian legislation relating to the General State Accounts Department, highlighted by the Italian Government, which requires contracts concluded by public authorities to have a specific term and duration and which prohibits such contracts from being a continuous burden on the State, are hindrances to the conclusion, upon expiry of the first proposed contract, of one or more subsequent contracts which would guarantee payment to Pizzarotti for all, or a substantial proportion, of the works carried out in creating the complex concerned.

52 In the light of the foregoing, the answer to the first question is that, on a proper construction of Article 1(a) of Directive 93/37, where the main object of a contract is the execution of a work corresponding to the requirements expressed by the contracting authority, that contract constitutes a public works contract and is not, therefore, covered by the exclusion referred to in Article 1(a)(iii) of Directive 92/50, even if it contains an undertaking to let the work in question.

53 By its second question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether it may decide that a ruling which it has made which has led to a situation which is incompatible with the EU legislation on public works contracts is ineffective.

54 In that regard, it should be borne in mind that, in the absence of EU legislation in this area, the rules implementing the principle of res judicata are a matter for the national legal order, in accordance with the principle of the procedural autonomy of the Member States, but must be consistent with the principles of equivalence and effectiveness (see, to that effect, the judgment in Fallimento Olimpiclub, C-2/08, EU:C:2009:506, paragraph 24 and the case-law cited).

55 In its request for a preliminary ruling, the referring court indicates that, according to its case-law, it may, under certain conditions, supplement the original operative part of one of its judgments by implementation decisions, that possibility giving rise to what it terms 'progressively formed res judicata'.

56 If — and it is for the referring court to ascertain whether this is the case — the conditions for applying that procedure are met in respect of the decision in Judgment No 4267/2007, a decision which is mentioned in paragraph 15 of this judgment and which — according to the order for reference — alone has the force of res judicata in the present case, it is for that court, having regard to the principle of equivalence, to make use of that procedure, favouring, from among 'the numerous different possibilities of implementation' which it states may be used in respect of that decision, the solution which, in accordance with the principle of effectiveness, ensures compliance with the EU legislation on public works contracts.

57 As has been stated by the Comune di Bari, that solution could consist of an order, supplementing that decision, to terminate the market investigation procedure without accepting any of the proposals, which would then permit the launch of a new procedure, in compliance with the EU legislation on public works contracts.

58 On the other hand, if the referring court is led to the view that the correct application of that legislation conflicts, having regard to the applicable domestic rules of procedure, with its Judgment No 4267/2007 or with its decisions of 15 April and 3 December 2010 implementing that judgment, attention should be drawn to the importance, both in the legal order of the European Union and in national legal systems, of the principle of res judicata. In order to ensure both stability of the law and legal relations and the sound administration of justice, it is important that judicial decisions which have become definitive after all rights of appeal have been exhausted or after expiry of the time-limits provided for in that connection can no longer be called into question (judgments in Kapferer, C-234/04, EU:C:2006:178, paragraph 20; Commission v Luxembourg, C-526/08, EU:C:2010:379, paragraph 26; and ThyssenKrupp Nirosta v Commission, C-352/09 P, EU:C:2011:191, paragraph 123).

59 Therefore, EU law does not require a national court to disapply domestic rules of procedure conferring finality on a judgment, even if to do so would make it possible to remedy a domestic situation which is incompatible with EU law (see, to that effect, the judgments in Eco Swiss, C-126/97, EU:C:1999:269, paragraphs 46 and 47; Kapferer, EU:C:2006:178, paragraphs 20 and 21; Fallimento Olimpiclub, EU:C:2009:506, paragraphs 22 and 23; Asturcom Telecomunicaciones, C-40/08, EU:C:2009:615, paragraphs 35 to 37; and Commission v Slovakia, C-507/08, EU:C:2010:802, paragraphs 59 and 60).

60 Accordingly, EU law does not require a judicial body automatically to go back on a judgment having the authority of res judicata in order to take into account the interpretation of a relevant provision of EU law adopted by the Court after delivery of that judgment.

61 That analysis cannot be undermined by the judgment in Lucchini (C-199/05, EU:C:2007:434), cited by the referring court: it was in a highly specific situation, in which the matters at issue were principles governing the division of powers between the Member States and the European Union in the area of State aid, that the Court found, in essence, that EU law precludes the application of a provision of national law, such as Article 2909 of the Italian Civil Code, which seeks to lay down the principle of res judicata, in so far as the application of that provision would prevent the recovery of State aid which was granted in breach of EU law and which has been found to be incompatible with the common market in a decision of the European Commission which has become final (see, to that effect, the judgment in Fallimento Olimpiclub, EU:C:2009:506, paragraph 25). However, issues of that nature, relating to the division of powers, do not arise in the present case.

62 That said, if the applicable domestic rules of procedure provide the possibility, under certain conditions, for a national court to go back on a decision having the authority of res judicata in order to render the situation compatible with national law, that possibility must prevail if those conditions are met, in accordance with the principles of equivalence and effectiveness, so that the situation at issue in the main proceedings is brought back into line with the EU legislation on public works contracts.

63 In that regard, it should be emphasised that that legislation contains fundamental rules of EU law in that it is intended to ensure the application of the principles of equal treatment of tenderers and of transparency in order to open up undistorted competition in all the Member States (see, to that effect, the judgments in Commission v Portugal, C-70/06, EU:C:2008:3, paragraph 40; Michaniki, C-213/07, EU:C:2008:731, paragraph 55; Commission v Cyprus, C-251/09, EU:C:2011:84, paragraphs 37 to 39; and Manova, C-336/12, EU:C:2013:647, paragraph 28).

64 In the light of the foregoing, the answer to the second question is that, to the extent that it is authorised to do so by the applicable domestic rules of procedure, a national court — such as the referring court — which has given a ruling at last instance, without a reference having first been made to the Court of Justice under Article 267 TFEU, that has led to a situation which is incompatible with the EU legislation on public works contracts must either supplement or go back on that definitive ruling so as to take into account any interpretation of that legislation provided by the Court subsequently.

Costs

65 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Second Chamber) hereby rules:

1. On a proper construction of Article 1(a) of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, where the main object of a contract is the execution of a work corresponding to the requirements expressed by the contracting authority, that contract constitutes a public works contract and is not, therefore, covered by the exclusion referred to in Article 1(a)(iii) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, even if it contains an undertaking to let the work in question.

2. To the extent that it is authorised to do so by the applicable domestic rules of procedure, a national court — such as the referring court — which has given a ruling at last instance, without a reference having first been made to the Court of Justice of the European Union under Article 267 TFEU, that has led to a situation which is incompatible with the EU legislation on public works contracts must either supplement or go back on that definitive ruling so as to take into account any interpretation of that legislation provided by the Court subsequently.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL
delivered on 15 May 2014 (1)

Case C-213/13

Impresa Pizzarotti & C. SpA
Comune di Bari

(Public procurement — Directives 93/37/EEC and 2004/18/EC — Meaning of 'public works contract' — Contract to be entered into for lease of a building yet to be built — Scope of the principle of res judicata in circumstances incompatible with EU law)

1. The project to create a new judicial centre in Bari (Italy), intended to rationalise the use of resources available to the courts within that district by creating a single headquarters for them, has, in a manner which is to say the least paradoxical, been the focus of copious litigation. Evidence of this is the sequence of events leading up to the present request for a preliminary ruling in proceedings between Impresa Pizzarotti & C. SpA ('Pizzarotti') and the Italian local authorities which supervise the project, following a market investigation notice seeking the setting up of the new judicial centre. The request is concurrent with a complaint submitted to the European Commission by the Comune di Bari (Municipality of Bari), which gave rise to the initiation of a Treaty infringement procedure against the Italian Republic on the basis of Article 258 TFEU.

2. In the present case, the Court is called upon to clarify — following on from the guidance laid down in the KölnMesse case (2) — whether or not a contract for the leasing of a building yet to be completed, as is the case in the main proceedings, is caught by the rules governing the award of public works contracts. If so, and in the event of the conclusion being reached that such a classification conflicts with judicial decisions which have become res judicata, the Court is called upon to rule on the scope of the principle that such decisions are 'untouchable' in a situation regarded as incompatible with EU law.

I – Legal background

3. According to the tenth recital in the preamble to Directive 92/50/EEC, (3) 'contracts relating to the acquisition or rental of immovable property or to rights thereon have particular characteristics, which make the application of procurement rules inappropriate'.

4. Article 1(a) of Directive 92/50 defines 'public service contracts', for the purposes of the directive, as 'contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a service provider and a contracting authority, to the exclusion of: … (iii) contracts for the acquisition or rental, by whatever financial means, of land, existing buildings, or other immovable property or concerning rights thereon …'.

5. Article 1(a) of Directive 93/37/EEC (4) defines ‘public works contracts’, for the purposes of the directive, as ‘contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a contractor and a contracting authority as defined in (b), which have as their object either the execution, or both the execution and design, of works related to one of the activities referred to in Annex II or a work defined in (c) below, or the execution, by whatever means, of a work corresponding to the requirements specified by the contracting authority’.

6. The professional activities mentioned in Annex II to that directive include, in Class 50, ‘Building and civil engineering’. That class covers, in particular, ‘General building and civil engineering work (without any particular specification)’ (sub-group 500.1) and ‘Construction of flats, office blocks, hospitals and other buildings, both residential and non-residential’ (group 501).

7. Recital 24 in the preamble to Directive 2004/18/EC (5) states:

‘In the context of services, contracts for the acquisition or rental of immovable property or rights to such property have particular characteristics which make the application of public procurement rules inappropriate.’

8. Article 1(2) of that directive provides:

‘(a) “Public contracts” are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services within the meaning of this directive.

(b) “Public works contracts” are public contracts having as their object either the execution, or both the design and execution, of works related to one of the activities within the meaning of Annex I or a work, or the realisation, by whatever means, of a work corresponding to the requirements specified by the contracting authority. …

9. Article 16 of the directive, entitled ‘Specific exclusions’, provides:

‘This directive shall not apply to public service contracts for:

(a) the acquisition or rental, by whatever financial means, of land, existing buildings or other immovable property or concerning rights thereon; …

II – Facts, the questions referred and procedure before the Court

10. The background to the dispute in the main proceedings, as set out in particular in the order for reference, is rather complex. For the purposes of this analysis, the following points are relevant.

11. The case before the referring court has its origin in the publication on 14 August 2003, by the Comune di Bari, of a public ‘market investigation’ notice with a view to providing the judicial administration, as soon as possible, with a new single headquarters which would be suitable and appropriate to host all the courts of Bari. (6)

12. The notice required tenderers to commit themselves to commencing construction work by 31 December 2003. It also required clear and exhaustive indications of the costs to be paid by the municipal administration and the Italian Ministry of Justice and of the arrangements for payment, having regard to the fact that the available public resources amounted to EUR 43.5 million, already allocated to the project, to which the sum of EUR 3 million was to be added corresponding to the annual rents paid at that time by the Comune di Bari to lease the premises housing the courts concerned. Lastly, that notice was accompanied by a document setting out a framework of requirements, drawn up by the Corte d’appello di Bari (Court of Appeal, Bari) (Italy).

13. Among the four proposals submitted, that of Pizzarotti was selected by the Comune di Bari, by Decision No 1045/2003 of 18 December 2003. That decision indicated that some of the buildings would be sold to the Comune di Bari for the sum of EUR 43 million and that the remainder would be leased to it for an annual rent of EUR 3 million.

14. By a letter of 4 February 2004, the Italian Ministry of Justice informed the Comune di Bari that the public resources available had been reduced to EUR 18.5 million and asked it to verify whether, having regard to the proposals received, it was possible to bring the project to fruition within the limits of that new financial framework. By a note dated 11 February 2004, the Comune di Bari asked Pizzarotti whether it was prepared to go ahead with the procedure already commenced. Pizzarotti replied favourably to that request, reformulating its tender to take account of the reduction of the public resources available.

15. Public financing was completely eliminated in September 2004. Pizzarotti submitted a new proposal to the Comune di Bari, setting out the possibility of carrying out the works intended for letting, as envisaged in its initial proposal.

16. Because of inaction on the part of the municipal authorities, Pizzarotti commenced proceedings for a finding that the administration's silence was unlawful and for an order that the Comune di Bari should take action.

17. Following an unfavourable judgment of the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Puglia (Regional Administrative Court, Puglia) of 8 February 2007, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State), by judgment No 4267/2007, upheld Pizzarotti's appeal. Taking the view that the procedure had not been brought to an end by the approval of the outcome of the market investigation, it decided that the Comune di Bari, 'in compliance with the principles of reasonableness, good faith and the protection of legitimate expectations, must, lending cohesion to its actions, bring the procedure to a genuinely appropriate conclusion, examining, in the context of the proposals received, the possibility of the works being accomplished within the constraints of the amended financial framework'.

18. In response to an application to enforce its judgment No 4267/2007, the Consiglio di Stato, by judgment No 3817/2008, acknowledged that the Comune di Bari had failed to comply with the earlier judgment and ordered it to give full effect to the operative part of its judgment No 4267/2007 within 30 days. It appointed the Prefect of Bari as Commissario ad acta, so that, in the event of continued non-compliance, he would take, possibly through a delegate, all measures needed for enforcement of that judgment.

19. On 21 November 2008, the Commissario ad acta appointed by the Prefect of Bari determined that Pizzarotti's proposals were valid and, accordingly, made a finding that the market investigation procedure had achieved a positive outcome.

20. For its part, the Giunta Comunale di Bari (Bari Municipal Council) brought to an end the procedure commenced by the market investigation notice, placing on record that Pizzarotti's latest proposal was not in conformity with the requirements of that notice.

21. Pizzarotti and the Comune di Bari each appealed to the Consiglio di Stato. Pizzarotti claimed that, in the absence of any contractual commitment from the Comune di Bari to rent the property to be built, the latter had not correctly complied with the order contained in judgment No 3817/2008. The Comune di Bari complained of the lack of any finding that the conditions surrounding conduct of the procedure had worsened.

22. By Enforcement Decision No 2153/2010 of 15 April 2010, the Consiglio di Stato upheld Pizzarotti's appeal and dismissed that of the Comune di Bari. It considered that the action of the Commissario ad acta, although appropriate, was nevertheless incomplete, in the absence of a 'genuinely appropriate conclusion' within the meaning of judgment No 4267/2007. It therefore set a time-limit of 180 days for closure of the procedure by the adoption of the measures necessary for specific implementation of the Pizzarotti proposal.

23. By a document of 27 May 2010, the Commissario ad acta concluded that the 'market investigation notice of August 2003 … ha[d] not had a positive outcome'.

24. Pizzarotti appealed against that measure, and the Consiglio di Stato, by Enforcement Decision No 8420/2010 of 3 December 2010, upheld its appeal. Emphasising the inconsistent nature of the conclusions concerning the market investigation notice which were contained in the document of 21 November 2008 and in that of 27 May 2010, it took the view that the only valid conclusion was the one contained in the first of those measures. As regards the involvement of a third party purchaser and lessor of the premises to be used for the Bari judicial centre, and the commitment to rent, it observed that the appraisal made by the Commissario ad acta was not based on a detailed examination and thus infringed the order of the court, which required verification of the factual and legal preconditions for specific execution of the proposal. As regards the alleged lack of conformity of Pizzarotti's proposal with town planning requirements, it reaffirmed the need for the Commissario ad acta to initiate the procedures necessary for the adoption of that proposal after verification of the other regulatory requirements. Consequently, the document issued by the Commissario ad acta was annulled on the ground that it infringed the principle of res judicata.

25. Subsequently, the new Commissario ad acta appointed by the Prefect of Bari took all the requisite action for the adoption of his decision of 23 April 2012 effecting a 'town planning modification' in relation to the General Development Plan for the Comune di Bari, with regard to the land affected by construction of the judicial centre.

26. Pizzarotti contested that decision before the Consiglio di Stato on the ground that it sought to circumvent the principle of res judicata.

27. The referring court is uncertain, first, whether the lease of a property for future completion, to be concluded in the form of an undertaking to let, is equivalent, despite the presence of elements characteristic of a lease, to a works contract falling outside the scope of the specific exclusion provided for in Article 16(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18. It enquires, in particular, as to the scope of the term 'other immovable property' contained in that provision, and also as to the meaning of recital 24 in the preamble to that directive.

28. Second, if it is assumed that the contract in question constitutes a works contract, the referring court is uncertain whether it may hold that the decision having become res judicata in the present case by its judgment No 4267/2007 is ineffective in so far as the latter has led, by reason of subsequent enforcement decisions and measures by the Commissario ad acta, to a situation incompatible with EU law on public procurement. It emphasises in that regard that, by virtue of its own case-law, it can add to the original operative part of a decision adopted by it by means of an implementation decision, giving rise to 'progressively formed res judicata'. It adds that, by virtue of the case-law of the Court, the principle of res judicata, as recognised by Article 2909 of the Italian Civil Code, does not impede the correct application of EU law to a situation covered by that principle.

29. It was in those circumstances that the Consiglio di Stato decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) Is a contract to be concluded for the lease of something in the future — even in the form, suggested most recently, of an undertaking to let — equivalent to a public works contract, albeit with certain elements characteristic of a lease, with the result that such a contract cannot be included among the contracts which are excluded, under Article 16 of Directive 2004/18/EC, from the scope of the rules on public procedures?

(2) If the answer to Question 1 is in the affirmative, may a national court — specifically, this referring court — hold that the ruling made regarding the events under consideration (as described [in the present request for a preliminary ruling]) is ineffective in that it has enabled a situation which is contrary to [EU] law on public procurement to persist and, therefore, is it possible to enforce a final judgment which is contrary to [EU] law?'

30. Written observations have been submitted by the parties to the main proceedings, by the Italian and German Governments, and by the Commission.

31. A hearing was held on 27 February 2014, in which the parties to the main proceedings, the Italian and German Governments and the Commission participated.

III – Analysis

A – Admissibility

32. Pizzarotti entertains doubts as to the admissibility of the present request for a preliminary ruling, for two reasons.

33. First, it submits that Directive 2004/18, the only measure referred to in the present request for a preliminary ruling, is not applicable ratione temporis to the case before the referring court.

34. Second, Pizzarotti contends that the answer given by the Court could have no effect on the outcome of the main proceedings, which are characterised by the existence of a number of judicial decisions (7) that have become res judicata under Italian national law.

35. I am not convinced by either of the grounds of inadmissibility put forward by Pizzarotti.

36. As regards, first, the alleged inapplicability to this case of Directive 2004/18, the only instrument mentioned by the referring court, this ground seems to me to be hardly sufficient to justify declaring the present request for a preliminary ruling inadmissible.

37. Admittedly, as pointed out in particular by Pizzarotti and the Commission, it is well-established case-law (8) that the relevant date for identifying the legislation applicable to a public contract is the date on which the contracting authority chooses the type of procedure to be followed and decides definitively whether or not it is necessary for a prior call for tenders to be issued for the award of a public contract. It follows, in this case, that it is the decision of 14 August 2003 which is relevant. (9) However, on that date, only Directive 93/37, read in conjunction with Directive 92/50, was applicable.

38. I am, however, of the opinion that this error in identifying the EU legislation applicable in this instance is of only relative importance and has no repercussions for this case. The relevant provisions, namely Article 1(a) of Directive 93/37 and Article 1(a)(iii) of Directive 92/50, were repeated in very similar terms in Directive 2004/18, the latter consisting essentially of a recasting and simplification of the rules in force until then.

39. In those circumstances, which clearly do not entail modification of the legal problem raised in the order for reference or examination of matters of law not discussed in the main proceedings, (10) I am of the opinion that a reformulation of the question as seeking in fact to obtain an interpretation of the provisions of Directive 93/37 is perfectly envisageable.

40. Nor, second, is it possible to uphold the ground of inadmissibility concerning the existence of judicial decisions which have become res judicata, thus depriving the answers from the Court of any useful purpose for the decision to be given in the main proceedings. Evaluation of the consequences of the authority or force of res judicata attaching to the decisions mentioned by the referring court is right at the core of the problem raised in the second question. Even if it is assumed that, by its argument, Pizzarotti seeks in reality also to challenge the relevance of the questions submitted, it need only be pointed out that, in proceedings before them, it is, in principle, a matter for the national courts alone to assess the relevance of the questions which they refer to the Court. The Court will proceed otherwise only where it is ‘quite obvious’ that the interpretation of EU law that is sought bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose, where the problem is hypothetical, or where the Court does not have before it the factual or legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted to it. (11) That does not seem to me to be the case here.

41. In those circumstances, I consider that the request for a preliminary ruling must be considered admissible.

B – The first question: the existence of a public works contract within the meaning of Directive 93/37

1. Summary of the issues

42. By its first question, the referring court seeks clarification as to the legal classification, having regard to the EU legislation on public contracts, of a contract described by the referring court as a ‘contract to be concluded for the lease of something in the future, even in the form suggested most recently of an undertaking to let’.

43. It is necessary, more specifically, to determine whether the proposal sent by the Comune di Bari to Pizzarotti, following removal of the public financing initially envisaged (see points 14 and 15 of the present Opinion), must be seen as calling for the conclusion of a lease transaction falling outside the scope of EU legislation on public contracts or whether, on the contrary, it is such as to bind the Comune di Bari to award a public works contract, and therefore to require the commencement of a new procedure.

44. In essence, there are two conflicting views.

45. Pizzarotti and the Italian Government, supported in certain respects by the German Government, contend that the contract envisaged in the main proceedings does not meet the criteria for a works contract, as set out in the applicable rules and clarified by the Court. That contract falls, in their view, within the exemption provided for in Article 1(a)(iii) of Directive 92/50 and Article 16(a) of Directive 2004/18.

46. They submit, firstly, that the main proceedings are not concerned with the carrying out of works but with the lease of real estate. That is clear, in particular, from the market investigation notice and the decision of the Comune di Bari of 18 December 2003 and also from the inherent characteristics of the contract, which are typical of a lease within the meaning of Article 1571 of the Italian Civil Code and are clearly distinct from those at issue in the case giving rise to the KölnMesse judgment.

47. They contend, secondly, that in the main proceedings the Comune di Bari is not required to give any financial consideration in return for a supply of construction works reflecting its direct economic interest, which means that the contract is not of a pecuniary nature.

48. Pizzarotti and the Italian Government maintain, thirdly, that the Comune di Bari has no power to compel Pizzarotti, by judicial means, to execute the works.

49. They claim, fourthly, that the Comune di Bari did not attach to the document prepared by the Commissione di manutenzione of the Corte d’appello di Bari any technical specifications, within the meaning of paragraph 1 of Annex III to Directive 93/97 or paragraph 1(a) of Annex VI to Directive 2004/18, nor any contract documents within the meaning of Article 10 of Directive 93/37 or Article 23 of Directive 2004/18, which confirms that its intention was not to enter into a public works contract but rather to have market investigation carried out, on a non-binding basis, in order to bring together private initiatives which it intended to evaluate entirely independently and without any obligation to take a decision. Pizzarotti and the Italian Government add that, in any event, the contract envisaged in the main proceedings is characterised by the absence of precise technical specifications concerning the type of works to be carried out like the specifications in KölnMesse.

50. The Comune di Bari and the Commission, for their part, consider that the contract envisaged in the main proceedings constitutes a public works contract, within the meaning of Article 1(a) of Directive 93/97, which should have been awarded in compliance with the rules concerning procedure and transparency laid down in that directive.

51. It must be pointed out that the arguments put forward by the parties to the main proceedings and by the other parties to the present procedure relate, essentially, to the question whether the conditions referred to and clarified by the Court, in particular in KölnMesse, for it to be concluded that there is a public works contract within the meaning of the rules of EU law are fulfilled in the main proceedings.

52. However, I would observe that KölnMesse related to an issue of the legal classification of the transaction at issue that is different from the issue raised in the first question in the present order for reference. In that case, the Court was called upon to determine whether the ‘lease’ aspect of the contract between the City of Cologne and Grundstücksgesellschaft Köln Messe 8-11 GbR prevailed over the objective of building works. The exemption contained in Article 1(a)(iii) of Directive 92/50 and Article 16(a) of Directive 2004/18 was certainly not at issue.

53. In the main proceedings, having regard to the wording used by the referring court, the primary question is whether transactions concerning works yet to be completed can come within the exception to the application of the public contract rules that is laid down in those provisions. This implies that the referring court takes as a given that the contract envisaged concerned the public procurement of services and was liable, by reason of its specific characteristics, not to be caught by the rules on public procurement.

54. I will therefore initially set out the reasons why it is appropriate, in my view, to take the view that the exception at issue cannot in any event cover works which have not yet been started.

55. Since it could be held that it is appropriate, even beyond the scope of the question raised by the referring court, also to give a decision on the question whether the conditions are fulfilled, in the present case, for taking the view that a 'public works contract' exists rather than a public services contract, I will indicate the manner in which, in my view, it is appropriate, following on from the guidance laid down in KölnMesse, to approach the draft contract at issue in the main proceedings.

2. The provisions of Article 1(a)(iii) of Directive 92/50 necessarily refer to transactions relating to existing immovable property

56. I consider it appropriate to refer to a key factor which must be taken into account in determining whether or not a transaction falls within the scope of the directives coordinating procedures for the award of public contracts: the EU rules on public contracts pursue the primary objective of eliminating restrictions on fundamental freedoms and promoting effective competition. (12)

57. That aim is undermined where a contracting authority entrusts an undertaking with execution of works or services without having first followed the procedures for the award of contracts that are laid down by the rules of EU law, irrespective of the reasons and context for the performance of the works or services or the purpose to which they are to be put. (13)

58. The effective pursuit of that aim necessarily implies that a broad construction must be adopted for the purpose of classifying a given transaction as a works contract and, at the same time, that exceptions must for their part be viewed restrictively.

59. That is particularly so in the case of the exemptions specific to certain public service contracts laid down in Article 1(a) of Directive 92/50 (which are, essentially, repeated by Article 16 of Directive 2004/18). (14) As indicated in recital 24 in the preamble to Directive 2004/18, it is the 'particular characteristics' of certain contracts which make the application of public procurement rules inappropriate.

60. As regards the exemption concerning the acquisition or rental of immovable property, (15) taken in the broad sense, it cannot in my view refer to anything other than existing property. Open competition resulting from the application of the rules on public procurement has indeed little meaning where it concerns the letting or sale of a particular existing property which, because of its uniqueness, does not lend itself to comparison with other properties. Moreover, it is apparent from certain travaux préparatoires that the exemption of contracts for the leasing or acquisition of immovable property was originally explained by the local and non-cross-border nature of such contracts. (16) On the other hand, in so far as the activities in question involve the future construction of buildings and, therefore, the execution of works, the public tendering and transparency required by those rules certainly do not appear inappropriate and those rules fall to be applied. Furthermore, the reference made in the provisions in question to 'other immovable property' must, in my view, be understood as referring to property of a kind other than land and buildings and not to property yet to be built.

61. It follows that, without there being any need to give a precise decision as to the stage at which immovable property comes into existence, the exception concerning the purchase or leasing of 'land, existing buildings, or other immovable property' cannot in any circumstances refer to property of which the construction has not yet started, as seems to be the case in the main proceedings. Where a public authority opts, when setting up certain services, for a formula of purchase or leasing of a building yet to be completed, it is necessary to subject the transaction to the procedures for the award of contracts laid down in the relevant regulations.

3. The conditions for the existence of a works contract are in any event fulfilled in circumstances such as those of the main proceedings

62. As the Court has consistently reiterated, classification as a public works contract is a matter of EU law and must be independent of the classification arrived at on the basis of national law. (17) Likewise, any classification of a contract given by the contracting parties is not decisive so far as concerns deciding whether an agreement or a transaction falls within the scope of a procurement directive. (18)

63. In the main proceedings, the formal classification of the contract at issue as a 'lease' is not therefore a decisive factor. Similarly, the fact that the envisaged contract displays, as contended by Pizzarotti and the Italian Government, certain characteristics of a lease, within the meaning of Article 1571 of the Italian Civil Code, of a property complex is entirely irrelevant.

64. In this context, a clarification is called for. It is not a question of contesting that the national public authorities have freedom in choosing the contractual procedure they consider appropriate for the execution of works or services or even of calling into question the legality of recourse to certain types of contracts; rather, it is a question of avoiding the risks of circumvention of the rules on public contracts by recourse to certain contractual terms. In other words, the EU rules on public contracts do not prejudge the legality of recourse to a lease, with a view to the construction of a building, provided that, prior to its conclusion, the rules on publicity and public tendering provided for by those rules have been complied with.

65. Moreover, the scope of the directive must be determined by reference only to the objective conditions expressly defined by the directives adopted in this area.

66. Clearly, that means that the actual or supposed aims that the public authorities seek to pursue are irrelevant in determining whether a contract must be classified as a works contract. Account cannot therefore be taken of the fact, assuming that it is recognised, that the Comune di Bari, from the outset, only intended to provide a single headquarters for the administration of justice in Bari, without this necessarily involving the execution of works.

67. The Court has thus emphasised that the definition of 'public works contract' contained in Article 1(a) of Directive 93/37 includes all transactions in which a contract for pecuniary interest is concluded between a contracting authority and a contractor and has as its object the execution by the latter of a 'work' within the meaning of Article 1(c) of the directive. The essential criterion in that respect is that the work should be executed in accordance with the requirements specified by the contracting authority, the means of that execution being immaterial.(19) In order for that to be possible, the contracting authority must have taken measures to define the characteristics of the work or, at the very least, have had a decisive influence on its design. (20)

68. Finally, according to case-law, where a contract contains elements relating to a public works contract and also elements relating to another type of public contract, it is the main purpose of the contract which determines the EU rules applicable. (21)

69. In this case, the information in the file prompts me to take the view that the transaction at issue in the main proceedings displays all the characteristics of a works contract, the latter certainly pursuing as its main object the execution in return for payment of a work meeting requirements specified by the contracting authority.

70. In the first place, that information demonstrates that the aim of the whole procedure at issue here, which commenced with publication of a market investigation notice on 14 August 2003, consisted in the construction, in accordance with the wishes expressed by the competent public authorities, of new premises which were intended to be used as a single headquarters for the courts in Bari.

71. That is apparent, first of all, from the public procurement notice ('Ricerca di mercato') of 14 August 2003, which states in particular that 'the tenderer, by drawing up its tender, undertakes to commence the construction works by 31 December this year'.

72. Next, it is clear from the document annexed to that market investigation notice, drawn up by the Corte d'appello di Bari and approved by the Commissione di manutenzione (document entitled 'Quadro esigenziale' (framework of requirements)), and the relevance of which for the purposes of examining the planned contract is not in question, (22) that the competent public authorities specified a number of structural, functional and organisational requirements to be met by the project for a single judicial centre, having regard to the applicable rules and to a set of statistical data relating to judicial activities in Bari. Those requirements, which are set out on several dozen pages, seem to me to far exceed the usual requirements of a tenant in relation to newly-constructed premises of a certain size. (23)

73. Finally, resolution No 1045/2003 of the municipal council of 18 December 2003, recording selection of the tender submitted by Pizzarotti, expressly refers to the 'construction of a single headquarters' for the courts.

74. More generally, I am of the opinion that, for the purposes of Directives 93/37 and 2004/18, the immediate — and therefore main — object of a contract for buildings whose construction has not yet begun cannot, in principle and on the basis of the guidance in KölnMesse, be seen as being the lease of a property, and that is so regardless of the contractual terms chosen under national law. The main purpose of such a contract can, logically, only be the construction of those buildings, which are subsequently required to be handed over to the contracting authority under the terms of a contractual relationship described as a 'lease'. (24)

75. Reverting to the main proceedings, it is clear that Pizzarotti could not in any case fulfil the obligation, envisaged in the draft undertaking to let, to make the specific buildings available in the specified area without first undertaking the construction work.

76. The numerous technical specifications contained in the reference documents show that the contracting authority took measures to determine the characteristics of the buildings or, at the very least, to exercise a decisive influence on their design. Those facts, together with the copious litigation deriving from the failure to conclude the contract envisaged in the main proceedings, clearly show, in my view, that Pizzarotti would not have been prepared to carry out the works in question in the absence of requirements specifically formulated by the Comune di Bari and the acceptance, by the latter, of the proposal for execution submitted in response to the public 'market investigation' notice.

77. In the second place, it seems fairly clear to me that, although it is to be distinguished on this point from the KölnMesse case, (25) the contract at issue in the main proceedings was concluded for a pecuniary interest.

78. Admittedly, it is true that the payment in the form of an annual rent which the Comune di Bari is supposed to pay over the 18 years of the contractual term falls far short of covering the costs of construction of the buildings.

79. That finding cannot, however, be relied on to negate the pecuniary nature of the contract in question.

80. In fact, in order to distinguish a public service contract from a public works contract (26) — and in contrast to what Pizzarotti and the Italian and German Governments appear to suggest (27) — no decisive importance can be attached to the amount of the financial consideration payable for the construction work. As the Court has held, the decisive element for the purposes of the classification of a public contract is the main object of that contract, not the amount paid to the contractor or the arrangements for payment. (28) The fact that payment of the annual rent for a period of 18 years, provided for in the envisaged contract, does not fully cover the costs of construction of the buildings cannot in any case change the fact that that there is a pecuniary interest underlying the contract and, therefore, rule out the existence of a public works contract. In that regard, the actual achievement of a profit by an economic operator cannot constitute a necessary precondition for classification of a contract as a public works contract. (29)

81. The condition linked to the existence of something that is of 'direct economic benefit to the contracting authority' does not necessarily mean that the latter should become the owner of the work and can be satisfied by a lease making the work available to the public authority concerned. (30)

82. In view of the foregoing considerations, I propose that the first question be answered to the effect that a lease for a work to be completed in the future, displaying the characteristics of the contract at issue in the main proceedings, must be classified as a public works contract within the meaning of Article 1(a) of Directive 93/37.

C – The second question: requirements deriving from the principles of sincere cooperation and of respect for the status of res judicata in a situation presumed to be incompatible with EU law

83. By its second question, the referring court asks whether it can set aside a decision that possibly has become res judicata in the case in question, in so far as it would have allowed a legal situation to arise which is incompatible with EU law regarding the award of public works contracts, and whether it is therefore possible to give effect to a decision having become res judicata which is incompatible with EU law.

84. I must, at the outset, express my puzzlement regarding the exact identification of what, in the eyes of the referring court, is covered by the principle of 'res judicata', as regards both the thema decidendum (matter to be decided) and the ratio decidendi, and is seen as problematic from the standpoint of compliance with EU law.

85. Whilst fully aware that, ultimately, it is the responsibility of the national court alone to determine what in fact constitutes the judicial decision or decisions which would impede the full application of EU law, the need to give an answer that is as useful as possible to the referring court prompts me to make the following observations.

86. In this case, the only res judicata decision which the referring court mentions (31) is its judgment No 4267/2007, and more precisely the ruling in that judgment to the effect that the Comune di Bari, 'in compliance with the principles of reasonableness, good faith and the protection of legitimate expectations, must, lending cohesion to its actions, bring the procedure to a genuinely appropriate conclusion, examining, in the context of the proposals received, the possibility of the works being carried out within the constraints of the amended financial framework'.

87. If, as the Consiglio di Stato observes, that decision is 'open to numerous different possibilities of implementation', it is a priori difficult to understand the reasons why the implementation of that judgment should necessarily be considered contrary to EU law and, more specifically, to the application of the relevant rules on public works contracts.

88. In line with the views of the Comune di Bari, it appears that the only decision having become res judicata emanating from the Consiglio di Stato in judgment No 4267/2007 relates to the obligation incumbent upon it (and on the Commissario ad acta) to terminate the procedure commenced by the public market-investigation notice. There is no reason automatically to rule out the possibility that that procedure might be concluded, within the meaning of that judgment, by the launch of a new award procedure complying with the EU rules on public contracts.

89. However, it seems that the referring court has, in part at least, (32) associated itself with the interpretation advocated by Pizzarotti to the effect that that judgment and the judicial decisions subsequent to it should be interpreted as requiring the envisaged 'lease' with Pizzarotti to be entered into, and that is liable to engender a situation contrary to EU law. It would also seem that a degree of authority has been lent to the implementing decisions taken by the Commissario ad acta (see Decision No 8420/2010). However, according to my understanding of the Italian Code of Administrative Procedure, the court has jurisdiction over all matters relating to proper compliance, including those deriving from measures adopted by the Commissario ad acta, the latter acting as an auxiliary officer of the court.

90. Furthermore, if, as seems to follow from the provisions of the Code of Administrative Procedure, (33) as interpreted by the referring court, that court is empowered to amend the operative part of judgment No 4267/2007, giving rise to what it describes as 'progressively formed res judicata', I find it difficult to conclude that the principle that decisions having become res judicata are untouchable is called into question. So long as the judicial authority is empowered to clarify or revisit a decision taken earlier, that possibility must be available under the same conditions with a view to ensuring the full application of EU law.

91. In such a situation, it is ultimately necessary for the national court, in implementing judicial decisions which lend themselves to several interpretations, to give preference to the one ensuring that the administrative authorities act in accordance with EU law.

92. On the other hand, if the referring court feels it necessary to conclude that the proper application of EU law on public works contracts necessarily conflicts with its decision that has become res judicata in its judgment No 4267/2007 or subsequent decisions, (34) which it alone is empowered to review, the arrangements for giving effect to res judicata fall within the procedural autonomy of the Member States, subject to compliance with the principles of equivalence and effectiveness.

93. In that regard, the Court has repeatedly referred to the importance attaching to the principle of res judicata, both in the legal order of the European Union and in national legal systems. Indeed, in order to ensure both stability of the law and legal relations and the sound administration of justice, it is important that judicial decisions which have become definitive after all rights of appeal have been exhausted or after expiry of the time-limits provided for in that connection can no longer be called into question. (35) Therefore, EU law does not require a national court to leave unapplied domestic rules of procedure rendering a decision res judicata, even if that would make it possible to remedy an infringement of EU law by the decision at issue. (36)

94. In the absence of EU legislation in this area, the rules for giving effect to the principle of res judicata are a matter for the domestic legal order of the Member States by virtue of the principle whereby the Member States enjoy procedural autonomy. However, such procedural rules must not be less favourable than those governing similar domestic situations (principle of equivalence) and must not be framed in such a way as to make it in practice impossible or excessively difficult to exercise the rights conferred by EU law (principle of effectiveness). (37)

95. The apparent disregard of the principle of res judicata that occurred in Lucchini was, (38) as stated by the Court itself, confined to the very particular area of State aid.

96. The Court made it clear in that judgment that since appraisal of the compatibility of aid measures or an aid scheme with the common market falls within the exclusive competence of the Commission acting subject to review by the EU judicature, EU law precludes the application of a provision of national law, such as Article 2909 of the Italian Civil Code, which seeks to lay down the principle of res judicata in so far as the application of that provision prevents the recovery of State aid granted in breach of EU law which has been found to be incompatible with the common market in a decision of the Commission which has become final. (39)

97. The particular features of the Lucchini case were also emphasised in Fallimento Olimpiclub, (40) in which the Court made it clear that that case had concerned a clearly defined situation involving principles governing the division of powers between the Member States and the then Community in the area of State aid, the Commission having exclusive competence to assess the compatibility of a national State aid measure with the common market.

98. As regards the analogy drawn between the obligations — as referred to in particular in Kühne & Heitz (41) — of the administrative authorities by virtue of their duty of sincere cooperation and those incumbent, by virtue of that same duty, upon the national courts, I am far from persuaded by it.

99. Admittedly, observance both of the definitive nature of an administrative decision and of the authority attaching to a judicial decision is based on the need, having regard to the principle of legal certainty, to preserve the stability of legal situations. Also, the main proceedings are concerned with a special situation in which, according to the information provided by it, the Consiglio di Stato could supplement the operative part of one of those decisions which had become definitive and, if appropriate, revisit decisions adopted in pursuance of those decisions by the Commissario ad acta.

100. However, even if that possibility may be regarded as allowing the intangibility of a decision having become res judicata to be tempered somewhat — a matter that has not been clearly established (see point 90 of the present Opinion) — there is an important difference between the possibility of re-examining an administrative decision which has become final and the possibility of going back on a judicial decision which has become res judicata. The obligation incumbent, in certain circumstances, on the administrative authority to revisit an administrative decision which has become final, as determined by the Kühne & Heitz judgment, is based on the premiss that such a re-examination is not liable to cause harm to third parties. That condition does not appear to me to be fulfilled where judicial decisions with the status of res judicata are being reviewed. Moreover, I am of the opinion that that judgment may, in fact, be seen as an application of the principles of effectiveness and equivalence in the light of the possibility, recognised, in domestic law, of reversing, in certain conditions, administrative decisions that have become final.

101. It follows from the foregoing considerations that, where a judicial decision, in some instances by virtue of the effects of subsequent judicial enforcement decisions, has created a situation incompatible with EU law, it is not in principle open to the national court to overturn that decision.

102. Moreover, it is possible to remedy infringements of EU law. In circumstances where the force of res judicata makes it impossible to apply EU law, the possibility remains of an action to redress damage caused to individuals. (42)

103. Consequently, I propose that the second question be answered to the effect that it is for the national court alone to determine the exact terms of a judicial decision which has become res judicata. The arrangements for giving effect to a final judicial decision are a matter for the domestic law of the Member States, subject to compliance with the principles of equivalence and effectiveness. Where the national court is empowered, by virtue of national rules, to add to or indeed replace the terms of the judicial decision, it is incumbent upon that court to exercise its power in order to ensure due implementation of EU law.

IV – Conclusion

104. Having regard to the foregoing considerations, I propose that the Court give the following answers to the questions referred for a preliminary ruling by the Consiglio di Stato:

(1) A lease for a work to be completed in the future, displaying the characteristics of the contract envisaged in the main proceedings, must be classified as a ‘works contract’ within the meaning of Article 1(a) of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts.

(2) It is for the national court alone to determine the exact terms of a judicial decision which has become res judicata. The arrangements for giving effect to a final judicial decision are a matter for the domestic law of the Member States, subject to compliance with the principles of equivalence and effectiveness. Where the national court is empowered, by virtue of national rules, to add to or indeed replace the terms of the judicial decision, it is incumbent upon that court to exercise its power in order to ensure due implementation of EU law.

7 – Pizzarotti refers to two decisions. The first is that of the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Puglia of 18 May 2004, which, deciding an appeal brought by an unsuccessful tenderer, held that the market investigation notice was of a purely exploratory nature, seeking appropriate solutions for the creation of the Bari judicial centre, and, consequently, did not involve any commitment by the municipal administration subsequently to award a works contract. The second is judgment No 4267/2007 of the Consiglio di Stato, which, it is said, required that administration to bring the procedure commenced to a satisfactory conclusion by entering into an off-plan lease with Pizzarotti.

10 – In that regard, the Court has consistently noted that it has a duty to interpret all provisions of EU law which national courts need to rely on in order to decide the actions pending before them, even if those provisions are not expressly indicated in the questions referred to the Court by those courts (see, in particular, Fuß, C-243/09, EU:C:2010:609, paragraph 39, and Worten, C-342/12, EU:C:2013:355, paragraph 30).

25 – In that case, reference was made by the German Government to the fact that the total amount to be paid to Grundstücksgesellschaft Köln Messe 8-11 GbR by way of rent, which ultimately amounted to around EUR 600 million, was well in excess of the cost of construction of the buildings, which amounted to around EUR 235 million.

26 – This contrasts with the distinction between a public service contract and a public supply contract (see, in particular, Article 2 of Directive 92/50 and Article 1(2)(d), second subparagraph, of Directive 2004/18).

27 – They refer, in particular, to the Opinion of Advocate General Trstenjak in KölnMesse (EU:C:2009:340, point 105), who suggested that there should also be a comparison of the respective costs.

34 – The Consiglio di Stato in fact gives the impression that it is its implementing decisions (of 15 April and 3 December 2010), relating to the activities of the Commissario ad acta, which led to a situation potentially conflicting with EU law, in so far as they ordered the adoption of the measures necessary for conclusion of a lease for a future development which that undertaking had submitted to the administration as purporting to be the last proposal after the economic framework was completely changed in 2004.

– the Austrian Government, by M. Fruhmann, acting as Agent,

– the European Commission, by L. Pignataro-Nolin and A. Tokár, acting as Agents, having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to proceed to judgment without an Opinion,

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Articles 1, 2a, 2c and 2f of Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1992 L 76, p. 14), as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007 (OJ 2007 L 335, p. 31) (‘Directive 92/13’).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Idrodinamica Spurgo Velox srl (‘Idrodinamica’) and four other applicants, on the one hand, and Acquedotto Pugliese SpA (‘Acquedotto Pugliese’), the contracting authority, on the other, concerning the lawfulness of the procedure for the award of a contract by that authority to the ad hoc tendering consortium led by the undertaking Giovanni XXIII Soc. coop. arl (‘Cooperativa Giovanni XXIII’).

EU law

3 The contract at issue in the main proceedings, relating to the water sector, is governed by Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1), commonly referred to as the ‘sectoral directive’.

4 The third, fifth and sixth recitals in the preamble to Directive 92/13 state:

‘… the absence of effective remedies or the inadequacy of existing remedies could deter Community undertakings from submitting tenders; … therefore, the Member States must remedy this situation;

… the opening-up of procurement in the sectors concerned to Community competition implies that provisions must be adopted to ensure that appropriate review procedures are made available to suppliers or contractors in the event of infringement of the relevant Community law or national rules implementing that law;

… it is necessary to provide for a substantial increase in the guarantees of transparency and non-discrimination and … for it to have tangible effects, effective and rapid remedies must be available.’

5 Paragraphs 1 and 3 of Article 1 of that directive, which is entitled ‘Scope and availability of review procedures’, provides:

‘1. This Directive applies to contracts referred to in Directive [2004/17] …

Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive [2004/17], decisions taken by contracting entities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of procurement or national rules transposing that law.

3. Member States shall ensure that the review procedures are available, under detailed rules which the Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.'

6 Article 2(1) of Directive 92/13 provides:

'The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers:

(a) to take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedure, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further injury to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting entity;

and

(b) to set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the notice of contract, the periodic indicative notice, the notice on the existence of a system of qualification, the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure in question;

or

(c) to take, at the earliest opportunity, if possible by way of interlocutory procedures and if necessary by a final procedure on the substance, measures other than those provided for in points (a) and (b) with the aim of correcting any identified infringement and preventing injury to the interests concerned; in particular, making an order for the payment of a particular sum, in cases where the infringement has not been corrected or prevented.

Member States may take this choice either for all contracting entities or for categories of entities defined on the basis of objective criteria, in any event preserving the effectiveness of the measures laid down in order to prevent injury being caused to the interests concerned;

(d) and, in both the above cases, to award damages to persons injured by the infringement. Where damages are claimed on the grounds that a decision has been taken unlawfully, Member States may, where their system of internal law so requires and provides bodies having the necessary powers for that purpose, provide that the contested decision must first be set aside or declared illegal.'

7 Under the last subparagraph of Article 2a(2) of Directive 92/13:

'The communication of the award decision to each tenderer and candidate concerned shall be accompanied by the following:

– a summary of the relevant reasons as set out in Article 49(2) of Directive [2004/17], and,

– a precise statement of the exact standstill period applicable pursuant to the provisions of national law transposing this paragraph.'

8 Paragraphs 1 and 2 of Article 49 of Directive 2004/17, which is entitled 'Information to applicants for qualification, candidates and tenderers', provides:

'1. Contracting entities shall as soon as possible inform the economic operators involved of decisions reached concerning the conclusion of a framework agreement, the award of the contract, or admission to a dynamic purchasing system, including the grounds for any decision not to conclude a framework agreement or award a contract for which there has been a call for competition or to recommence the procedure, or not to implement a dynamic purchasing system; this information shall be provided in writing if the contracting entities are requested to do so.

2. On request from the party concerned, contracting entities shall, as soon as possible, inform:

– any unsuccessful candidate of the reasons for the rejection of his application,

– any unsuccessful tenderer of the reasons for the rejection of his tender, including, for the cases referred to in Article 34(4) and (5), the reasons for their decision of non-equivalence or their decision that the works, supplies or services do not meet the performance or functional requirements,

– any tenderer who has made an admissible tender of the characteristics and relative advantages of the tender selected, as well as the name of the successful tenderer or the parties to the framework agreement.

The time taken to do so may under no circumstances exceed 15 days from receipt of the written enquiry.

However, contracting entities may decide that certain information on the contract award or the conclusion of the framework agreement or on admission to a dynamic purchasing system, referred to in the paragraph 1, is to be withheld where release of such information would impede law enforcement or otherwise be contrary to the public interest or would prejudice the legitimate commercial interests of a particular economic operator, public or private, including the interests of the economic operator to whom the contract has been awarded, or might prejudice fair competition between economic operators.'

9 Legislative Decree No 163/2006 of 12 April 2006 (Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 100 of 2 May 2006) codifies the rules on public procurement.

10 Article 11 of that decree, which is entitled 'Phases of the procedures for the award of public contracts', provides:

'1. The procedures for the award of public contracts shall be carried out in compliance with the programming measures of the contracting entities, where they are provided for by this Code or by the legislation in force.

4. The award procedures shall select the best tender, according to one of the criteria provided for in this Code. On conclusion of the procedure, the contract is to be provisionally awarded to the "best" tenderer.

5. Once the provisional award within the meaning of Article 12(1) has been confirmed, the final award shall be made by the contracting entity.

8. The final award shall take effect once it has been established that the requirements have been satisfied.

9. Once the final award has taken effect and subject to the exercise of any powers of self-regulation in the cases provided for by the law [that is to say, the administration's power to withdraw, suspend or modify its own measures], the public contract or concession contract must be concluded within 60 days, unless a different deadline is laid down in the invitation to tender or agreed with the contracting authority. …

10. The contract shall not, in any event, be concluded within 35 days of the dispatch of the last communication of the final award within the meaning of Article 79.

11 The relevant provisions of Article 79 of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 are summarised by the referring court as follows:

– Under paragraph 5, the contracting authority is automatically to inform all competitors admitted to the procedure, within a period of no more than five days, of the final award of the contract and of the conclusion of the contract with the successful contractor.

– Under paragraph 5a, the contract award decision and the statement of the reasons for it, setting out at least the characteristics and advantages of the selected tender and the name of the successful undertaking, must be appended to the communication, it being also possible for the contracting authority to satisfy that requirement by sending the minutes of the public opening of the tender.

– Under paragraph 5c, competitors are to be allowed, without needing to submit a written request, immediate access to the documentation relating to the tendering procedure, by consulting it and taking copies, within 10 days of the dispatch of the communication of the result of the tender, subject to the exercise by the authorities of the power to deny or delay access in those cases for which the law provides.

12 Article 120 of Legislative Decree No 104/2010 of 2 July 2010 establishing the Code of Administrative Procedure (Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 156 of 7 July 2010) provides that actions challenging the documents in procedures for the award of public contracts are to be brought within the shorter period of 30 days, as from receipt of the communication referred to in Article 79 of Legislative Decree No 163/2006.

13 Article 43 of Legislative Decree No 104/2010 provides that decisions of the contracting entity adopted after a candidate has submitted an application for review of the final award of the contract may be contested, in the context of that procedure, by bringing an ‘action adducing additional grounds’ within the deadline of 30 days laid down in Article 120 of that decree.

14 According to settled case-law, the Italian administrative courts consider that the communication of the award decision, provided for under Article 79(5) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006, is the sufficient condition for full knowledge of the harmful decision and is appropriate for triggering the time-limit, whether or not the undertaking concerned is entirely or to some extent unfamiliar with the internal procedural documents. That communication requires the undertaking concerned to apply immediately for a review of the tender within 30 days, without prejudice to the introduction of additional grounds concerning any irregularities which may emerge subsequently. The case-law has arrived at the same position as regards circumstances in which the contracting authority makes a definitive decision that is conditional, in terms of its effectiveness, on actively establishing that the undertaking to which the contract has been awarded satisfies the general and special conditions of the notice of contract, bearing in mind that additional grounds may be adduced within 30 days in that case also.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

15 Acquedotto Pugliese is a public undertaking wholly controlled by the Regiona Puglia (Puglia Region), its sole shareholder. It manages the integrated water and sewerage system for Puglia and for a number of municipalities in neighbouring regions. Pursuant to Annex VI-C to Legislative Decree No 163/2006, Acquedotto Pugliese is a contracting authority in the sector of the production, transport and distribution of drinking water, required to comply with the domestic legislation transposing into Italian law Directive 2004/17.

16 By notice published in the Official Journal of the European Union on 15 March 2011, Acquedotto Pugliese launched an open tendering procedure for the award of a four-year contract for cleaning and disinfecting the sewerage system, for ordinary and extraordinary maintenance work on the water and sewerage systems and for the construction of water connections and pipe infrastructure, in dwellings in the district in question, with a basic contract value of EUR 17 615 739.07, to be awarded to the tenderer with the lowest price.

17 On conclusion of the public sittings of 17 and 30 May 2011, the preferred tenderer and first on the list was deemed to be the ad hoc tendering consortium led by Cooperativa Giovanni XXIII. Second on the list was the ad hoc tendering consortium led by Tundo srl ('Tundo') and third on the list was the ad hoc tendering consortium led by Idrodinamica. Consequently, by decision of 7 June 2011, the contracting authority decided to make a definitive award of the contract to the ad hoc tendering consortium led by Cooperativa Giovanni XXIII. That decision was communicated on 6 July 2011.

18 In that decision, it was also provided that, pending conclusion of the contract, early performance of the contract was permitted, that the definitive award of the contract would not take effect until it had been positively established that each of the member undertakings of the consortium to which the contract had been awarded and of the consortium awarded second place on the list satisfied the general and special requirements, and that all tenderers would be notified of the award of the contract.

19 Pending conclusion of the contract, the consortium to which the contract had been awarded, set up meantime by notarial act of 4 October 2011, informed the contracting authority by letter of 28 February 2012 that one of the associate undertakings had withdrawn from the consortium, but that it nevertheless intended to take on the contract and, even with its reduced membership (the leading undertaking and two associates), it was able to satisfy the technical and economic requirements under the notice of tender.

20 By decision of 28 March 2012, Acquedotto Pugliese authorised the withdrawal of the associate undertaking in question. The contract was concluded on 17 April 2012 with the ad hoc tendering consortium led by Cooperativa Giovanni XXIII in its new reduced composition.

21 Idrodinamica brought an action, notified on 17 May 2012, challenging the tender documentation of the contract award procedure in question and requesting specifically: (i) the annulment of the decision of 28 March 2012 by which Acquedotto Pugliese authorised the change in composition of the consortium to which the contract had been awarded; (ii) the annulment of the contract concluded on 17 April 2012; and (iii) the annulment of the decision of 7 June 2011 by which the contract was definitively awarded. Idrodinamica maintains that that procedure was unlawful on the ground that the contracting authority authorised the change in composition of the ad hoc consortium to which the contract had been awarded and, moreover, that that authority should have excluded the ad hoc tendering consortium led by Tundo srl, placed second on the list, in so far as the legal representative of one of the member undertakings of that consortium falsely declared that he had never been convicted of a criminal offence.

22 The referring court observes that, in accordance with national rules and case-law, the action brought by Idrodinamica should be declared inadmissible, since it was initiated well after the 30-day time-limit starting from the communication that the contract at issue in the main proceedings had been definitively awarded. However, the Court held in paragraph 40 of the judgment in Case C-406/08 Uniplex (UK) EU:C:2010:45, that the objective of rapidity pursued by legislation relating to review procedures to the award of public contracts does not permit Member States to disregard the principle of effective judicial protection, under which the detailed methods for the application of national limitation periods must not render impossible or excessively difficult the exercise of any rights which the person concerned derives from Union law.

23 The referring court asks whether the national legislation in question is compatible with that principle of effective judicial protection, in so far as the information accompanying the communication of the definitive decision awarding the contract is not always sufficient to provide the unsuccessful candidates and tenderers with knowledge of the documentation and facts that are material to the decision on whether to apply for a review, inter alia, where an alleged breach of procedural rules occurs after the definitive decision awarding the contract has been adopted.

24 Moreover, the procedural rule which requires the persons concerned to apply for a review of the decision awarding the contract within the deadline of 30 days, without prejudice to the possibility of introducing additional grounds on the basis of acts or facts which occur subsequently, appears to be incompatible with the principle of effective judicial protection, since the applicant must settle the fees of counsel and other experts appointed by the parties, and the fee in connection with the costs of the proceedings, in relation both to the application initiating proceedings and to the introduction of new grounds.

25 The referring court asks, therefore, whether on a proper construction of the relevant provisions of Union law the time allowed for submitting an application for review laid down by national legislation runs from the date on which the person concerned became aware — or, though the exercise of ordinary diligence, ought to have become aware — of the existence of an irregularity, rather than from the date of communication of the definitive decision awarding the contract.

26 In the light of those considerations, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Puglia (Regional Administrative Court, Puglia) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Must Articles 1, 2a, 2c and 2f of Directive [92/13] be interpreted as meaning that time for the purposes of bringing proceedings for a declaration that there has been an infringement of the rules governing the award of public procurements contracts runs from the date on which the applicant became aware — or, through the exercise of ordinary diligence, ought to have become aware — of the existence of that infringement?

(2) Do Articles 1, 2a, 2c and 2f of Directive [92/13] preclude provisions of national procedural law, or interpretative practices, such as those described in the main proceedings, which allow the court to declare inadmissible an action for a declaration that there has been an infringement of the rules governing the award of public contracts, where, as a result of the conduct of the contracting authority, the applicant became aware of the infringement after the formal communication of the essential elements of the decision definitively awarding the contract?’

Consideration of the questions referred

Admissibility

27 Cooperativa Giovanni XXIII and the Italian Government express concerns relating to the admissibility of the questions referred on the ground, inter alia, that Idrodinamica’s complaints put forward in the main proceedings are directed against the measure taken by the contracting authority authorising the change in composition of the consortium to which the contract had been awarded and that no complaint has been raised against the decision definitively awarding the contract.

28 Consequently, they submit that the possible annulment of that measure would merely result in the invalidity of the contract concluded with the consortium — in its reduced composition — to which the contract had been awarded, without its losing its status of successful tenderer. The questions referred by the referring court therefore have no direct link with the purpose of the case before it.

29 It should be borne in mind that, according to settled case-law, questions on the interpretation of EU law referred by a national court in the factual and legislative context which that court is responsible for defining and the accuracy of which is not a matter for the Court to determine enjoy a presumption of relevance. The Court may refuse to rule on a question referred for a preliminary ruling from a national court only where it is quite obvious that the interpretation of EU law that is sought bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose, where the problem is hypothetical, or where the Court does not have before it the factual or legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted to it (Case C-279/12 Fish Legal and Shirley EU:C:2013:853, paragraph 30 and the case-law cited).

30 That is not the case here and the concerns expressed by Cooperativa Giovanni XXIII and the Italian Government as to the admissibility of the questions are unfounded. The referring court seeks an interpretation of the relevant provisions of Directive 92/13 in order to assess whether Idrodinamica’s application for review is admissible. As is apparent from the file before the Court, that application concerns, in essence, first, the annulment of the decision of the contracting authority by which it authorised the change in composition of the consortium to which the contract had been awarded and, second, the fact that that authority failed to exclude from the tender procedure a competing undertaking placed ahead of Idrodinamica on the list.

31 It must be found that, if the first complaint put forward by Idrodinamica in the context of the case before the referring court alleging, in essence, that the contracting authority unlawfully authorised the reduction in the number of undertakings belonging to the ad hoc tendering consortium, were upheld, the decision definitively awarding the contract could be annulled. If the second complaint, that the contracting authority should have excluded the ad hoc tendering consortium Tundo srl, placed second on the list, because the legal representative of one of the member undertakings of that consortium produced a false declaration, were also upheld, the chances of Idrodinamica's being awarded the contract in issue in the main proceedings would be significantly increased. Accordingly, Idrodinamica may rightly be considered to be a person 'having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract and who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement' within the meaning of Article 1(3) of Directive 92/13.

32 Consequently, the questions referred are admissible.

Substance

33 By its questions, which it is appropriate to examine together, the referring court asks, in essence, whether the time allowed for bringing an action for the annulment of the award decision starts to run again where the contracting authority adopts, after the expiry of that period, a decision which may affect the lawfulness of the award decision in question. It also asks whether, in the same situation, a tenderer may bring an action for the annulment of the award decision where it became aware of circumstances underlying that decision which may affect the lawfulness of the contract award procedure in question.

34 The amendment to Directive 92/13 by Directive 2007/66 and Article 49 of Directive 2004/17 has given rise to the requirement that an unsuccessful tenderer be informed of the outcome of the tender award procedure and the reasons therefor. On the basis of Article 49(2) of Directive 2004/17, the tenderer may request that it be provided with detailed information.

35 The principle of legal certainty requires that information thus obtained, and information that could have been obtained, can no longer serve as a basis for an action brought by the tenderer after the expiry of the period of time laid down by national law.

36 However, in the dispute in the main proceedings, the decision authorising the change in composition of the consortium to which the contract had been awarded concerns events which happened after the contract had been awarded and after the expiry of the 30-day period for bringing an action laid down by national law. It was not therefore possible to be aware of those events on the basis of either the communication of the award decision and the reasons underlying that decision, or the reply given to a potential request for detailed information submitted by the tenderer to the contracting authority.

37 In accordance with the case-law of the Court, effective procedures for review of infringements of the provisions applicable in the field of public procurement can be realised only if the periods laid down for bringing such proceedings start to run only from the date on which the claimant knew, or ought to have known, of the alleged infringement of those provisions (see, to that effect, Uniplex (UK) EU:C:2010:45, paragraph 32 and the case-law cited).

38 In addition, it is apparent from the decision making the reference that the decision authorising the change in composition of the consortium to which the contract had been awarded, which may affect the lawfulness of the decision awarding the contract, was adopted before the contract had been concluded between the contracting authority and that consortium. In such circumstances, it cannot be found that the principle of legal certainty precludes, as regards an action brought for the annulment of the award decision, the 30-day period from starting to run again.

39 In that regard, it must be held that the decision authorising the change in composition of the consortium to which the contract had been awarded necessitates an amendment of the award decision which may be regarded as substantial if, in the light of the particular features of the tender award procedure in question, it alters one of the essential elements that were decisive in the adoption of the award decision. In that situation, all relevant measures provided for by national law would have to be taken to remedy that irregularity, which might extend to a new award procedure (see, by analogy, Case C-91/08 Wall EU:C:2010:182, paragraphs 38, 39, 42 and 43).

40 Moreover, the Court points out that the possibility, such as that provided for in Article 43 of Legislative Decree No 104/2010, of adducing 'new grounds' in the context of an initial action against the award decision brought within the time-limit is not always a viable alternative of effective judicial protection. In a situation such as that in the main proceedings, the tenderers would be required to challenge in abstracto the decision awarding the contract, without knowing, at that stage, the grounds justifying that action.

41 Consequently, the 30-day period for bringing an action against the award decision laid down by national legislation must start to run again so as to permit the examination of the lawfulness of the contract authority's decision authorising the change in the composition of the consortium to which the contract had been awarded, which may affect the lawfulness of the decision awarding the contract. That period must start to run from the date on which the tenderer receives communication of the decision authorising the change in composition of the consortium or the date on which it became aware of that decision.

42 So far as concerns Idrodinamica's complaint alleging that the consortium placed second on the list should have been excluded because the legal representative of one of the member undertakings of that consortium produced a false declaration, it must be found that that alleged irregularity must have happened before the decision awarding the contract was adopted.

43 In those circumstances, the Court finds that the tenderer, on the basis of the information communicated to it pursuant to Article 2a of Directive 92/13 and Article 49 of Directive 2004/17, and on the basis of the information it could have obtained through the exercise of ordinary diligence, was in a position to submit an application for review of the possible infringements of Union law on public procurement and that, consequently, there is no reason for the period for bringing an action laid down by national legislation to start to run again.

44 The Court points out that, in the situation in the main proceedings, in the event of the annulment of the decision awarding the contract to the consortium placed first on the list adopted during the tender award procedure, a new action for the annulment of the new decision awarding the contract to another tenderer may be brought within the time-limit laid down by national legislation.

45 Consequently, it must be held that, pursuant to the principle of legal certainty, in the event of irregularities allegedly committed before the decision awarding the contract was adopted, a tenderer may bring an action for the annulment of the award decision only within the specific time-limit laid down in that regard by national law, unless such a right of action is explicitly provided for by national law in accordance with Union law.

46 On the other hand, a tenderer may bring an action for damages within the general limitation period provided for in that regard by national law.

47 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the questions referred is that Article 1(1) and (3) and the last subparagraph of Article 2a(2) of Directive 92/13 must be interpreted as meaning that the time allowed for bringing an action for the annulment of the decision awarding a contract starts to run again where the contracting authority adopts a new decision, after the award decision has been adopted but before that contract is signed, which may affect the lawfulness of that award decision. That period starts to run from the communication of the earlier decision to the tenderers or, in the absence thereof, from when they became aware of that decision.

48 When a tenderer becomes aware, after the expiry of the period for bringing an action laid down by national legislation, of an irregularity allegedly committed before the award decision was adopted, an action for the annulment of that decision may be brought only within that period, unless such a right of action is explicitly provided for by national law in accordance with Union law.

Costs

49 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fifth Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 1(1) and (3) and the last subparagraph of Article 2a(2) of Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007, must be interpreted as meaning that the time allowed for bringing an action for the annulment of the decision awarding a contract starts to run again where the contracting authority adopts a new decision, after the award decision has been adopted but before that contract is signed, which may affect the lawfulness of that award decision. That period starts to run from the communication of the earlier decision to the tenderers or, in the absence thereof, from when they became aware of that decision.

Where a tenderer becomes aware, after the expiry of the period for bringing an action laid down by national legislation, of an irregularity allegedly committed before the award decision was adopted, an action for the annulment of that decision may be brought only within that period, unless such a right is explicitly provided for by national law in accordance with Union law.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Tenth Chamber)

6 November 2014 (*)

(Public procurement — Principles of equal treatment and transparency –Directive 2004/18/EC — Grounds for excluding a tenderer from participating — Article 45 — The personal situation of the candidate or tenderer — Compulsory statement concerning the person designated as ‘technical director’ — Statement not included with the tender — Exclusion from the contract without any possibility of remedying that omission)

In Case C-42/13,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia (Italy), made by decision of 5 December 2012, received at the Court on 28 January 2013, in the proceedings

Cartiera dell’Adda SpA

v

CEM Ambiente SpA,

THE COURT (Tenth Chamber),

composed of C. Vajda (Rapporteur), President of the Chamber, E. Juhász and D. Šváby, Judges, Advocate General: P. Cruz Villalón,

Registrar: L. Carrasco Marco, Administrator, having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 15 May 2014,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– Cartiera dell’Adda SpA, by S. Soncini, avvocato,

– CEM Ambiente SpA, by E. Robaldo, P. Ferraris and F. Caliandro, avvocati,

– the Italian Government, by G. Palmieri, acting as Agent, and S. Varone, avvocato dello Stato,

– the European Commission, by L. Pignataro-Nolin and A. Tokár, acting as Agents, having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to proceed to judgment without an Opinion,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 45 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114), as amended by Commission Regulation (EC) No 1177/2009 of 30 November 2009 (OJ 2009 L 314, p. 64) (‘Directive 2004/18’).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Cartiera dell'Adda SpA ('Cartiera dell'Adda') and CEM Ambiente SpA ('CEM Ambiente') concerning a decision made by the latter, as contracting authority, to exclude the joint venture formed by Cartiera dell'Adda and Cartiera di Cologno Monzese SpA ('CCM') ('the joint venture') — the latter company acting as principal of the joint venture — from a selection procedure on the ground that a statement relating the person designated as CCM's technical director was not submitted with the joint venture's bid.

European Union law

3 Article 1(2)(d) of Directive 2004/18 defines 'public service contracts', for the purpose of that directive, as public contracts other than public works or supply contracts having as their object the provision of services referred to in Annex II to the directive. In Annex IIA to that directive 'Sewage and refuse disposal services; sanitation and similar services' are listed as Category No 16.

4 Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, headed 'Principles of awarding contracts', provides as follows:

'Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way.'

5 Article 45 of Directive 2004/18, headed 'Personal situation of the candidate or tenderer', provides in paragraphs 1 and 3 thereof as follows:

'1. Any candidate or tenderer who has been the subject of a conviction by final judgment of which the contracting authority is aware for one or more of the reasons listed below shall be excluded from participation in a public contract:

Member States shall specify, in accordance with their national law and having regard to Community law, the implementing conditions for this paragraph.

They may provide for a derogation from the requirement referred to in the first subparagraph for overriding requirements in the general interest.

For the purposes of this paragraph, the contracting authorities shall, where appropriate, ask candidates or tenderers to supply the documents referred to in paragraph 3 and may, where they have doubts concerning the personal situation of such candidates or tenderers, also apply to the competent authorities to obtain any information they consider necessary on the personal situation of the candidates or tenderers concerned. Where the information concerns a candidate or tenderer established in a State other than that of the contracting authority, the contracting authority may seek the cooperation of the competent authorities. Having regard for the national laws of the Member State where the candidates or tenderers are established, such requests shall relate to legal and/or natural persons, including, if appropriate, company directors and any person having powers of representation, decision or control in respect of the candidate or tenderer.

3. Contracting authorities shall accept the following as sufficient evidence that none of the cases specified in paragraphs 1 or 2(a), (b), (c), (e) or (f) applies to the economic operator:

(a) as regards paragraph 1 and paragraph 2(a), (b) and (c), the production of an extract from the "judicial record" or, failing that, of an equivalent document issued by a competent judicial or administrative authority in the country of origin or the country whence that person comes, showing that these requirements have been met;

Where the country in question does not issue such documents or certificates, or where these do not cover all the cases specified in paragraphs 1 and 2(a), (b) and (c), they may be replaced by a declaration on oath or, in Member States where there is no provision for declarations on oath, by a solemn declaration made by the person concerned before a competent judicial or administrative authority, a notary or a competent professional or trade body, in the country of origin or in the country whence that person comes.'

6 Article 51 of Directive 2004/18, headed 'Additional documentation and information', is worded as follows:

'The contracting authority may invite economic operators to supplement or clarify the certificates and documents submitted pursuant to Articles 45 to 50.'

Italian law

7 Article 38(1) and (2) of Legislative Decree No 163 establishing the Public Works Contracts, Public Supply Contracts and Public Service Contracts Code implementing Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC (decreto legislativo n. 163 — Codice dei contratti pubblici relativi a lavori, servizi e forniture in attuazione delle direttive 2004/17/CE e 2004/18/CE) of 12 April 2006 (GURI No 100 of 2 May 2006, ordinary supplement) ('Legislative Decree No 163/2006') provides as follows:

'1. The following persons shall be excluded from participation in procedures for the award of concessions and public works contracts, supply contracts and service contracts and may not be awarded subcontracts or conclude any related contract:

(b) any person against whom proceedings for the imposition of one of the preventive measures referred to in Article 3 of Law No 1423 of 27 December 1956 or one of the grounds for refusal set out in Article 10 of Law No 575 of 31 May 1965 are pending; the exclusion and prohibition shall apply if the pending proceedings concern the owner or technical director, if the case involves a sole trader; …

(c) any person who has been the subject of a conviction that has the force of res judicata or a penal order against which no appeal lies, or who has been the subject of a judgment imposing a penalty at the specific request of the parties, as provided for in Article 444 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, in respect of the commission of serious professional conduct offences to the detriment of the State or the Community; the following constitute, in any event, grounds for exclusion: a conviction by a judgment which has the force of res judicata for one or more offences relating to participation in a criminal organisation, corruption, fraud or money laundering, as defined by the Community measures cited in Article 45(1) of Directive 2004/18/EC; the exclusion and prohibition shall apply if the judgment or order was made against: the owner or the technical director, in cases involving a sole trader; …

2. The candidate or tenderer shall certify that he satisfies the relevant requirements by producing a sworn statement, in accordance with the conditions laid down in the consolidated statutory and regulatory provisions relating to administrative documents, as required by Decree No 445 of the President of the Republic of 28 December 2000, and shall set out in that statement all his previous convictions, including those which have not been entered in the judicial record. …'

8 Article 46(1) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 provides as follows:

'Within the limits laid down in Articles 38 to 45, the contracting authorities shall request the tenderers, where necessary, to expand upon or clarify the content of the certificates, documents or statements submitted.'

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

9 It is apparent from the order for reference that, by means of a public tender notice, CEM Ambiente launched a tendering procedure for the conclusion of a contract for the supply of paper and cardboard from separate municipal solid waste collections for the period running from 1 April 2011 to 31 March 2014. The contract was to be awarded to the tenderer offering to pay the highest price for removing the amounts of those materials specified, in accordance with the detailed requirements set out in the specifications for that procedure.

10 It should be noted that the specifications, a copy of which is included among the documents submitted to the Court, sets out, in Article 8 thereof, a series of grounds on which a tenderer may be excluded from participation in the procurement procedure. Those grounds include the fact that one of the documents and/or one of the sworn statements the purpose of which is to demonstrate that both the general and special requirements have been complied with is incomplete or irregular, except where any irregularity is of a purely formal nature and may be remedied but is not decisive for the assessment of the tender.

11 By decision of 21 December 2010, CEM Ambiente excluded the joint venture from the procurement procedure on the ground that its tender did not contain the statement relating to Mr Galbiati, described as CCM's technical director, and certifying that there were no criminal proceedings pending against him and that he had not been convicted of an offence by a judgment having the force of res judicata, as required under Article 38 of Legislative Decree No 163/2006. The only other tenderer having also been excluded from that selection procedure, CEM Ambiente declared the procedure void and launched a new tendering procedure.

12 Having learned of the decision to exclude the joint venture from the first selection procedure, CCM forwarded to CEM Ambiente a statement in which it indicated that none of the grounds for refusal laid down in Article 38 of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 applied to Mr Galbiati. Subsequently, the joint venture also indicated that Mr Galbiati had been identified as technical director in error, as he was simply a member of CCM's board of directors with no power of representation. As a consequence, no statement was required concerning Mr Galbiati under Article 38 of Legislative Decree No 163/2006.

13 In the absence of any reply from CEM Ambiente to that correspondence, Cartiera dell'Adda and CCM brought proceedings before the referring court seeking the annulment of the decision excluding the joint venture from the first award procedure and the withdrawal of the notice relating to the opening of a new procedure. By judgment of 25 May 2011, the referring court granted that application but rejected the request that the contract should be awarded to the joint venture.

14 On 23 June 2011, CEM Ambiente appealed against that judgment before the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State). The following day, Cartiera dell'Adda brought proceedings before the referring court seeking implementation of the judgment.

15 By judgment of 31 March 2012, the Consiglio di Stato upheld CEM Ambiente's appeal, taking the view that failure to produce a statement, such as that at issue, must lead to the exclusion of the tenderer from the selection procedure, at the very least where, as in the present case, the lex specialis provides that the penalty to be imposed for failure to produce such a statement is for the tenderer to be excluded from the procedure. The Consiglio di Stato considers that the central issue in the proceedings in question is not the requirement to expand upon or rectify a document that is incomplete or in some way defective, but the simple failure to product a compulsory statement.

16 In the proceedings relating to the application for implementation of its judgment before the referring court, Cartiera dell'Adda lodged a pleading, on 26 June 2012, in which, first, it expressed the view that the status of res judicata of the judgment of the Consiglio di Stato was at odds with Article 45 of Directive 2004/18 and, second, it requested that the case be referred to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling.

17 By order of 28 June 2012, noting that a claim had also been brought before it for compensation on the ground of delay in implementing its judgment of 25 May 2011, the referring court decided that the proceedings were to be conducted in accordance with the rules of the ordinary procedure. The amount of damages claimed by Cartiera dell'Adda is in excess of EUR 9 million.

18 The Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia entertains doubts, in essence, as to whether European Union law precludes an interpretation of a national provision intended to transpose Article 45 of Directive 2004/18 into domestic law to the effect that the contracting authority is obliged to exclude from an award procedure a tenderer who has failed to declare in his application for participation that a person designated as its technical director has not been the subject of criminal proceedings or convicted of an offence for the purpose of that national provision, even if the tenderer is in a position to prove, first, that that person had described as the technical director in error and, second, that that person fulfilled the conditions for making the statement required in any event.

19 In its order for reference, the referring court also points out that the possibility afforded the contracting authority in Article 46 of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 to seek, during the procedure, any clarifications or additional information it considers necessary is available only in the circumstances identified in that provision, so that the contracting authority in question does not have a free hand in conducting the procedure in cases in which statements are omitted.

20 Moreover, referring inter alia to the decisions in Kühne & Heitz (C-453/00, EU:C:2004:17), Kapferer (C-234/04, EU:C:2006:178), Kempter (C-2/06, EU:C:2008:78) and Fallimento Olimpiclub (C-2/08, EU:C:2009:506), the referring court states that it is possible for a national decision which has the force of res judicata, such as the judgment of the Consiglio di Stato of 31 March 2012, not to be applied, in so far as it is contrary to European Union law. According to the Court of Justice's case-law, review of the conditions for participating in public procurement procedures must be based on the substance of the case — that is, it is necessary to verify that the conditions for participating in such procedures are fulfilled — not merely on whether the administrative documents accompanying the tenders submitted within the period prescribed are formally complete. In conclusion, the referring court raises the question whether Article 38(1)(b) and (c) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 is consistent with Article 45 of Directive 2004/18.

21 In those circumstances, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia decided to stay proceedings and refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) Is it contrary to [European Union] law, when an undertaking participating in a tendering procedure has failed to declare, in its request for participation, that its technical director has not been the subject of any of the proceedings or convictions referred to in Article 38(1)(b) and (c) of [Legislative Decree No 163/2006], for an interpretation of that article to be given to the effect that the contracting authority must order the exclusion of that undertaking even when the undertaking has provided sufficient evidence that the use of the term "technical director" in its request was due to a mere clerical error?

(2) Is it contrary to [European Union] law, when an undertaking participating in a tendering procedure has provided relevant, sufficient evidence that the persons required to make the statements referred to in Article 38(1)(b) and (c) [of Legislative Decree No 163/2006] have not been the subject of any of the proceedings or convictions referred to in that provision, for an interpretation of that article to be given to the effect that the contracting authority must order the exclusion of that undertaking as a consequence of the failure to comply with a provision of the lex specialis under which the tendering procedure was launched?'

22 By order of the President of the Court of Justice of 18 July 2013, the application for a ruling to be given in this case under the accelerated procedure provided for in Article 105(1) of the Court's Rules of Procedure was dismissed.

Consideration of the questions referred

Admissibility

23 CEM Ambiente and the Italian Government state that the request for a preliminary ruling has been made in the context of proceedings for implementation of a judgment of the referring court — and a claim seeking compensation for the delay in that implementation — which was, however, varied by decision of the Consiglio di Stato of 31 March 2012, a decision having the force of res judicata, so that the question as to whether the decision to exclude the joint venture from the selection procedure in question is lawful may no longer be addressed by the referring court when examining those applications. CEM Ambiente and the Italian Government infer from this that the questions put by the referring court are hypothetical and, therefore, inadmissible.

24 CEM Ambiente and the Italian Government also contend that the questions referred are based on a different factual background from that established by the Consiglio di Stato in its judgment of 31 March 2012. Accordingly, the factual situation on which the first question is based, namely that the description of Mr Galbiati as technical director was a clerical error, does not correspond to the facts as established by the Consiglio di Stato. With regard to the second question, the referring court omitted to mention that the evidence that it refers to was produced out of time.

25 Moreover, the Italian Government is of the view that the purpose of the questions referred is not to obtain an interpretation of European Union law but an examination of the factual background of the case before the referring court. Indeed, the Court would have to ascertain whether the conditions under which an incomplete document may be rectified were met, the Consiglio di Stato having ruled out any such possibility.

26 It must be borne in mind, first, that, in accordance with settled case-law, Article 267 TFEU gives national courts the widest discretion in referring matters to the Court if they consider that a case pending before them raises questions involving the interpretation of provisions of European Union law, or consideration of their validity, which are necessary for the resolution of the case before them. National courts are, moreover, free to exercise that discretion at whatever stage of the proceedings they consider appropriate (judgment in Bericap Záródástechnikai, C-180/11, EU:C:2012:717, paragraph 53 and the case-law cited).

27 The Court has thus concluded that a rule of national law pursuant to which courts that are not adjudicating at final instance are bound by legal rulings of a higher court cannot take away from those courts the discretion to refer to the Court questions of interpretation of the point of European Union law to which such rulings relate. The Court has held that a court which is not ruling at final instance must be free, if it considers that a higher court's legal ruling could lead it to give a judgment contrary to European Union law, to refer to the Court questions which concern it (see judgments in Elchinov, C-173/09, EU:C:2010:581, paragraphs 25 and 27, and Interedil, C-396/09, EU:C:2011:671, paragraph 35).

28 It follows that, even though it has the force of res judicata under national law, the judgment of the Consiglio di Stato of 31 March 2012 cannot preclude the referring court from making a reference to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling if it considers that that judgment may be contrary to European Union law.

29 With regard, second, to claim that the questions referred are hypothetical, it should be recalled that questions on the interpretation of European Union law referred by a national court in the factual and legislative context which that court is responsible for defining, and the accuracy of which is not a matter for the Court to determine, enjoy a presumption of relevance. The Court may refuse to rule on a question referred for a preliminary ruling by a national court only where it is quite obvious that the interpretation of European Union law that is sought bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose, where the problem is hypothetical, or where the Court does not have before it the factual or legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted to it (see, inter alia, judgment in Genil 48 and Comercial Hostelera de Grandes Vinos, C-604/11, EU:C:2013:344, paragraph 26).

30 In the present case, it cannot be found that the questions referred are hypothetical. They have been submitted in proceedings in which Cartiera dell'Adda seeks, inter alia, compensation for the delay in implementing the judgment delivered by the referring court on 25 May 2011 annulling CEM Ambiente's decision to exclude the joint venture from the selection procedure at issue in the main proceedings. It is therefore not apparent that those questions, which relate to whether such a decision to exclude a tenderer complies with European Union law, are irrelevant to the outcome of the dispute before the national court. Moreover, notwithstanding the existence of the judgment of the Consiglio di Stato of 31 March 2012, it cannot be concluded a priori that the dispute has become devoid of purpose.

31 Third, with regard to the claim that the summary of the facts in the main proceedings is inaccurate and deficient, it is sufficient to note, as is also apparent from paragraph 29 above, that it is for the national court alone to define the factual parameters of the dispute which gave rise to the questions and it is not the task of the Court of Justice to give a ruling on that court's assessment of the facts (see, to that effect, judgment in van Delft and Others, C-345/09, EU:C:2010:610, paragraph 114).

32 Finally, it is apparent from the very wording of the questions referred that the referring court is seeking from the Court of Justice not an examination of that factual background but an interpretation of EU law that will be of assistance in resolving the dispute before it.

33 It follows that the questions referred for a preliminary ruling are admissible.

Substance

34 As a preliminary observation, it should be noted, first, that while the referring court does not mention Article 45 of Directive 2004/18 in its questions, it is apparent from the order for reference itself, in particular the introductory paragraph of the questions referred, that that court is unsure whether Article 38(1)(b) and (c) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 complies with Article 45 of that directive.

35 Second, only the second question refers to failure on the part of an economic operator participating in a tendering procedure to comply with a provision contained in the contract documentation, such as the contract notice or the specifications, relating to the award procedure at issue in the main proceedings. However, the ground for exclusion referred to in both questions is the same and is set out, as is apparent from paragraph 10 above, in Article 8 of the contract specifications.

36 Accordingly, the national court must be regarded as asking by its questions, which it is appropriate to examine together, whether Article 45 of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as precluding the exclusion of an economic operator from a tendering procedure on the ground that the operator has failed to comply with a requirement laid down in the contract documentation to annex to the tender, on pain of exclusion, a statement to the effect that the person designated in the tender as the operator's technical director has not been the subject of criminal proceedings or a conviction, where, at a date after the expiry of the deadline for submitting tenders, such a statement has been provided to the contracting authority or it is shown that the person in question was identified as the technical director in error.

37 As regards the question whether the contract at issue in the main proceedings falls within the scope of Directive 2004/18, the European Commission stated at the hearing that that contract is a public services contract, as defined in Article 1(2)(d) of the directive, and identified more specifically as Category 16 in Annex IIA to the directive.

38 On the other hand, CEM Ambiente is of the view that the object of the contract is an agreement for the sale and purchase of moveable goods or, in view of the requirement to process waste in the contract, that it is, at most, a service concession. Therefore, the contract does not, in any event, fall within the scope of Directive 2004/18.

39 In the first place, on the assumption that the contract at issue in the main proceedings falls within the scope of Directive 2004/18, which is a matter for the referring court to determine, it should be recalled that Article 45(1) and (2) of the directive sets out a series of grounds on which a tenderer may be excluded on the basis of his personal situation. Article 45(3) indicates which documents the contracting authorities are required to accept as sufficient evidence of the fact that none of the cases identified in Article 45(1) and (2) applies to the tenderer in question, with the exception of the situations referred to in Article 45(2)(d) and (g).

40 It is not apparent from the order for reference that the question whether the grounds for exclusion set out in Article 38(1)(b) and (c) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 and the requirement to submit a 'sworn statement' laid down in Article 38(2) of that decree are compatible with those provisions of Directive 2004/18 is in issue in the main proceedings. Nor is it claimed in those proceedings that the exclusion of a tenderer from the contract on the ground that the tenderer has failed to comply with that requirement is, in itself, contrary to the directive. However, the referring court has doubts as to the compatibility with European Union law of the fact that it is impossible for such a tenderer, after submitting his bid, to remedy the fact that he failed to annex such a statement to his bid, whether by submitting such a statement to the contracting authority directly or by showing that the person concerned was identified as the technical director in error.

41 In that regard, it is common ground that it is apparent from the contract documentation in question in the main proceedings, first, that the 'sworn statement' referred to in Article 38 of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 concerning the person designated as technical director of the economic undertaking concerned had to be annexed to the bid submitted by the undertaking, on pain of exclusion from the tender procedure and, second, that it was possible to remedy a posteriori merely irregularities which were purely formal and not decisive for the assessment of the bid.

42 The Court has already held that the contracting authority must comply strictly with the criteria which it has itself established, so that it is required to exclude from the contract an economic operator who has failed to provide a document or information which he was required to produce under the terms laid down in the contract documentation, on pain of exclusion (see, to that effect, judgment in Manova, C-336/12, EU:C:2013:647, paragraph 40).

43 That strict requirement on the part of contracting authorities has its origins in the principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency deriving from that principle, to which those authorities are subject in accordance with Article 2 of Directive 2004/18.

44 First, the principle of equal treatment requires tenderers to be afforded equality of opportunity when formulating their bids, which therefore implies that the bids of all tenderers must be subject to the same conditions. Second, the obligation of transparency is intended to preclude any risk of favouritism or arbitrariness on the part of the contracting authority. It implies that all the conditions and detailed rules of the award procedure must be drawn up in a clear, precise and unequivocal manner in the contract notice or specifications so that, first, all reasonably informed tenderers exercising ordinary care can understand their exact significance and interpret them in the same way and, second, the contracting authority is able to ascertain whether the bids submitted satisfy the criteria applying to the contract in question (see, to that effect, judgment in Commission v CAS Succhi di frutta, C-496/99 P, EU:C:2004:236, paragraphs 108 to 111).

45 It follows that, in circumstances such as those in the main proceedings, Article 45 of Directive 2004/18, read in conjunction with Article 2 of the directive, does not preclude the exclusion of a tenderer on the ground that he has omitted to annex to his bid a sworn statement relating to the person identified in the bid as technical director. In particular, in so far as the contracting authority takes the view that that omission is not a purely formal irregularity, it cannot allow the tenderer subsequently to remedy the omission in any way after the expiry of the deadline for submitting bids.

46 Furthermore, in such circumstances, Article 51 of Directive 2004/18, which provides that the contracting authority may invite operators to supplement or clarify the certificates and documents submitted pursuant to Articles 45 to 50 of the directive, cannot be interpreted as permitting that authority to accept any rectification of omissions which, as expressly provided for in the contract documentation, must result in the exclusion of the bid.

47 In the second place, on the assumption that the contract in question in the proceedings before the national court is a services concession, it should be noted that, if, at the material time, service concession contracts were not governed by any of the directives by which the EU legislature regulated public procurement, the public authorities which concluded such contracts were nevertheless required to comply with the fundamental rules of the FEU Treaty, in particular the principles of equal treatment and transparency (see, to that effect, judgments in Parking Brixen, C-458/03, EU:C:2005:605, paragraphs 46 to 49, and Wall, C-91/08, EU:C:2010:182, paragraph 33), where the services concession concerned has a certain cross-border interest in the light, inter alia, of its value and the place where it is carried out (see, to that effect, judgment in Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce and Others, C-159/11, EU:C:2012:187, paragraph 23 and the case-law cited).

48 In so far as the contract in question in the main proceedings has such an interest, which is a matter to be verified by the referring court, the principal of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency deriving from that principle require the contracting authority, as is apparent from paragraphs 42 and 44 above, to comply with the criteria which it has itself established, so that it will be required to exclude from the contract an economic operator who has failed to provide a document or information which he was under an obligation to produce under the terms laid down in the contract documentation, on pain of exclusion.

49 Accordingly, the exclusion of a tenderer such as Cartiera dell'Adda from a contract such as that at issue in the main proceedings must be regarded as consistent with the principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency, as fundamental rules of the FEU Treaty.

50 In the light of the foregoing, the answer to the questions referred is that Article 45 of Directive 2004/18, read in conjunction with Article 2 of the directive, and the principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency must be interpreted as not precluding the exclusion of an economic operator from a procurement procedure on the ground that the operator has failed to comply with the requirement laid down in the contract documentation to annex to his bid, on pain of exclusion, a statement to the effect that the person designated in the bid as the operator's technical director has not been the subject of criminal proceedings or a conviction, even where, at a date after the expiry of the deadline for submitting bids, such a statement has been provided to the contracting authority or it is shown that the person in question was identified as the technical director in error.

Costs

51 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Tenth Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 45 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, as amended by Commission Regulation (EC) No 1177/2009 of 30 November 2009, read in conjunction with Article 2 of the directive, and the principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency must be interpreted as not precluding the exclusion of an economic operator from a procurement procedure on the ground that the operator has failed to comply with the requirement laid down in the contract documentation to annex to his bid, on pain of exclusion, a statement to the effect that the person designated in the bid as the operator's technical director has not been the subject of criminal proceedings or a conviction, even where, at a date after the expiry of the deadline for submitting bids, such a statement has been provided to the contracting authority or it is shown that the person in question was identified as the technical director in error.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Fifth Chamber)

11 September 2014 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling — Public procurement — Directive 89/665/EEC — Article 2d(4) — Interpretation and validity — Procedures for review of the award of public supply and public works contracts — Ineffectiveness of the contract — Exception)

In Case C-19/13,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Consiglio di Stato (Italy), made by decision of 14 December 2012, received at the Court on 15 January 2013, in the proceedings

Fastweb SpA,

Intervening party:

Telecom Italia SpA,

THE COURT (Fifth Chamber),

composed of T. von Danwitz, President of the Chamber, E. Juhász, A. Rosas, D. Šváby and C. Vajda (Rapporteur), Judges,

Advocate General: Y. Bot,

Registrar: L. Hewlett, Principal Administrator,

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 20 March 2014,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– Fastweb SpA, by P. Stella Richter and G.-L. Tosato, avvocati,

– Telecom Italia SpA, by F. Cardarelli, F. Lattanzi and F.S. Cantella, avvocati,

– the Italian Government, by G. Palmieri, acting as Agent, and by G. Fiengo, avvocato dello Stato,

– the Council of the European Union, by P. Mahnič Bruni and A. Vitro, acting as Agents,

– the European Commission, by L. Pignataro-Nolin and A. Tokár, acting as Agents,

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 10 April 2014,

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 2d(4) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007 (OJ 2007 L 335, p. 31) ('Directive 89/665').

2 The request has been made in proceedings between the Ministero dell'Interno, Dipartimento di Pubblica Sicurezza (Ministry of the Interior, Department of Public Safety; 'the Ministry of the Interior') and Fastweb SpA, concerning the award to Telecom Italia SpA, under a negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice, of a public contract for the supply of electronic communications services.

Legal context

EU Law

3 Recitals 3, 13, 14, 21, 26 and 36 in the preamble to Directive 2007/66 state:

'(3) … the guarantees of transparency and non-discrimination sought by [Directive 89/665 and Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1992 L 76, p. 14)] should be strengthened to ensure that the Community as a whole fully benefit from the positive effects of the modernisation and simplification of the rules on public procurement achieved by [Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114)] and [by Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1)]. Directives [89/665] and [92/13] should therefore be amended by adding the essential clarifications which will allow the results intended by the Community legislature to be attained.

(13) In order to combat the illegal direct award of contracts, which the Court of Justice has called the most serious breach of Community law in the field of public procurement on the part of a contracting authority or contracting entity, there should be provision for effective, proportionate and dissuasive sanctions. Therefore a contract resulting from an illegal direct award should in principle be considered ineffective. The ineffectiveness should not be automatic but should be ascertained by or should be the result of a decision of an independent review body.

(14) Ineffectiveness is the most effective way to restore competition and to create new business opportunities for those economic operators which have been deprived illegally of their opportunity to compete. Direct awards within the meaning of this Directive should include all contract awards made without prior publication of a contract notice in the Official Journal of the European Union within the meaning of Directive [2004/18]. This corresponds to a procedure without prior call for competition within the meaning of Directive [2004/17].

(21) The objective to be achieved where Member States lay down the rules which ensure that a contract shall be considered ineffective is that the rights and obligations of the parties under the contract should cease to be enforced and performed. The consequences resulting from a contract being considered ineffective should be determined by national law. National law may therefore, for example, provide for the retroactive cancellation of all contractual obligations (ex tunc) or conversely limit the scope of the cancellation to those obligations which would still have to be performed (ex nunc). This should not lead to the absence of forceful penalties if the obligations deriving from a contract have already been fulfilled either entirely or almost entirely. In such cases Member States should provide for alternative penalties as well, taking into account the extent to which a contract remains in force in accordance with national law. Similarly, the consequences concerning the possible recovery of any sums which may have been paid, as well as all other forms of possible restitution, including restitution in value where restitution in kind is not possible, are to be determined by national law.

(26) In order to avoid legal uncertainty which may result from ineffectiveness, Member States should provide for an exemption from any finding of ineffectiveness in cases where the contracting authority or contracting entity considers that the direct award of any contract without prior publication of a contract notice in the [Official Journal] is permissible in accordance with Directives [2004/18] and [2004/17] and has applied a minimum standstill period allowing for effective remedies. The voluntary publication which triggers this standstill period does not imply any extension of obligations deriving from Directive [2004/18] or Directive [2004/17].

(36) This Directive respects fundamental rights and observes the principles recognised in particular by the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union [('the Charter')]. In particular, this Directive seeks to ensure full respect for the right to an effective remedy and to a fair hearing, in accordance with the first and second subparagraphs of Article 47 of the Charter.'

4 The third recital in the preamble to Directive 89/665 is worded as follows:

'… the opening-up of public procurement to Community competition necessitates a substantial increase in the guarantees of transparency and non-discrimination; … for it to have tangible effects, effective and rapid remedies must be available in the case of infringements of Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.'

5 Under the third subparagraph of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665:

'Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive [2004/18], decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law.'

6 Paragraph 1 of Article 2 of Directive 89/665, which is entitled 'Requirements for review procedures', provides:

'Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for powers to:

...

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

(c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement.'

7 The first subparagraph of Article 2(7) of Directive 89/665 provides:

‘Except where provided for in Articles 2d to 2f, the effects of the exercise of the powers referred to in paragraph 1 of this Article on a contract concluded subsequent to its award shall be determined by national law.’

8 Article 2d of Directive 89/665, entitled ‘Ineffectiveness’, provides:

‘1. Member States shall ensure that a contract is considered ineffective by a review body independent of the contracting authority or that its ineffectiveness is the result of a decision of such a review body in any of the following cases:

(a) if the contracting authority has awarded a contract without prior publication of a contract notice in the [Official Journal] without this being permissible in accordance with Directive [2004/18];

2. The consequences of a contract being considered ineffective shall be provided for by national law.

National law may provide for the retroactive cancellation of all contractual obligations or limit the scope of the cancellation to those obligations which still have to be performed. In the latter case, Member States shall provide for the application of other penalties within the meaning of Article 2e(2).

4. The Member States shall provide that paragraph 1(a) of this Article does not apply where:

– the contracting authority considers that the award of a contract without prior publication of a contract notice in the [Official Journal] is permissible in accordance with Directive [2004/18],

– the contracting authority has published in the [Official Journal] a notice as described in Article 3a of this Directive expressing its intention to conclude the contract, and – the contract has not been concluded before the expiry of a period of at least 10 calendar days with effect from the day following the date of the publication of this notice.

9 Under Article 3a of Directive 89/665, which is entitled ‘Content of a notice for voluntary ex ante transparency’, the notice referred to in the second indent of Article 2d(4) is to state the name and contact details of the contracting authority; a description of the object of the contract; the justification for the contracting authority’s decision to award the contract without prior publication of a contract notice*;* the name and contact details of the economic operator in favour of whom a contract award decision has been taken; and, where appropriate, any other information deemed useful by the contracting authority.

Directive 2004/18

10 Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, entitled ‘Principles of awarding contracts’, provides:

11 Under Article 31 of Directive 2004/18, entitled ‘Cases justifying use of the negotiated procedure without publication of a contract notice’:

‘Contracting authorities may award public contracts by a negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice in the following cases:

(1) for public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts:

(b) when, for technical or artistic reasons, or for reasons connected with the protection of exclusive rights, the contract may be awarded only to a particular economic operator;

Directive 2009/81/EC

12 Under Article 28 of Directive 2009/81/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 13 July 2009 on the coordination of procedures for the award of certain works contracts, supply contracts and service contracts by contracting authorities or entities in the fields of defence and security, and amending Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC (OJ 2009 L 18, p. 216), entitled 'Cases justifying use of the negotiated procedure without publication of a contract notice':

'In the following cases, contracting authorities/entities may award contracts by a negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice and shall justify the use of this procedure in the contract award notice as required in Article 30(3):

1. for works contracts, supply contracts and service contracts:

(e) when, for technical reasons or reasons connected with the protection of exclusive rights, the contract may be awarded only to a particular economic operator;

...'

13 Article 60 of that directive, entitled 'Ineffectiveness', provides:

'1. Member States shall ensure that a contract is considered ineffective by a review body independent of the contracting authority/entity or that its ineffectiveness is the result of a decision of such a review body in any of the following cases:

(a) where the contracting authority/entity has awarded a contract without prior publication of a contract notice in the [Official Journal] without this being permissible in accordance with this Directive;

4. Member States shall provide that paragraph 1(a) does not apply where:

– the contracting authority/entity considers that the award of a contract without prior publication of a contract notice in the [Official Journal] is permissible in accordance with this Directive;

– the contracting authority/entity has published in the [Official Journal] a notice as described in Article 64 expressing its intention to conclude the contract, and,

– the contract has not been concluded before the expiry of a period of at least 10 calendar days with effect from the day following the date of the publication of this notice.

14 Directive 2007/66 was transposed into Italian law by Legislative Decree No 53 of 20 March 2010, the content of which was subsequently incorporated into Articles 120 to 125 of Legislative Decree No 104/2010 of 2 July 2010 laying down the Code of Administrative Procedure (decreto legislativo n. 104 — Codice di procedura amministrativa; ordinary supplement to GURI No 158 of 7 July 2010, 'the Code of Administrative Procedure').

15 Under Article 121 of the Code of Administrative Procedure, in the event of serious infringements, such as the unauthorised award of a contract by means of a negotiated procedure without prior publication of a notice, it is necessary — save where otherwise provided and notwithstanding the discretion reserved to the administrative courts — to render ineffective the contract subsequently concluded.

16 Among the exceptions to that rule, Article 121(5) of the Code of Administrative Procedure, which transposes Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665 into national law, provides that a contract is nevertheless to retain its effects if, by a reasoned decision adopted before the award procedure was initiated, the contracting authority had declared that it considered the award of a contract by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice to be permissible under the Code of Administrative Procedure, if it had published a notice for voluntary ex ante transparency and if it did not conclude the contract concerned before the expiry of a period of at least 10 calendar days with effect from the day following the date on which that notice was published.

17 Under Article 122 of the Code of Administrative Procedure, concerning the other cases of infringement, the national courts are to establish, within the limits laid down in that provision, whether to declare the contract ineffective.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

18 The order for reference relates that, in 2003, the Ministero dell'Interno entered into an agreement with Telecom Italia for the management and development of telecommunications services.

19 As that agreement was due to expire on 31 December 2011, the Ministero dell'Interno appointed Telecom Italia, by decision of 15 December 2011, as its supplier and technological partner for the management and development of those services.

20 The Ministero dell'Interno considered it possible, for the purposes of awarding the electronic communications contract, to use the negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice, provided for in Article 28(1)(e) of Directive 2009/81 and in Article 57(2)(b) of Legislative Decree No 163 of 12 April 2006 laying down the Code of public works, services and supply contracts in implementation of Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC (decreto legislativo n. 163 — Codice dei contratti pubblici relativi a lavori, servizi e forniture in attuazione delle direttive 2004/17/CE e 2004/18/CE; ordinary supplement to GURI No 100 of 2 May 2006), as amended by Legislative Decree No 152 of 11 September 2008 (ordinary supplement to GURI No 231 of 2 October 2008) ('Legislative Decree No 163/2006').

21 Under Article 57(2)(b) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006, the contracting authority may award a contract by a negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice, 'if, for technical reasons or reasons connected with the protection of exclusive rights, the contract may be awarded only to a particular economic operator'.

22 In the circumstances, the Ministero dell'Interno formed the view that, for technical reasons and in order to protect certain exclusive rights, Telecom Italia was the only economic operator in a position to perform the contract at issue.

23 After the Avvocatura Generale (State Legal Advisory Service) had given a favourable opinion regarding the intended procedure on 20 December 2011, the Ministero dell'Interno published a notice in the Official Journal on the same day, announcing its intention of awarding the contract to Telecom Italia.

24 On 22 December 2011, the Ministero dell'Interno invited Telecom Italia to take part in the negotiations.

25 Following those negotiations, the parties signed a framework agreement on 31 December 2011 for the 'provision of electronic communications services, including voice telephony, mobile telephony and data transmission services, to the Civil Police and to the Armed Service of the Carabinieri'.

26 The contract award notice was published in the Official Journal on 16 February 2012.

27 Fastweb brought an action before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Lazio (Regional Administrative Court of Lazio; 'the TAR') for annulment of the award of the contract, and a declaration that the contract was ineffective, on the ground that the conditions laid down in Article 28 of Directive 2009/81 and in Article 57 of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 for use of a negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice were not satisfied.

28 The TAR upheld the action brought by Fastweb. It found that the reasons set out by the Ministero dell'Interno as justification for the use of that procedure did not constitute 'technical reasons' for the purposes of Article 57(2)(b) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006, by dint of which the contract could be awarded only to a particular economic operator, but rather reasons of expediency. However, although the TAR annulled the decision awarding the contract, it went on to hold that, pursuant to Article 121(5) of the Code of Administrative Procedure, it was unable to declare that the agreement concluded on 31 December 2011 was ineffective, since the conditions laid down in that provision for a derogation from the general rule were satisfied. Nevertheless, on the basis of Article 122 of the Code of Administrative Procedure, the TAR declared the contract to be ineffective as from 31 December 2013.

29 The Ministero dell'Interno and Telecom Italia each lodged an appeal against that judgment before the Consiglio di Stato.

30 By order of 8 January 2013, the Consiglio di Stato upheld the annulment of the award of the contract, on the ground that the Ministero dell'Interno had failed to demonstrate that the conditions for using a negotiated procedure without prior publication of a notice were satisfied. In fact, the Consiglio di Stato found that what the information in the file made clear was not the objective impossibility of entrusting the contract to different economic operators, but the inexpediency of such a choice, essentially because, in the Ministry's view, it involved changes and costs and necessitated a period of adjustment.

31 In that connection, although the Consiglio di Stato points out that the rules laid down in Directive 2009/81 concerning reviews are almost identical to those laid down in Directive 89/665, its observations are concentrated on Directive 89/665.

32 Being uncertain, however, as to the inferences properly to be drawn from that annulment in terms of the effects of the contract at issue in the light of the wording of Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665, the Consiglio di Stato decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) Must Article 2d(4) of Directive [89/665] be construed as meaning that, if, before awarding the contract directly to a specific economic operator, selected without prior publication of a contract notice, a contracting authority published the notice for voluntary ex ante transparency in the [Official Journal] and waited at least 10 days before concluding the contract, the national court is — always and in any event — precluded from declaring the contract to be ineffective, even if it is established that there has been an infringement of the provisions permitting, subject to certain conditions, the award of a contract without a competitive tendering procedure?

(2) Is Article 2d(4) of Directive [89/665] — if interpreted as making it impossible to declare a contract ineffective, in accordance with national law (Article 122 of the Code [of Administrative Procedure]), even though the national court has established an infringement of the provisions permitting, subject to certain conditions, the award of a contract without a competitive tendering procedure — compatible with the principles of equality of the parties, of non-discrimination and of protecting competition, and does it guarantee the right to an effective remedy enshrined in Article 47 of the Charter …?'

33 By its first question, the referring court asks in essence whether, on a proper construction of Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665, where a public contract is awarded without prior publication of a contract notice, but the conditions laid down in Directive 2004/18 for use of that procedure are not satisfied, the contract is not to be declared ineffective if the contracting authority had published in the Official Journal a notice to ensure ex ante transparency and, before concluding the contract, had allowed the 10-day minimum standstill period to elapse from the day following the date on which that notice was published.

34 At the outset, it should be borne in mind that the provisions of Directive 89/665, which are intended to protect tenderers against arbitrary behaviour on the part of the contracting authority, are designed to reinforce existing arrangements for ensuring the effective application of the EU rules on the award of public contracts, in particular where infringements can still be rectified (judgment in Commission v Austria, C-212/02, EU:C:2004:386, paragraph 20 and the case-law cited).

35 In addition, as can be seen from recitals 3 and 4 to Directive 2007/66, the aim of the directive is to strengthen the guarantees of transparency and non-discrimination that Directive 89/665 seeks to establish, in order to enhance the effectiveness of review proceedings brought in the Member States by persons with an interest in obtaining a public contract.

36 The third subparagraph of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 requires Member States to take measures to ensure that decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of that directive.

37 To that end, paragraph 1(b) of Article 2 of Directive 89/665, which is entitled ‘Requirements for review procedures’, provides that Member States are to ensure that bodies responsible for review procedures have the power to set aside or to ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully.

38 Article 2d(1)(a) of Directive 89/665 provides in that respect that the body responsible for review procedures is to declare the contract ineffective if the contracting authority has awarded the contract without prior publication of a contract notice in the Official Journal, if it was not permissible to do so under Directive 2004/18.

39 In Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665, however, the EU legislature has laid down an exception to that rule regarding the ineffectiveness of a contract. Under that provision, the general rule does not apply if: (i) the contracting authority considers that the award of a contract without prior publication of a contract notice in the Official Journal is permissible in accordance with Directive 2004/18; (ii) the contracting authority has published in the Official Journal a notice as described in Article 3a of Directive 89/665 announcing that it intends to conclude the contract; and (iii) the contract was not concluded before the expiry of a period of at least 10 calendar days with effect from the day following the date of the publication of that notice.

40 Since Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665 constitutes an exception to the rule regarding the ineffectiveness of contracts, laid down in Article 2d(1) of that directive, it must be interpreted strictly (see, by analogy, the judgment in Commission v Germany, C-275/08, EU:C:2009:632, paragraph 55 and the case-law cited). Nevertheless, the exception must be construed in a manner consistent with the objectives that it pursues. Thus, the principle of strict interpretation does not mean that the terms in which the exception is framed in Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665 must be construed in such a way as to deprive that exception of its intended effect (see, by analogy, Future Health Technologies, C-86/09, EU:C:2010:334, paragraph 30 and the case-law cited).

41 Fastweb contends that, in accordance with the objectives of Directive 89/665 and the rules on the freedom of establishment and the competitive conditions to which EU public procurement law is intended to give effect, that exception is merely optional. In that regard, Fastweb contends that recitals 20 to 22 to Directive 2007/66 make it clear that Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665 does not preclude the application of more severe penalties under national law or, therefore, the possibility for the national court to decide, after weighing the general and the individual interests involved, whether the contract must be declared ineffective.

42 In that regard, it should be noted that, under Article 2(7) of Directive 89/665, the effects of the exercise of the powers referred to in Article 2(1) of that directive on a contract concluded subsequent to its award are to be determined, save in the situations contemplated in Articles 2d, 2e and 2f of that directive, by national law. It follows that, in the situations contemplated, in particular, in Article 2d of Directive 89/665, the measures that may be taken for the purposes of actions brought against the contracting authorities are to be determined solely by the rules laid down in that directive. In that regard, it should be noted that, under Article 2(7) of Directive 89/665, the cases contemplated in Articles 2d, 2e and 2f of that directive do not fall under the general rule that the effects of an infringement of EU public procurement law are to be determined by national law. Consequently, it is not permissible for Member States to lay down in their national law provisions regarding the effects of infringements of EU public procurement law in circumstances such as those contemplated in Article 2d(4) of Directive 86/665.

43 Even though, according to recitals 13 and 14 to Directive 2007/66, the unlawful direct award of contracts is the most serious breach of EU law in the field of public procurement, which it is necessary to penalise, in principle, by a declaration that the contract is ineffective, recital 26 to that directive emphasises the need to avoid the legal uncertainty that could arise as a result of the contract being deprived of effects in the specific case contemplated in Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665.

44 As the Advocate General noted in point 57 of his Opinion, the intention of the EU legislature in introducing, in Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665, that exception to the general rule regarding the ineffectiveness of a contract, is to reconcile the various interests in play, that is to say, the interests of the undertaking that has been adversely affected, to which it is important to make available the remedies of pre-contractual interim relief and of annulment of the contract unlawfully concluded, and the interests of the contracting authority and the undertaking selected, which entails the need to prevent the legal uncertainty that might be engendered by the ineffectiveness of the contract.

45 Having regard to the foregoing, it should be noted that it would be contrary both to the wording and to the purpose of Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665 to allow the national courts to declare that the contract is ineffective where the three conditions laid down in that provision are satisfied.

46 However, in order to attain the objectives referred to in the third subparagraph of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665, including the availability of effective remedies against decisions taken by contracting authorities in breach of public procurement law, it is important that the body responsible for the review procedure should, when verifying whether the conditions laid down in Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665 have been fulfilled, carry out an effective review.

47 Specifically, the condition laid down in the first indent of Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665 relates to the need for the contracting authority to consider it permissible under Directive 2004/18 to award the contract without prior publication of a contract notice in the Official Journal. The condition laid down in the second indent of Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665 relates to the additional need for the contracting authority to publish in the Official Journal a notice, as described in Article 3a of that directive, announcing its intention of concluding the contract. Under Article 3a(c) of Directive 89/665, the notice must state the justification for the contracting authority's decision to award the contract without prior publication of a contract notice.

48 On that last point, the 'justification' must disclose clearly and unequivocally the reasons that moved the contracting authority to consider it legitimate to award the contract without prior publication of a contract notice, so that interested persons are able to decide with full knowledge of the relevant facts whether they consider it appropriate to bring an action before the review body and so that the review body is able to undertake an effective review.

49 As emerges from the order for reference, the contracting authority in the case before the referring court, acting on the basis of Article 31(1)(b) of Directive 2004/18, used the negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice. In that regard, it should be borne in mind that the negotiated procedure may only be used in the circumstances precisely delimited in Articles 30 and 31 of Directive 2004/18 and that, as compared with open and restricted procedures, that procedure is exceptional (see judgment in Commission v Belgium, C-292/07, EU:C:2009:246, paragraph 106 and the case-law cited).

50 In its review, the review body is under a duty to determine whether, when the contracting authority took the decision to award a contract by means of a negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice, it acted diligently and whether it could legitimately hold that the conditions laid down in Article 31(1)(b) of Directive 2004/18 were in fact satisfied.

51 Among the factors which the review body must take into consideration in that regard are the circumstances and the reasons, mentioned in the notice provided for in the second indent of Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665, which led the contracting authority to use the negotiated procedure laid down in Article 31 of Directive 2004/18.

52 If, at the conclusion of its review, the review body finds that the conditions laid down in Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665 are not satisfied, it must then declare that the contract is ineffective, in accordance with the rule laid down in Article 2d(1)(a) of that directive. It must determine, on the basis of national law, the consequences of the declaration of ineffectiveness under Article 2d(2) of Directive 89/665.

53 On the other hand, if the review body finds that those conditions are satisfied, it must maintain the effects of the contract, pursuant to Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665.

54 Consequently, the answer to Question 1 is that, on a proper construction of Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665, where a public contract is awarded without prior publication of a contract notice in the Official Journal, but that was not permissible under Directive 2004/18, the contract may not be declared ineffective if the conditions laid down in that provision are satisfied, which it is for the referring court to determine.

55 By its second question, the referring court essentially asks — in the event that the answer to Question 1 is in the affirmative — whether Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665 is valid in the light of the principle of non-discrimination and the right to an effective remedy under Article 47 of the Charter.

56 In that regard, Fastweb contends that the publication in the Official Journal of a notice for voluntary ex ante transparency and observance of the 10-day minimum standstill period between that publication and conclusion of the contract does not ensure consistency with the principle of effective judicial protection. Such publication does not guarantee that potential competitors are informed of the award of a contract to a particular economic operator, especially if publication takes place during a period when activities are reduced or suspended.

57 As regards the fundamental right to effective judicial protection, the first paragraph of Article 47 of the Charter states that ‘everyone whose rights and freedoms guaranteed by EU law are violated has the right to an effective remedy before a tribunal in compliance with the conditions laid down in [that] article’.

58 It is settled law that the setting of reasonable time-limits for bringing proceedings, in the interests of legal certainty and for the protection of both the individual and the administrative authority concerned, is compatible with the fundamental right to effective judicial protection. Such time-limits must not make it impossible in practice or excessively difficult to exercise the rights conferred by the EU legal order (see, to that effect, the judgment in Pelati, C-603/10, EU:C:2012:639, paragraph 30 and the case-law cited).

59 Furthermore, the provisions of Directive 89/665, which is intended to protect tenderers against arbitrary behaviour on the part of the contracting authority, are designed to reinforce existing arrangements for ensuring the effective application of the EU rules on the award of public contracts, in particular where infringements can still be rectified. Such protection cannot be effective if the interested party is unable to rely on those rules vis-à-vis the contracting authority (see, to that effect, the judgment in Commission v Austria, EU:C:2004:386, paragraph 20).

60 Accordingly, effective legal protection requires that the interested parties be informed of an award decision a reasonable period before the contract is concluded so that they have a real possibility of bringing proceedings and, in particular, of applying for interim measures pending conclusion of the contract (see, to that effect, judgments in Commission v Spain, C-444/06, EU:C:2008:190, paragraphs 38 and 39, and Commission v Ireland, C-456/08, EU:C:2010:46, paragraph 33).

61 In providing for the publication in the Official Journal of a notice, in accordance with Article 3a of Directive 89/665, announcing the intention of concluding a contract, the second indent of Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665 guarantees the transparency of the award of a contract. Accordingly, that provision is designed to ensure that all the candidates potentially concerned are in a position to take cognisance of the contracting authority's decision to award the contract without prior publication of a contract notice. Moreover, in accordance with the third indent of that provision, the contracting authority must observe a 10-day standstill period. The interested parties are thus given an opportunity to challenge the award of a contract before the courts before the contract is concluded.

62 In addition, it should also be noted that, even when the standstill period of at least 10 calendar days, provided for in Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665, has elapsed, operators adversely affected may bring an action for damages under Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665.

63 In that regard, as was noted in paragraph 44 above, account must be taken of the fact that, by the exception laid down in Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665, the EU legislature is seeking to accommodate divergent interests, namely, the interests of the undertaking adversely affected, by conferring upon it the right to bring pre-contractual proceedings for interim relief and the right to obtain annulment of a contract that has been concluded unlawfully, and the interests of the contracting authority and of the undertaking selected, limiting the legal uncertainty that may be engendered by the ineffectiveness of the contract.

64 In the light of the foregoing, it must be held that, in providing for the effects of a contract to be maintained, Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665 is not contrary to the requirements flowing from Article 47 of the Charter.

65 The same holds true with regard to the principle of non-discrimination, which, in the field of public procurement, pursues the same objectives, including the free movement of services and the opening up of undistorted competition in all the Member States (see, inter alia, Wall, C-91/08, EU:C:2010:182, paragraph 48, and Manova, C-336/12, EU:C:2013:647, paragraph 28). As has already been stated in paragraph 61 above, the second indent of Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665 is designed to ensure that all the candidates potentially concerned are in a position to take cognisance of the contracting authority's decision to award the contract without prior publication of a contract notice and accordingly to bring proceedings for a review of its legality.

66 In the light of the foregoing, the answer to Question 2 is that examination of that question has not revealed anything which might affect the validity of Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665.

Costs

67 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fifth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. On a proper construction of Article 2d(4) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007, where a public contract is awarded without prior publication of a contract notice in the Official Journal of the European Union, but that was not permissible under Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, the contract may not be declared ineffective if the conditions laid down in that provision are in fact satisfied, which it is for the referring court to determine.

2. Examination of the second question has not revealed anything which might affect the validity of Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665, as amended by Directive 2007/66.

BOT
delivered on 10 April 2014 (1)

Case C-19/13

Ministero dell'Interno
v
Fastweb SpA

(Public procurement — Directive 89/665/EEC– Procedures for review of the award of public procurement contracts — Situations where the conditions for the use of a negotiated procedure without publication of a contract notice were not satisfied — Power of the review body to declare the contract ineffective — Scope of the exception laid down in Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665, under which the review body must maintain the effects of the contract — Principle of equal treatment — Right to an effective remedy)

1. By this reference for a preliminary ruling, the Court is asked to define the scope of the powers conferred on the national court under Article 2d of Directive 89/665/EEC, (2) in terms of annulment and imposition of penalties, if it is established that a public procurement contract has been awarded in infringement of the rules concerning advertising and competitive procedure laid down in Directive 2004/18/EC. (3)

2. The objective of Directive 89/665 is to guarantee effective application of the rules relating to the award of public procurement contracts, by ensuring that there are effective and rapid review procedures in all Member States. (4) Through the amendment introduced by Directive 2007/66, the EU legislature sought to improve the effectiveness of those procedures by strengthening the guarantees of transparency and non-discrimination. With that in mind, it introduced, in Article 2d of Directive 89/655, penalties designed to be effective and dissuasive (5) so as to afford potential tenderers and economic operators who have been adversely affected effective judicial protection and to combat the most serious infringement of the law on public procurement, that is to say, the unlawful direct award of contracts.

3. Accordingly, under Article 2d(1)(a) of Directive 89/665, Member States are to ensure that a contract is declared ineffective by a review body independent of the contracting authority if the contracting authority has awarded the contract without prior publication of a contract notice in the Official Journal of the European Union in circumstances where to do so is not permissible under Directive 2004/18.

4. However, an exception to that rule is allowed under Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665, the implications of which must be examined here.

5. Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665 is worded as follows:

‘The Member States shall provide that paragraph 1(a) of this Article does not apply where:

– the contracting authority considers that the award of a contract without prior publication of a contract notice in the [Official Journal] is permissible in accordance with Directive 2004/18 …,

– the contracting authority has published in the [Official Journal] a notice as described in Article 3a of this Directive expressing its intention to conclude the contract, and

– the contract has not been concluded before the expiry of a period of at least 10 calendar days with effect from the day following the date of the publication of this notice.’

6. Under Article 3a of Directive 89/665, the contracting authority must state, in the notice announcing its intention of concluding a contract, its name and contact details. It must also describe the object of the contract and give the justification for its decision to award it without prior publication of a contract notice in the Official Journal. In addition, the contracting authority must state the name and contact details of the economic operator in favour of whom a contract award decision has been taken and, where appropriate, any other relevant information that it may consider useful.

7. Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665 is designed to facilitate pre-contractual remedies, since, if a notice announcing an intention to conclude a contract is published (6) and if signature of the contract is delayed for a minimum standstill period of 10 days, the court is able to correct the infringement of the public procurement rules in good time. (7)

8. By its reference, the Consiglio di Stato (Italy) is seeking a preliminary ruling by the Court on the interpretation and validity of Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665 in the light of the principle of equal treatment, recognised by the case-law as a fundamental principle of EU law, and of the right to an effective remedy, which is enshrined in Article 47 of the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union (‘the Charter’).

9. The reference has been made in proceedings brought by Fastweb SpA against the Ministero dell’Interno (Ministry of the Interior). Those proceedings concern the award to Telecom Italia SpA of a public contract for the supply of electronic communications services for a duration of seven years and a value of EUR 521 500 000.

10. It is common ground in the present case that the Ministero dell’Interno failed to observe the public procurement rules in awarding the contract by means of a negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice.

11. By decision of 8 January 2013, the Consiglio di Stato held that the award was unlawful and annulled it.

12. Nevertheless, the Consiglio di Stato noted that the Ministero dell’Interno had published in the Official Journal a notice announcing its intention of entering into the contract with Telecom Italia, in accordance with Article 3a of Directive 89/665. The Consiglio di Stato also acknowledged that the Ministero dell’Interno had observed the minimum standstill period of 10 days between the award of the contract and its signature. Under Article 2d(4) of that Directive, the national court is therefore required to maintain the effects of that contract, despite the illegality of its award.

13. It is against that background that the referring court has expressed its uncertainty as to the extent of the powers accorded to the national court to annul and to impose penalties.

14. The Consiglio di Stato has therefore stayed proceedings and referred the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Must Article 2d(4) of Directive [89/665] be construed as meaning that, if, before awarding the contract directly to a specific economic operator, selected without prior publication of a contract notice, a contracting authority published the notice for voluntary ex ante transparency in the [Official Journal] and waited at least 10 days before concluding the contract, the national court is — always and in any event — precluded from declaring the contract to be ineffective, even if it is established that there has been an infringement of the provisions permitting, subject to certain conditions, the award of a contract without a competitive tendering procedure?

(2) Is Article 2d(4) of Directive [89/665] — if interpreted as making it impossible to declare a contract ineffective, in accordance with national law (Article 122 of the Code [of Administrative Procedure]), even though the national court has established an infringement of the provisions permitting, subject to certain conditions, the award of a contract without a competitive tendering procedure — compatible with the principles of equality of the parties, of non-discrimination and of protecting competition, and does it guarantee the right to an effective remedy enshrined in Article 47 of the Charter …?'

15. The parties to the main proceedings have lodged observations, as have the Italian, Austrian and Polish Governments and also the European Parliament, the Council of the European Union and the European Commission.

16. In the present Opinion, I shall conclude that neither the aims of Directive 89/655 nor the wording of Article 2d of that directive preclude a Member State from allowing the review body freedom to assess the extent to which a contract concluded without prior publication of a contract notice in the Official Journal must be declared ineffective, if that body finds that, despite having published a notice in the Official Journal announcing its intention of concluding the contract and despite having observed the 10-day minimum standstill period between the award of the contract and its signature, the contracting authority has deliberately and intentionally infringed the rules regarding advertising and competitive procedure laid down in Directive 2004/18.

I – Facts

17. In 2003, the Public Safety Department of the Ministero dell'Interno entered into an agreement with Telecom Italia for the management and development of communications services. That contract was due to expire on 31 December 2011.

18. In view of the imminent expiry of that agreement, the Ministero dell'Interno re-appointed Telecom Italia, by decision of 15 December 2011, as its supplier and technological partner for the management and development of those services.

19. With a view to awarding the contract, the Ministero dell'Interno believed it possible to use a negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice, on the basis of Article 57(2)(b) of Legislative Decree No 163 of 12 April 2006 laying down the Code of public works, services and supply contracts in implementation of Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC (decreto legislativo n. 163 — Codice dei contratti pubblici relativi a lavori, servizi e forniture in attuazione delle direttive 2004/17/CE e 2004/18/CE), (8) which transposes Article 28(1)(e) of Directive 2009/81/EC into Italian law. (9)

20. Under Article 28(1)(e) of Directive 2009/81/EC, the contracting authority may award a contract by a negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice 'when, for technical reasons or reasons connected with the protection of exclusive rights, the contract may be awarded only to a particular economic operator'.

21. In the circumstances, the Ministero dell'Interno considered Telecom Italia to be the only economic operator in a position to perform the service agreement, for technical reasons and in order to protect (certain) exclusive rights.

22. That decision was submitted to the Avvocatura Generale dello Stato (State Legal Advisory Service), which gave a favourable opinion on 20 December 2011 regarding the lawfulness of proceeding as planned.

23. On the same day, the Ministero dell'Interno published a notice in the Official Journal announcing its intention of awarding Telecom Italia the contract for 'the provision of electronic communications services, including voice telephony, mobile telephony and data transmission services, to the Civil Police and the armed service of the Carabinieri, in accordance with all the conditions laid down in the interests of national security concerning the confidentiality and security of information'.

24. On 22 December 2011, the Ministero dell'Interno adopted the administrative decision inviting Telecom Italia to take part in the negotiations scheduled for 23 December 2011.

25. The parties signed the framework agreement on 31 December 2011 — that is to say, after 10 days had elapsed from the date on which the notice was published in the Official Journal — for a duration of seven years and a value of EUR 521 500 000.

26. The contract award notice was published in the Official Journal on 16 February 2012.

27. Fastweb brought an action for annulment of the award before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Lazio (Regional Administrative Court of Lazio; 'the TAR'), which is the body responsible for hearing proceedings challenging the award of a public contract in Italy. Fastweb sought a declaration that the award was invalid and ineffective on the ground that the conditions laid down in Article 28(1)(e) of Directive 2009/81 for use of a negotiated procedure without publication of a contract notice had not been satisfied.

28. The TAR upheld the action. It found that the data and circumstances relied upon by the Ministero dell'Interno did not constitute 'technical reasons' for the purposes of Article 57(2)(b) of Legislative Decree 163/2006, but rather reasons relating to expediency and to difficulties that might arise if the contract were to be awarded to another economic operator. However, after annulling the award of the contract, the TAR held that it could not declare the contract to be ineffective as the Ministero dell'Interno had fulfilled the obligation of transparency and observed the minimum standstill period under Article 121(5) of the Code of Administrative Procedure, which transposes Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665 into Italian law.

29. On the other hand, the TAR found that those provisions did not preclude it from declaring the contract ineffective as from 31 December 2013, on the basis of Article 122 of the Code of Administrative Procedure.

30. The Ministero dell'Interno and Telecom Italia each lodged an appeal against that judgment before the Consiglio di Stato.

31. The Consiglio di Stato upheld the annulment of the award. It also held that the contracting authority had not adequately demonstrated that the conditions for use of a negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice had been satisfied. In that regard, it found that what came to light, on the basis of all the arguments set out and documentation produced, including the technical report, was not so much the objective impossibility of entrusting those services to different economic operators, but rather the inexpediency of such a solution, essentially because, in the Ministry's view, it would inevitably involve changes, costs and a period of adjustment.

32. On the other hand, the Consiglio di Stato is uncertain as to the inferences properly to be drawn from that annulment in terms of the effects of the contract at issue in the light of the rules laid down by the EU legislature in Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665.

II – Italian law

33. Directive 89/665 was transposed into Italian law by Legislative Decree No 53 of 20 March 2010, the content of which was subsequently incorporated into Article 120 et seq. of the Code of Administrative Procedure.

34. Article 121(1) of the Code of Administrative Procedure transposes Article 2d(1) of Directive 89/665 into Italian law. It provides that, in the following cases, the court which annuls the final award is to declare the contract to be ineffective, stating, in the light of the pleadings of the parties and the assessment of the seriousness of the conduct of the contracting entity and of the factual circumstances, whether the declaration of ineffectiveness is limited to the services still to be supplied at the date of publication of the decision or whether it is retroactive:

– if the contract has been definitively awarded without prior publication of a contract notice in the Official Journal or in the Gazzetta ufficiale della Repubblica italiana, when such publication was required under Legislative Decree 163/2006;

– if the contract has been definitively awarded by a negotiated procedure without publication of a notice, or awarded directly, when that was not permissible and with the result that no notice was published in the Official Journal or the Gazzetta ufficiale, when such publication was required by Legislative Decree 163/2006.

35. Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665 was transposed into Italian law by Article 121(5) of the Code of Administrative Procedure, under which the ineffectiveness of the contract for which Article 121(1) (a) and (b) provide does not apply in the following circumstances:

– if, by reasoned decision adopted before the award procedure was initiated, the awarding body declared that the procedure without prior publication of a contract notice in the Official Journal or the Gazzetta ufficiale was permissible under Legislative Decree 163/2006;

– if the awarding body, for contracts with a Community dimension and of a value under the threshold, published a notice for voluntary ex ante transparency in the Official Journal and the Gazzetta ufficiale, respectively, pursuant to Article 79a of Legislative decree 163/2006, stating its intention of concluding the contract;

– if the awarding body did not conclude the contract until at least 10 days had elapsed after the day following the date on which the notice referred to in Article 121(1)(b) was published.

36. Article 122 of the Code of Administrative Procedure adds that, with the exception of the cases contemplated in Article 121(1) of the Code, the court which annuls the final award is to decide whether the contract should be declared ineffective, indicating from what date and taking into account the following: the interests of the parties; the real possibility that, in view of the irregularities established, the applicant might be awarded the contract; the stage reached in the performance of the contract; and the possibility of resuming the contract, in situations in which the irregularity flawing the award does not entail the obligation to recommence the procedure and an application for resumption of the contract has been made.

37. Article 3a of Directive 89/665 relating to the content and form of the notice for voluntary ex ante transparency is transposed into Italian law by Article 79a of Legislative Decree 163/2006.

III – My analysis

38. I have chosen to examine together the two questions referred by the Consiglio di Stato.

39. By those questions, the Consiglio di Stato is asking the Court, in essence, whether, under Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665, read in the light of the principle of equal treatment and the right to an effective remedy, the national court is required, whatever the circumstances, to maintain the effects of a contract concluded without prior publication of a contract notice where the contracting authority has published in the Official Journal a notice stating its intention of concluding the contract and has observed the minimum standstill period, laid down in that provision, of 10 days between the award of the contract and its signature.

40. I think not. To my way of thinking, Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665 cannot introduce an automatic mechanism of that nature, at the risk of compromising the effectiveness of the provisions introduced by the EU legislature in Directive 2007/66 and of infringing some of the fundamental principles recognised by that legislature vis-à-vis the economic operator who has been adversely affected.

41. Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, which is entitled ‘Principles of awarding contracts’ provides that contracting authorities must treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and must act in a transparent way.

42. In that connection, the Court has held that the principle of equal treatment of tenderers or candidates constitutes a fundamental principle of EU law in the context of public procurement. (10) Respect for that principle must ensure the free movement of services within the European Union and its objective is to promote the development of healthy and effective competition between the economic operators concerned in all Member States. (11) As the Court has pointed out, it therefore precludes any negotiation between the contracting authority and a tenderer during a public procurement procedure. Respect for the principle of equal treatment implies not only non-discrimination on grounds of nationality, but also a duty of transparency in public procurement procedures. (12) The essential aim of that transparency is to ensure, in respect of all potential tenderers, a sufficient degree of advertising of the procurement procedure, thereby making it possible for the market to be opened up to competition and for the impartiality of the procedure to be reviewed. (13) It therefore seeks to avoid the risk of favouritism or arbitrariness on the part of the contracting authority so as to afford equality of opportunity to all tenderers when formulating their tenders. (14)

43. By dint of such duties, economic operators acquire rights which must be afforded effective judicial protection by the national courts. The courts must therefore be in a position to ensure that their judgments are fully complied with and they must be able to impose effective, proportionate and deterrent penalties so as to ensure that the rules relating to the award of public contracts are fully effective.

44. It was in order to guarantee the effective application of those principles and effective judicial protection for the tenderers concerned against the risks of favouritism or arbitrary behaviour on the part of the contracting authority that the EU legislature chose, in Directive 2007/66, to strengthen the effectiveness of proceedings brought in the Member States by persons with an interest in obtaining a specific contract and adversely affected by an alleged infringement. (15)

45. In principle, Directive 89/665 lays down only the minimum conditions to be satisfied by the review procedures established in domestic law (16) and, according to recital 20 to that directive, Directive 89/665 does not preclude the application of stricter penalties under national law, thus respecting, in accordance with recital 34, the principle of the procedural autonomy of the Member States.

46. Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 accordingly requires Member States to ensure that any economic operator who has been adversely affected has access to a remedy that is effective and as rapid as possible against unlawful decisions taken by contracting authorities, in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of that directive. (17)

47. To that end and in accordance with Article 2(1) of Directive 89/665, Member States are required to ensure that the review body has the following powers:

– the power to adopt interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned;

– the power to annul decisions taken unlawfully; and – the power to award damages to persons who have been adversely affected.

48. By Article 2(7) of Directive 89/655, the EU legislature leaves Member States free to determine in their national law the effects to attach to the exercise of those powers as regards the contract at issue.

49. However, the EU legislature excludes from the ambit of that freedom the situations contemplated in Articles 2d, 2e and 2f of that directive and, in particular, in cases in which the national court has annulled the contract for infringement of the rules on advertising and competitive procedure laid down in Directive 2004/18. Accordingly, the EU legislature chose, in such cases, to restrict the powers of the review body by expressly establishing the effects to attach to the annulment of the contract.

50. Thus, paragraph 1(1) of Article 2d of Directive 89/665, which is entitled ‘Ineffectiveness’, requires the review body to consider the contract ineffective if the contracting authority has awarded a contract without prior publication of a contract notice in the Official Journal, in circumstances in which it was not permissible under Directive 2004/18 to do so. The wording is clear and, in principle, Member States are left no discretion whatsoever.

51. The EU legislature gives reasons for that restriction in recital 13 to Directive 2007/66, stating that the unlawful direct award of contracts constitutes, according to the case-law of the Court of Justice, the most serious breach of EU law in the field of public procurement. (18) According to the EU legislature, it is therefore necessary to provide for effective, proportionate and dissuasive penalties, which means that such contracts should be considered to be ineffective.

52. That being so, if the review body finds that the award of a public contract by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice is unlawful, it must annul the contract and declare it ineffective so as to restore competition and to create new business opportunities for the economic operator who has been adversely affected. (19)

53. However, the stringency of that rule is relaxed in Article 2d(2) of Directive 89/665, since the EU legislature leaves Member States free to determine the consequences that must ensue following a declaration that a contract is ineffective.

54. What is more, an exception to the general rule is allowed under Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665, the wording and scope of which I must now interpret here.

55. I note that, under that provision, 'Member States shall provide that paragraph 1(a) of [Article 2d] does not apply where':

– the contracting authority believed that conclusion of the contract without prior publication was permissible under Directive 2004/18;

– the contracting authority has met an obligation of transparency before the signature of the contract by publishing in the Official Journal a notice for voluntary ex ante transparency; and – the contracting authority has observed the minimum standstill period of 10 days between publication in the Official Journal of the notice stating its intention of concluding the contract and the conclusion of the contract.

56. At the hearing, the Parliament and the Commission confirmed that those conditions are cumulative.

57. It is perfectly clear from recitals 13, 14 and 26 to Directive 2007/66 that, by introducing that exception to the general rule, the EU legislature is seeking to reconcile the various interests in play, that is to say, the interests of the undertaking that has been adversely affected, to which it is important to make available the remedies of pre-contractual interim relief and of annulment of the contract unlawfully concluded, and the interests of the contracting authority and the undertaking selected, which entails the need to prevent the legal uncertainty that might be engendered by the ineffectiveness of the contract.

58. The EU legislature couched Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665 in mandatory terms and, save where otherwise provided in that instrument, that provision requires the review body to maintain the effects of a contract even though it has been annulled, if all three conditions are satisfied, in order to preserve the desired balance between the various parties concerned.

59. I believe that, by adding to Directive 89/665, in its initial version, a separate provision as specific as Article 2d(4), the EU legislature intended to lay down a common, mandatory rule for all Member States. By contrast with other provisions under which Member States are expressly left free to determine, within the framework of their procedural autonomy, the appropriate inferences to be drawn from the annulment of a contract and its ineffectiveness, (20) Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665 does not appear to allow Member States to impose a stricter penalty in accordance with recital 20 to Directive 2007/66 and, in particular, to declare the contract ineffective.

60. Does that necessarily mean, as the referring court expressly asks, that the review body 'is — always and in any event — precluded' from declaring the contract to be ineffective?

61. To my mind, the discretion accruing to the review body is to be found in the review that it must undertake as to whether the conditions laid down in Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665 — and, in particular, the first condition — were satisfied.

62. If the review body finds that the conditions laid down in Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665 were met, it is then required to maintain the effects of the contract in accordance with the wording and objective of that provision. If, on the other hand, the review body finds upon completing its review that those conditions were not satisfied, it must then declare the contract to be ineffective in accordance with the rule laid down in Article 2d(1)(a) of Directive 89/665 and, in that connection, it enjoys the discretion conferred on it under Article 2d(2) of the directive.

63. The discretion enjoyed by the review body therefore depends on the outcome of its review.

64. I shall now dwell on the scope of that review. There are two reasons for doing so.

65. The first reason relates to the attainment of the objectives that the EU legislature seeks to pursue by means of Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 and, in particular, through the establishment of effective legal remedies in respect of decisions taken by awarding authorities in infringement of procurement law.

66. Review by the courts is necessary in order to ensure observance of the principle of equal treatment and fulfilment of the attendant obligation of transparency and to impose, where appropriate, an effective and dissuasive penalty.

67. Such review is also necessary in order to ensure the effectiveness of an action brought, pursuant to Article 47 of the Charter, by an undertaking which has been adversely affected. It must be borne in mind that recital 36 to Directive 2007/66 expresses a commitment on the part of the EU legislature to the effect that the 'Directive respects fundamental rights and observes the principles recognised in particular by the Charter' and, in particular, seeks to ensure full respect for the right to an effective remedy as enshrined in Article 47 of the Charter. Respect for the right to an effective judicial remedy presupposes that the national court has discretion as regards the aspect of compliance with the applicable law and, in the present case, as regards the question whether the conditions laid down in Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665 are satisfied.

68. The second reason relates to the wording used by the EU legislature to formulate the first condition, which is laid down in the first indent of Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665.

69. I would point out that, under that provision, the national court is required to maintain the effects of the contract unlawfully concluded, if 'the contracting authority considers that the award of a contract without prior publication of a contract notice in the Official Journal of the European Union is permissible in accordance with Directive 2004/18'. (21)

70. It seems to me, however, that it would be extremely difficult to attain the objectives mentioned above by allowing the contracting authority so ample a measure of discretion as it enjoys under that provision, without it being open to some sort of judicial scrutiny.

71. That being so, that condition is purely enabling and legal protection for economic operators who have been adversely affected is undermined. (22)

72. First, that condition is tantamount to an acknowledgment that, regardless of the wording, context and objective of the provisions of Directive 89/665, the contracting authority is free to decide whether or not to issue a call for tenders and, consequently, whether or not to observe the principles of transparency and non-discrimination enshrined in Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, while at the same time it means that the contracting authority can be sure that a contract concluded in infringement of the rules on advertising will not be declared ineffective, if it has nevertheless published in the Official Journal a notice stating its intention of concluding the contract and has observed the 10-day minimum standstill period. The ousted economic operator will only be able to bring an action for damages, which will not make it possible to put the contract unlawfully awarded out to competition.

73. There is clearly a paradox here.

74. I note that Directive 89/665 is expressly intended to strengthen the guarantees of transparency and non-discrimination in the field of public procurement so as to ensure that economic operators who have been adversely affected have effective judicial protection. (23) Moreover, I also note that it was to combat the unlawful award of privately negotiated public contracts and to protect potential tenderers against arbitrary decisions by the contracting authority that the EU legislature chose, in Directive 2007/66, to enhance the effectiveness of the review procedures. (24)

75. Second, as things stand, that condition allows the contracting authority to award a public contract directly, contrary to the requirements laid down in Directive 2004/18, by completing minimum procedural requirements and risking minimum penalties, which means that it is able to abuse the rights conferred on it.

76. As Fastweb points out in its observations, it is thus easier for the contracting authority to conclude a public contract with the undertaking of its choosing than to issue a proper call for tenders in accordance with the rules on advertising and competitive procedure laid down in Directive 2004/18.

77. First of all, the schedule of the call for tenders is avoided and the public contract can be awarded more quickly. The present case illustrates this point perfectly, since the procedure for awarding the contract at issue, which is for a duration of seven years and a value of EUR 521 500 000, was launched on 15 December 2011 and completed on 31 December 2011, that is to say, 15 days later.

78. Next, the rules on advertising are different. In a proper tendering procedure, the contracting authority is required to publish a contract notice and to notify each of the tenderers of the decisions taken. Prior publication and the opening of a competitive procedure are therefore formal requirements. In a negotiated procedure without publication of a contract notice, the contracting authority is required merely to publish a notice in the Official Journal, and the undertaking concerned then has 10 days within which to bring pre-contractual proceedings. Obviously, that publication does not ensure that the party concerned is as informed as he would be by the publication of a call for tenders in the Official Journal or individual notification of the decisions adopted by the contracting authority: the review procedures are commensurately limited.

79. Lastly, if the award of the contract is unlawful, owing inter alia to an irregularity in the tendering procedure, the contract may be declared ineffective. On the other hand, under the procedure provided for in Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665, the review body is required to maintain the effects of the contract concluded in infringement of the rules on advertising and competitive procedure if the contracting authority published a notice for voluntary ex ante transparency and observed the minimum standstill period of 10 days between that publication and conclusion of the contract. The review body may, it is true, award damages against the contracting authority. However, the grant of damages does not enable the contract unlawfully awarded to be put out to competition.

80. I therefore consider it essential that, in the course of its verification of the conditions laid down in Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665, the review body assess the conduct of the contracting authority. In my view, it should, in particular, determine whether the contracting authority acted in good faith and with due diligence when concluding the contract and whether the reasons it has given for awarding the contract by a negotiated procedure without publishing a contract notice in the Official Journal are or were legitimate.

81. That also seems to be the opinion expressed in their observations by the Italian and Polish Governments, and by the Council and the Commission. (25)

82. We must not lose sight of the fact that the maintenance of the effects of the contract, as provided for under Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665, depends on the good faith of the contracting authority and is designed to preserve legal certainty for the other parties to the contract. The EU legislature expressly recognises this in recital 26 to Directive 2007/66, emphasising the need to ‘avoid legal uncertainty which may result from ineffectiveness' of the contract. Moreover, the Court expressly acknowledged this in Commission v Germany. (26)

83. However, there cannot be legal certainty or legitimate expectations where the contracting authority has acted in bad faith in the application of the rule of law and has deliberately and intentionally failed to comply with the public procurement rules.

84. At the hearing, Telecom Italia suggested that the first indent of Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665 in no way placed the contracting authority under a duty to act in good faith and with due diligence, arguing that the only obligation incumbent upon that authority is to state reasons for its decisions. I refuse to countenance that interpretation, because good faith on the part of administrative authorities is as integral part of their duties and forms the basis for the trust that the persons administered must be able legitimately to place in their actions. That is to say, good faith is one of the fundamental principles that must inform the daily business of those authorities. It seems quite obvious to me, therefore, that the first indent of Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665 presupposes, for the purposes of its application, that the contracting authority acted in good faith.

85. It is essential, therefore, for the national court to examine the reasons which could, reasonably and honestly, have led the contracting authority to believe that it was entitled to award a contract by negotiated procedure, without publication of a contract notice; and to distinguish between a mistake committed in good faith and an intentional infringement of the procurement rules. It is after that examination that the national court will be in a position to determine the most appropriate penalty.

86. There are thus two possible situations.

87. The first situation is where the national court finds that the error of law made by the contracting authority is excusable because it has shown good faith. In those circumstances, the national court is required to maintain the effects of the contract in accordance with Article 2d(4) of Directive 89/665 so as to preserve the desired balance between the interests of the various parties.

88. In that connection, there is nothing to suggest that the review body may then impose alternative penalties such as those provided for in Article 2e(2) of Directive 89/665.

89. First, the review body may not impose an alternative penalty if there is no penalty in respect of which it would serve as an alternative. In other words, there must be a legal basis for the imposition of a penalty. In a situation where all the conditions laid down in Article 2d(4) are met, the EU legislature requires the review body, as we have seen, to maintain the effects of the contract, thus preventing that body from being able to penalise the contracting authority by declaring the contract ineffective. No 'penalty' exists, therefore, for the purposes of the directive.

90. Secondly, as regards the alternative penalties under Article 2e of Directive 89/665, the EU legislature expressly refers to situations in which the review body may, instead of declaring the contract ineffective, impose a fine or shorten the duration of the contract, and no mention is made of the situation covered by Article 2d(4) of the directive. (27)

91. In those circumstances, it can reasonably be asked whether the material scope of Article 2e of Directive 89/665 should be construed more broadly. I do not think so. To do so would be to disregard the very terms of Article 2(7) of the directive and the intention of the EU legislature. In Article 2(7) of Directive 89/665, the EU legislature expressly excluded the situations referred to in Article 2e from the ambit of the freedom accorded to Member States to determine the effects that must attach to the exercise of their power to impose penalties.

92. The second situation is where the review body considers the error of law to be inexcusable, on the view that the contracting authority has deliberately and voluntarily infringed the rules on prior advertising and competitive procedure. In that situation, the infringement must, obviously, be penalised. There is no legitimate reason for maintaining the effects of a contract the conclusion of which constitutes, within the meaning of the case-law of the Court of Justice, the most serious breach of EU law in the field of public procurement.

93. In those circumstances, the review body is then required to declare the contract ineffective in accordance with the rule laid down in Article 2d(1)(a) of Directive 89/665 and to restore the rights of the economic operator adversely affected by that fraudulent act.

94. In that situation, Member States cannot be denied the power to declare the contract ineffective because, if they were, the contracting authority would then be free to infringe the rules of law on advertising and competitive procedure, subject to having to pay, depending on the circumstances, damages to the economic operator adversely affected. That interpretation would undoubtedly jeopardise the objectives that the EU legislature intended to pursue when adopting Directive 2007/66. (28)

95. It should not be forgotten that the whole point is to ensure that the penalty is effective. In a situation in which the contracting authority has clearly acted with the aim of circumventing the applicable rules, only the ineffectiveness of the contract ensures a dissuasive and effective penalty.

96. Nor should it be forgotten that the aim of Directive 89/665 is to ensure respect for the principle of equal treatment. Only by annulling the contract unlawfully concluded and divesting it of its effects is it possible to restore competition in the market and to create new business prospects for the economic operator who has been unlawfully denied the opportunity of participating in the tendering procedure.

97. That said, it is appropriate at this stage to point out that the review body remains free to assess the extent to which the contract is to be declared ineffective, in accordance with Article 2d(2) of Directive 89/665.

98. We have seen that Article 2d(2) of Directive 89/665 provides that Member States are to be free to determine in their national law the consequences of a contract being considered ineffective. According to the EU legislature, Member States may accordingly confer on the review body the power to cancel all the contractual obligations retroactively or to limit the scope of the cancellation of the contract to the obligations that have yet to be performed. Nevertheless, the EU legislature intends, in the latter case, to confer a broad measure of discretion on the review body. It refers expressly to the wording of Article 2e(2) of Directive 89/655. Under that provision, Member States may confer on the review body broad discretion to take into account all the relevant factors — including the seriousness of the infringement, the behaviour of the contracting authority and, in the cases referred to in Article 2d(2) of that directive, the extent to which the contract remains in force — in order to decide, depending on the circumstances, whether the duration of the contract should be shortened or whether financial penalties should be imposed.

99. And accordingly it is there that, upon reading Article 2d(2) and Article 2e(2) of Directive 89/665 together, that we can see at the point of interconnection the discretion enjoyed by the review body when it has to declare the ineffectiveness of a contract concluded unlawfully.

100. In the light of all those factors, I therefore feel that neither the aims of Directive 89/665 nor the wording of Article 2d thereof preclude a Member State from allowing the review body freedom to assess the extent to which a contract concluded without prior publication of a contract notice in the Official Journal must be declared ineffective, if it finds that, despite having published a notice in the Official Journal expressing its intention of concluding the contract and having observed the minimum standstill period of 10 days between the award of the contract and its signature, the contracting authority has deliberately and intentionally infringed the rules on advertising and competitive procedure laid down in Directive 2004/18.

101. On the contrary, it seems to me that that is the obvious interpretation if we wish to guarantee the effectiveness of Directive 89/665 and to ensure the protection of the fundamental rights accorded to the economic operator unlawfully denied the opportunity to participate in the tendering procedure.

102. In the context of the main proceedings, I think it will therefore be for the competent national court to assess the legitimacy of the reasons on which the Minister dell'Interno relied in order to award the contract at issue by negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice in the Official Journal.

103. In that regard, I wish to make the following points.

104. In the present case, I reiterate that the Ministero dell'Interno considered it legitimate to use that procedure, basing its view on Article 57(2)(b) of Legislative Decree 163/2006, which transposes Article 28(1)(e) of Directive 2009/81/EC into Italian law.

105. I note that, under that provision, that procedure is permitted 'when, for technical reasons or reasons connected with the protection of exclusive rights, the contract may be awarded only to a particular economic operator'.

106. In the circumstances, the Ministero dell'Interno believed that Telecom Italia was the only economic operator in a position to perform the service agreement, for technical reasons and in order to protect (certain) exclusive rights.

107. However, the TAR found that the data and circumstances relied upon by the Ministero dell'Interno did not constitute 'technical reasons' for the purposes of Article 57(2)(b) of Legislative Decree 163/2006, but were rather considerations relating to expediency and to the difficulties that could arise if the contract were awarded to another economic operator.

108. Similarly, the Consiglio di Stato held that the contracting authority had not proved to the requisite legal standard that the conditions for using a negotiated procedure without prior publication of a contract notice had been satisfied. In that regard, it found that what came to light, on the basis of all the arguments set out and documentation produced, including the technical report, was not so much the objective impossibility of entrusting those services to different economic operators, but rather the supposed inexpediency of such a solution, essentially because, in the Ministry's view, it would necessarily involve changes, costs and a period of adjustment.

109. It is true that, in the light of the information before the Court, the Ministero dell'Interno does not appear to put forward specific technical reasons or even requirements relating to the particular nature of the equipment at issue or to the sensitivity of the contract.

110. I understand that, in the field of public safety or defence, it may be legitimate to refrain from applying certain provisions of procurement law, since some contracts are so sensitive that it would be inappropriate to publicise them and open them up to competition between economic operators beforehand. That is the position in the case of contracts concluded by intelligence services or relating to counter-espionage activities, for example. It is also the case for particularly sensitive purchases, requiring an extremely high degree of confidentiality, such as those linked to anti-terrorism or related specifically to sensitive activities carried out by the forces of law and order.

111. In the present case, the Ministero dell'Interno does not appear to mention such circumstances. Admittedly, it states that the contract is for 'the provision of electronic communications services, including voice telephony, mobile telephony and data transmission services, to the Civil Police and the armed service of the Carabinieri, in accordance with all the conditions laid down in the interests of national security concerning the confidentiality and security of information'. (29) However, it appears — particularly in the light of the findings of the TAR and of the Consiglio di Stato — that the Ministero dell'Interno has not established the sensitive nature of the contract and the equipment at issue or even mentioned special requirements connected, for example, with information security or the protection of confidential or classified information which, in the interests of national security, might in fact require specific protection and involve a particular choice of candidate.

112. Moreover, I am surprised by the chronology of events, and particularly by the speed with which the contract was awarded. It is apparent from the papers before the Court that the Ministero dell'Interno decided to renew the telephony contract concluded in 2003 with Telecom Italia only 15 days before that agreement expired, that is to say, on 15 December 2011. Furthermore, it is also apparent from the documents before the Court that the contract was signed on 31 December 2011, that is to say, 15 days later. That conduct surprises me in view of the importance for the operation of the authorities concerned, the duration of the contract (seven years) and its value (EUR 521 500 000), unless it is considered that there was an understanding between the Ministero dell'Interno and Telecom Italia that the agreement would be renewed.

113. Lastly, I think that it is clearly necessary to take into account the fact that the Ministero dell'Interno is a public authority with legal advisers who have enough sense not to commit an error of assessment as regards the circumstances in which a public contract may be awarded without being advertised or put out to competition beforehand.

114. That said, it will be for the competent national court to determine, in the light of all the information at its disposal, whether such an error is excusable or whether it indicates a deliberate and intentional infringement of the rules on procurement.

115. Having regard to all those factors, I therefore believe that Article 2d(4) of Council Directive 89/665, read in the light of the principle of equal treatment and of the right to an effective remedy, is to be interpreted as not precluding a Member State from allowing the review body freedom to assess the extent to which a contract concluded without prior publication of a contract notice in the Official Journal must be declared ineffective, if it finds that, despite having published a notice in the Official Journal announcing its intention of concluding the contract and having observed the minimum standstill period of 10 days between the award of the contract and its signature, the contracting authority has deliberately and intentionally infringed the rules on advertising and competitive procedure laid down in Directive 2004/18.

IV – Conclusion

116. In the light of the foregoing considerations, I therefore propose that the Court give the following answer to the question referred by the Consiglio di Stato:

Article 2d(4) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007, read in the light of the principle of equal treatment and of the right to an effective remedy, is to be interpreted as meaning that it does not preclude a Member State from allowing the review body freedom to assess the extent to which a contract concluded without prior publication of a contract notice in the Official Journal of the European Union must be declared ineffective, if it finds that, despite having published a notice in the Official Journal announcing its intention of concluding the contract and having observed the minimum standstill period of 10 days between the award of the contract and its signature, the contracting authority has deliberately and intentionally infringed the rules on advertising and competitive procedure laid down in Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts.

28 – According to settled case-law, in order to ensure the uniform interpretation and application of a provision, one EU language version of which differs from the other language versions, it must be interpreted by reference not only to the general scheme of the rules of which it forms part but also to the objective pursued by the EU legislature (see, inter alia, Endendijk, C-187/07, EU:C:2008:197, paragraph 22 et seq.).

8 May 2014 (*)

(Public supply contracts — Directive 2004/18/EC — Award of a contract without initiating a tendering procedure — In-house award — Contractor legally separate from the contracting authority — Condition of ‘similar control’ — Contracting authority and contractor not linked by a relationship of control — Third party public authority exercising partial control over the contracting authority and control over the contractor which could be qualified as ‘similar’ — ‘Horizontal in-house transaction’)

In Case C-15/13,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Hanseatisches Oberlandesgericht Hamburg (Germany), made by decision of 6 November 2012, received at the Court on 10 January 2013, in the proceedings

Technische Universität Hamburg-Harburg,

Hochschul-Informations-System GmbH

v

– the Hungarian Government, by M. Fehér, K. Szíjjártó and K. Molnár, acting as Agents, – the European Commission, by A. Tokár and M. Noll-Ehlers, acting as Agents,

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 23 January 2014,

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between, on the one hand, the Technische Universität Hamburg-Harburg (the Polytechnic University of Hamburg; 'the University') and Hochschul-Informations-System GmbH ('HIS') and, on the other, Datenlotsen Informationssysteme GmbH concerning the lawfulness of the award of a contract by the University directly to HIS without applying the award procedures under Directive 2004/18.

Legal context

EU law

3 Directive 2004/18 establishes the regulatory framework for contracts awarded by contracting authorities.

4 Article 1(2)(a) of that directive, entitled 'Definitions' provides:

'"Public contracts" are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services within the meaning of this Directive.'

5 Article 1(8) provides:

'The terms "contractor", "supplier" and "service provider" mean any natural or legal person or public entity or group of such persons and/or bodies which offers on the market, respectively, the execution of works and/or a work, products or services.

The terms "economic operator" shall cover equally the concepts of contractor, supplier and service provider. It is used merely in the interests of simplification.

6 Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18 defines in detail the entities which are regarded as contracting authorities and which must, for the purposes of concluding a contract for pecuniary interest with an economic operator, initiate a procedure for awarding the contract in accordance with the rules of that directive.

7 Article 7 of Directive 2004/18, entitled 'Threshold amounts for public contracts', sets the thresholds for the estimated values on the basis of which a contract must be awarded in accordance with the rules of that directive. Those thresholds are amended at regular intervals by Commission regulations and adapted to economic circumstances. At the material time, the threshold relating to supply contracts awarded by contracting authorities other than central government authorities was set at EUR 193 000 by Commission Regulation (EC) No 1177/2009 of 30 November 2009 (OJ 2009 L 314, p. 64).

Award of a public contract without applying the procedures laid down by Directive 2004/18 — In-house award

8 The conditions for making such an award have been established and developed by the case-law of the Court, which has held that a call for tenders through the initiation of a procedure under Directive 2004/18 is not mandatory in a case where the contracting authority exercises over a person, legally separate from that authority, a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and, at the same time, that person carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling contracting authority or authorities (see, to that effect, Case C-107/98 Teckal EU:C:1999:562, paragraph 50).

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

9 The University is a public higher education establishment of the Bundesland (Federal State) of the Freie und Hansestadt Hamburg (Free and Hanseatic City of Hamburg) ('the City of Hamburg'). It is a body governed by public law for the purposes of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18, and therefore a contracting authority. With a view to purchasing an IT system for higher education management, the University carried out an assessment exercise in which it compared the IT systems developed by Datenlotsen Informationssysteme GmbH and HIS. At the end of that assessment, the University elected to purchase HIS's system, and on 7 April 2011 it concluded a supply contract by direct award with that company, without applying the tendering procedures laid down in Directive 2004/18. The estimated value of that contract was EUR 840 000.

10 It is apparent from the file before the Court that HIS is a limited company governed by private law, one third of its capital being owned by the Federal Republic of Germany and two thirds by the 16 German Länder, with the City of Hamburg's share corresponding to 4.16% of that capital. In accordance with Paragraph 2 of the company's articles of incorporation, the object of its business is to support higher education establishments and the competent authorities in their efforts to achieve the rational and effective fulfilment of their higher educational role. HIS's IT systems are used in more than 220 public and religious higher education establishments in Germany.

11 Under Paragraph 12(1) of HIS's articles of incorporation, its supervisory board is made up of ten members, seven of whom are appointed on a proposal from the Conference of Ministers of the Länder, two on a proposal from the Conference of Rectors of the higher education establishments, an association bringing together German universities and higher education establishments which are public or recognised by the State, and one on a proposal from the Federal authorities. Under Paragraph 15(1) of its articles of incorporation, HIS has a board of trustees (Kuratorium), and 19 of its 37 members come from the Conference of Ministers of the Länder. As regards the volume of its activities, 5.14% of HIS's turnover relates to activities on behalf of entities other than public higher education authorities.

12 The direct award of the contract by the University to HIS is, according to those contracting parties, justified on the ground that, although there is no relationship of control between the two entities, the condition of 'similar control', established by the above case-law of the Court, is satisfied because both those parties are under the control of the City of Hamburg.

13 Datenlotsen Informationssysteme GmbH challenged the decision to award the contract directly in an action brought before the Vergabekammer of the City of Hamburg, a body with jurisdiction at first instance in public procurement cases, which granted the application. The Vergabekammer found that the conditions required by the case-law of the Court for an in-house award were not satisfied in the present case. Specifically, the condition for 'similar control' was not satisfied since the University, as contracting authority, was not in a position to exercise control over HIS similar to that which it exercised over its own departments. It is true that the University was a legal person under public law emanating from the City of Hamburg and that that city had a 4.16% share in the capital of HIS. Nevertheless, the University and the City of Hamburg were separate legal entities.

14 Likewise, the consideration that the City of Hamburg controlled both the University and HIS was also insufficient to satisfy that condition as such a form of 'indirect control' had no basis in the case-law of the Court. The Vergabekammer also observed that the University was autonomous and that the city of Hamburg's power over it to monitor compliance and expediency in relation to the management of allotted funds was not the same as the managerial power which a contracting authority must have. Nor could there be any question of the City of Hamburg exercising control over HIS, since the city did not have a permanent representative on the supervisory board of that company.

15 HIS and the University challenged that decision of the Vergabekammer before the referring court.

16 The referring court observes that the issue, keenly debated in academic writings at national level, of whether the award of a contract within a relationship between three entities, known as a ‘horizontal in-house transaction’, is covered by the case-law stemming from Teckal (EU:C:1999:562) has not yet been addressed by the case-law of the Court. It considers that the spirit and the purpose of the exemption for in-house awards established by that judgment could allow horizontal in-house transactions, such as the one at issue in the main proceedings, to come within that exemption. However, it states that in the present case there is no municipal cooperation within the meaning of the case-law of the Court (Case C-480/06 Commission v Germany EU:C:2009:357, and Case C-159/11 Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce and Others EU:C:2012:817), since neither the University nor HIS are public authorities, and HIS is not entrusted directly with the performance of a public service task.

17 The referring court states that, in accordance with their statutes, public higher education establishments have a large degree of autonomy in the areas of research and education, and that the exercise of those autonomous powers is subject only to supervision of legality. However, the contract at issue in the main proceedings falls within the management of funds allotted to the University, in which the competent authorities have a power of control which goes as far as allowing them to annul or amend decisions taken in relation to procurement.

18 The referring court considers that, in the area of procurement and supplies for public higher education establishments, the condition of ‘similar control’ is satisfied. However, it is unsure whether that condition requires that the control should concern all fields of activity of the subordinate entity, so that a restriction of that control to supply contracts does not permit the inference that that condition has been satisfied. This approach is also supported by the case-law of the Court according to which the contracting authority must be able to exercise decisive influence over both the strategic objectives and the important decisions of the subordinate entity.

19 As regards the control exercised by the City of Hamburg over HIS, the referring court states that the fact that the City of Hamburg owns only 4.16% of that company’s capital and does not have a permanent representative on its supervisory board could militate against the existence of control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments. As regards the second condition imposed by the case-law of the Court, relating to the carrying out of the essential part of the contractor’s activity, the referring court considers that that condition is satisfied in the present case, since HIS’s business is predominantly devoted to public higher education establishments and its other business activities are ancillary in nature.

20 In those circumstances, the Hanseatisches Oberlandesgericht Hamburg (Hamburg Higher Regional Court) decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Must a “public contract” within the meaning of Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18 … be interpreted as including a contract in the case of which, although the contracting authority does not exercise over the contractor a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments, both the contracting authority and the contractor are controlled by the same body, which is itself a public contracting authority within the meaning of Directive 2004/18 and the contracting authority and the contractor carry out the essential part of their activities with that common body (horizontal in-house transaction)?

If the first question is answered in the affirmative:

(2) Must the control similar to that which the contracting authority exercises over its own departments extend to all aspects of the contractor’s activity or is it sufficient for it to be confined to the area of procurement?’

Consideration of the questions referred

21 By its questions, which it is appropriate to consider together, the national court asks, in essence, whether Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that a contract for the supply of products concluded between (i) a university which is a contracting authority and whose purchases of products and services are controlled by a German Federal State, and (ii) an undertaking under private law, owned by the Federation and by Federal States, including the abovementioned Federal State, constitutes a public contract for the purposes of that provision.

22 In accordance with the case-law of the Court, the principal objective of the EU rules in the field of public procurement is the opening-up to undistorted competition in all the Member States with regard to the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services; that entails an obligation on all contracting authorities to apply the relevant rules of EU law where the conditions for such application are satisfied (see, to that effect, Case C-26/03 Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau EU:C:2005:5, paragraph 44).

23 Any exception to the application of that obligation must consequently be interpreted strictly (see Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau EU:C:2005:5, paragraph 46).

24 The Court concluded that, in view of the application of the procedures for awarding public contracts laid down in Directive 2004/18, it suffices in principle, in accordance with Article 1(a) of that directive, if a contract for pecuniary interest was concluded between, on the one hand, a contracting authority and, on the other, a person legally distinct from that contracting authority (see, to that effect, Teckal EU:C:1999:562, paragraph 50).

25 The exception to the application of that principle, recognised by the Court in relation to in-house awards, is justified by the consideration that a public authority which is a contracting authority has the possibility of performing its public-interest tasks by using its own administrative, technical and other resources, without being obliged to call on outside entities not forming part of its own departments, and that that exception may be extended to situations in which the other contracting party is an entity legally distinct from the contracting authority, where the latter exercises control over the contractor similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and that contractor carries out the essential part of its activities with the contracting authority or authorities which own it (see, to that effect, Teckal EU:C:1999:562, paragraph 50, and Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau EU:C:2005:5, paragraphs 48 and 49). In such a situation, the contracting authority can be regarded as employing its own resources.

26 The Court has further clarified the meaning of the term ‘similar control’, stating that the contracting authority must have a power to exercise decisive influence over both the strategic objectives and the significant decisions of the contractor, and that the control exercised by the contracting authority must be genuine, structural and functional (see, to that effect, Joined Cases C-182/11 and C-183/11 Econord EU:C:2012:758, paragraph 27 and the case-law cited).

27 Furthermore, the Court has acknowledged that, under certain conditions, ‘similar control’ may be exercised jointly by a number of public authorities which are joint owners of the contractor (see, to that effect, Econord EU:C:2012:758, paragraphs 28 to 31 and the case-law cited).

28 In the action in the main proceedings, it is common ground that there is no relationship of control between the University, as the contracting authority, and HIS, the contractor. The University holds no share in the capital of that entity and has no legal representative in its management bodies.

29 Accordingly, the reason which justifies recognition of the exception for in-house awards, that is to say, the existence a specific internal link between the contracting authority and the contractor, is absent in a situation such as that in the main proceedings.

30 Therefore, such a situation cannot be covered by that exception otherwise the limits of its application, which have been clearly defined by the case-law of the Court, would be extended in such a way as to reduce significantly the scope of the principle set out in paragraph 24 above.

31 Furthermore, it should be noted that, in any event, on the basis of the evidence in the file before the Court and in the light of the case-law set out above, the City of Hamburg is not in a position to exercise ‘similar control’ over the University.

32 The control exercised by the City of Hamburg over the University extends only to part of its activity, that is to say, solely in matters of procurement, but not to education and research, in which the University has a large degree of autonomy. Recognising the existence of ‘similar control’ in such a situation of partial control would run counter to the case-law cited in paragraph 26 above.

33 In those circumstances, there is no need to examine whether the exception concerning in-house awards is capable of applying to so-called ‘horizontal in-house transactions’, that is to say, a situation in which the same contracting authority or authorities exercise ‘similar control’ over two distinct economic operators, one of which awards a contract to the other.

34 As regards the applicability, in the main proceedings, of the case-law on inter-municipal cooperation resulting from Commission v Germany (EU:C:2009:357) and Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce and Others (EU:C:2012:817), it must be noted, as the referring court did, that for the reasons set out in paragraph 16 above the conditions for the application of the exception provided for in that case-law have not been satisfied.

35 Thus, the cooperation between the University and HIS is not aimed at carrying out a public task which both of them have to perform, within the meaning of the case-law (see Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce and Others EU:C:2012:817, paragraphs 34 and 37).

36 Having regard to the foregoing considerations, the answer to the questions referred is that Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that a contract for the supply of products concluded between (i) a university which is a contracting authority and whose purchases of products and services are controlled by a German Federal State, and (ii) an undertaking under private law, owned by the Federation and by Federal States, including the abovementioned Federal State, constitutes a public contract for the purposes of that provision, and must therefore be subject to the public procurement rules laid down in that directive.

Costs

37 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fifth Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts must be interpreted as meaning that a contract for the supply of products concluded between (i) a university which is a contracting authority and whose purchases of products and services are controlled by a German Federal State, and (ii) an undertaking under private law, owned by the Federation and by Federal States, including the abovementioned Federal State, constitutes a public contract for the purposes of that provision, and must therefore be subject to the public procurement rules laid down in that directive.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL
delivered on 23 January 2014 (1)

Case C-15/13

Technische Universität Hamburg-Harburg,

Datenlotsen Informationssysteme GmbH

(Public procurement — Directive 2004/18/EC — Conditions governing the applicability of the exemption for in-house transactions — Horizontal in-house transactions — Contracting authority and contractor which are legally distinct and are not linked by a relationship of control — Control exercised over the contracting authority and the contractor by a third party, itself a public authority — Scope of the ‘similar control’ requirement — Cooperation between public bodies)

1. The present request for a preliminary ruling, which has been submitted by the Hanseatisches Oberlandesgericht (Higher Regional Court) Hamburg, places before the Court a new type of case in the field of public procurement which will give it the opportunity to clarify the scope of the case-law according to which, subject to certain conditions, some public contracts may be exempt from the application of European Union (‘EU’) public procurement legislation.

2. More particularly, in the present case, the Court is asked to determine whether, and, if so, in what circumstances, so-called ‘horizontal in-house’ transactions may fall outside the scope of Directive 2004/18/EC (2) and be awarded directly, without putting into effect the public procurement procedures laid down under the directive. The term ‘horizontal in-house’ transaction signifies the conclusion of a contract between a contracting authority and a contractor which are not linked by any relationship of control, but are both subject to similar control by the same body, itself a contracting authority within the meaning of Directive 2004/18, and which carry out the essential part of their activities with that common body.

3. By its question to the Court, the national court seeks, in essence to establish whether this type of transaction may also be exempt from the applicability of public tendering procedures on the model of the exemptions established by the Court in its case-law and mentioned specifically by the national court.

4. The first of those exemptions, which originates in the judgment in Teckal, (3) concerns so-called ‘in-house’ transactions in regard to which it has been accepted in case-law that a contracting authority is not required to issue a call for tenders for the award of a public contract, provided that it exercises over the contractor a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and, at the same time, that contractor carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling contracting authority or authorities. (4) Although widely discussed in legal literature, the question whether that exemption applies to 'horizontal inhouse' transactions has yet to be considered by the Court which, in its existing and now copious case-law, has had occasion solely to consider in-house transactions in which the relationship between the contracting bodies and contractors was vertical in nature. (5)

5. The second exemption established in the Court's case-law (6) and referred to by the national court concerns the possibility of excluding from the scope of EU procurement law those public contracts which fall into the category of so-called cooperation between public bodies.

I – Legislative background

A – EU law

6. According to Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18, '"[p]ublic contracts" are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services within the meaning of this directive'.

7. Article 7 of Directive 2004/18 determines the threshold amounts above which public contracts fall within the scope of the directive. At the time of the material facts in the main proceedings, that threshold stood at EUR 193 000. (7) Under Article 20 of Directive 2004/18, 'contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex II A are to be awarded in accordance with Articles 23 to 55'. Article 28 of the Directive provides that contracts are, without exception, to be awarded by applying the open procedure or the restricted procedure. Annex II A of the directive includes a Category No 7 concerning '[c]omputer and related services'.

B – National law

8. Article 5(3) of the German Basic Law provides that '[a]rts and sciences, research and teaching shall be free'.

9. Under Article 91c(1) of the German Basic Law, '[t]he Federation and the Länder may cooperate in planning, constructing and operating information technology systems needed to discharge their responsibilities'.

10. German national procurement legislation is contained in the Gesetz gegen Wettbewerbsbeschränkungen (Law against restrictions on competition), Article 99 of which sets out the definition of public contracts. (8)

11. The Hamburgisches Hochschulgesetz (Hamburg Law on higher education establishments: the 'HmbHSchG') lays down the rules applicable to the higher education establishments of the Freie und Hansestadt Hamburg (the Free and Hanseatic City of Hamburg: the 'City of Hamburg').

12. According to Article 2 of the HmbHSchG, '[t]he higher education establishments, which are bodies of the City of Hamburg, are legal entities governed by public law' which 'regulate the exercise of their administrative autonomy on the basis of a basic regulation and further rules'.

13. Pursuant to Article 5 of the HmbHSchG, headed 'Administrative autonomy', the higher education establishments independently discharge those responsibilities which are a matter of administrative autonomy, subject to a review of legality by the competent authorities. The responsibilities which are a matter of administrative autonomy are those responsibilities which are not devolved State functions.

14. Article 6 of the HmbHSchG governs the budget appropriations for the higher education establishments and, in paragraph 2, lists the delegated responsibilities discharged by these establishments, among them: management of the budget resources allocated to them, including the fees, finance and accounting systems, the real property and equipment made available to them, matters relating to staff and their recruitment, as well as teaching capacity and proposals regarding the number of admissions. Pursuant to Article 6(3), the exercise of other responsibilities may be delegated to the higher education establishments. Lastly, pursuant to Article 6(4), the competent authorities exercise, by means of directives and general instructions, 'supervisory control' (9) over the establishments in relation to the discharge of devolved functions.

II – Facts, national procedure and questions referred

15. The Technische Universität Hamburg-Harburg (Technical University of Hamburg: the 'TUHH'), the applicant in the proceedings pending before the national court, is a public higher education establishment of the City of Hamburg. It is a contracting authority within the meaning of Directive 2004/18. (10)

16. The Hochschul-Informations-System GmbH ('HIS'), which, together with the TUHH, is also an applicant in the proceedings pending before the national court, is a limited company with wholly public capital, controlled one-third by the German Federal State and two-thirds by the 16 German Länder, including the City of Hamburg, which has a holding of 4.16% in the share capital of HIS. Pursuant to Article 2 of its articles of incorporation, the object of HIS is to assist public higher education establishments to achieve the rational and economic fulfilment of their mission of providing higher education by, among other things, developing procedures for rationalising the administration of higher education, as well as participating in the introduction and application of such procedures and organising exchanges of information. Pursuant to Article 3 of its articles of incorporation, HIS engages in public-interest activities exclusively and does not operate for profit.

17. Planning to introduce an IT system for higher education management, the TUHH evaluated two such systems, one developed by HIS and the other by Datenlotsen Informationssysteme GmbH ('Datenlotsen Informationssysteme'). After comparing the two IT systems, TUHH decided, on 7 April 2011, to sign a contract with HIS for the installation of the system which HIS had developed, and awarded the contract directly without implementing the public procurement tendering procedures laid down by Directive 2004/18.

18. Datenlotsen Informationssysteme considered the direct award of the contract to HIS to be unlawful, and challenged the decision awarding the contract before the Vergabekammer (Procurement Board) of the Finanzbehörde (Finance Authority) of the City of Hamburg — the court of first instance with jurisdiction in relation to public contracts — which upheld the application. The Vergabekammer found, in particular, that the requirements laid down by the Court's case-law in relation to an in-house transaction were not satisfied, since no relationship of control existed between the TUHH and HIS.

19. HIS and the TUHH appealed against the judgment at first instance before the referring court.

20. The referring court points out that the Court of Justice has not yet had occasion to clarify whether the case-law which provides for an exception to the applicability of the rules on public procurement procedures in circumstances in which the contract is awarded in house may apply to a 'horizontal in-house' transaction, as in the case in the main proceedings. It takes the view, however, that the spirit and purpose of the exemption for in-house awards, as developed through the Court's case-law, could permit the inclusion of such transactions within the scope of that exemption, thus freeing the contracting authorities of the obligation to issue calls for tender for contracts of that nature. According to the referring court, however, in the light of the fact that, in accordance with the case-law, the system of exemptions to the applicability of such procedures must be interpreted narrowly, it is for the Court of Justice to determine whether or not horizontal inhouse awards may be caught by that exemption.

21. The referring court also considers that the conditions for the applicability of the further exemption developed through the Court's case-law in regard to cooperation between public bodies are not satisfied since, on the one hand, HIS is set up in the form of a limited company under private law and, on the other, it is not directly tasked with carrying out a public- service mission.

22. The referring court further notes that, under the relevant legislation, the higher education establishments have extensive autonomy in the areas of research and teaching, and that the exercise of those autonomous responsibilities is subject only to supervision of legality. However, the subject-matter of the dispute pending before the referring court falls within the sector of procurement, in which the competent authorities enjoy a power of control which includes the power to cancel or correct the decisions taken by the universities. The referring court therefore raises the question whether or not the requirement of 'similar control', set out in the case-law in Teckal, which it finds to be satisfied in relation to the area of procurement, must encompass all of the contractor's fields of activity.

23. In the light of those considerations, by order of 6 November 2012, the referring court deemed it necessary to stay the proceedings pending before it and refer to the Court the following questions for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) Must a "public contract" within the meaning of Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18 ... be interpreted as including a contract in the case of which, although the contracting authority does not exercise over the contractor a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments, both the contracting authority and the contractor are controlled by the same body, which is itself a public contracting authority within the meaning of Directive 2004/18 and the contracting authority and the contractor carry out the essential part of their activities with that common body (horizontal in-house transaction)?

If the first question is answered in the affirmative:

(2) Must the control similar to that which the contracting authority exercises over its own departments extend to all aspects of the contractor's activity or is it sufficient for it to be confined to the area of procurement?'

III – Procedure before the Court

24. The order for reference was received at the Court Registry on 10 January 2013. Written observations were submitted by the TUHH, HIS, Datenlotsen Informationssysteme, the Czech, Italian, Spanish and Hungarian Governments and the European Commission. The TUHH, HIS, Datenlotsen Informationssysteme, the Spanish Government and the European Commission made oral submissions at the hearing on 21 November 2013.

IV – Legal analysis

A – The first question referred

25. By its first question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether a horizontal in-house transaction — that is to say the conclusion of a contract between a contracting authority and a contractor which are not linked by a relationship of control, but which are both controlled by the same body, itself a contracting authority within the meaning of Directive 2004/18, and with which both carry out the essential part of their activities — constitutes a public contract within the meaning of Directive 2004/18 and must therefore be subject to the procedures for the award of public contracts laid down by the directive.

26. As a preliminary point, it should be noted that the application of Directive 2004/18 to public contracts is subject to the condition that the estimated value of the contract reaches the threshold laid down in Article 7(b) of the directive, taking into consideration the usual value on the market of the works, supplies or services to which the public contract relates. If it does not reach the threshold, the fundamental rules and general principles of the FEU Treaty apply. (11) It is evident from the order for reference that the value of the contract at issue has been estimated at EUR 840 000 at least, clearly exceeding that threshold, (12) and the contract at issue therefore falls within the scope of Directive 2004/18.

27. In accordance with Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18, a contract for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between an economic operator and a contracting authority and having as its object the provision of services referred to in Annex II A to the directive, is a public contract. (13)

28. It is apparent from the documents before the Court that, on the one hand, the contract at issue in the main proceedings, which was directly awarded, was concluded between a contracting authority, the TUHH, and an economic operator, HIS, and, on the other, that the services forming the object of the contract at issue in the main proceedings fall within the concept of '[c]omputer and related services' as set out in Annex II A of Directive 2004/18.

29. It must be pointed out here that, according to the case-law, as far as the concept of public contract is concerned, it is immaterial that, as applies to HIS pursuant to Article 3 of its articles of incorporation, (14) the contractor is not primarily profit-making. (15) Furthermore, as regards the nature of the contract at issue as a contract for pecuniary interest, I must point out that, according to the case-law, a contract cannot fall outside the concept of public contract merely because the remuneration is limited to reimbursement of the expenditure incurred to provide the agreed service. (16) Therefore, even were the contract at issue in the main proceedings not to provide for the payment of a market price for the IT services provided by HIS to the TUHH, which it is a matter for the national court to establish, this would not be a determining factor as far as its classification as a contract is concerned. (17)

30. In the light of the foregoing considerations, and subject to the necessary checks which it is for the national court to make, I therefore consider that the contract at issue in the main proceedings exhibits the characteristics of a public contract and is therefore, in principle, subject to the tendering procedures under Directive 2004/18.

31. As set out in points 4 and 5 above, it is, however, clear from the Court's case-law that there are two kinds of public contract which fall outside the scope of EU procurement law (18) and in regard to which the contracting authority is not therefore required to issue a public call for tenders, as provided for by Directive 2004/18.

32. The two kinds of contract in question are, on the one hand, contracts falling under the exemption for so-called 'in-house' contracts and, on the other, contracts falling under the exemption provided for in the case of contracts establishing cooperation between public bodies. Given that, in its order for reference, the national court mentions both the exemptions developed in the Court's case-law, and that both were also discussed at the hearing, I consider it necessary to analyse each of them.

1. Applicability of the 'in-house' exemption to horizontal internal transactions

33. As I mentioned earlier, according to settled case-law originating in the judgment in Teckal, (19) a contracting authority is not required to issue a public call for tenders if two cumulative conditions are satisfied: first, the contracting authority must exercise over the contractor a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and, second, the contractor must carry out the essential part of its activities with the controlling contracting authority or authorities. (20)

34. As far as the first of those conditions is concerned, it must be pointed out that, according to settled case-law, there is similar control where the contractor in question is subject to control enabling the contracting authority to influence that entity's decisions. It must be a power of decisive influence over both strategic objectives and significant decisions of that entity. In other words, the contracting authority must be able to exercise structural and functional control over the entity. The Court also requires that the control be effective. (21)

35. According to the case-law, where use is made of an entity jointly owned by a number of public authorities, the 'similar control' may be exercised jointly by those authorities, without it being essential for such control to be exercised individually by each of them. (22)

36. Since one of the cumulative conditions governing the application of the exemption developed in case-law for in-house contracts is that there should be a relationship of control between the contracting authority and the contractor, that exemption clearly cannot, as such, apply in cases of horizontal in-house transactions in which by definition there can be no direct relationship of control between the bodies concerned. (23) It therefore follows that, as the law stands, such transactions must, in principle, be subject to the tendering procedures laid down by Directive 2004/18.

37. However, the national court takes the view that the spirit and purpose of the 'in-house exemption', as developed through the Court's case-law in relation to vertical internal transactions, could make it possible also to include horizontal internal transactions within the scope of that exemption. However, this would be feasible only if the scope of the exemption were extended to cover also transactions in which, although both the contracting authority and the contractor are subject to the similar control exercised by another public authority, the first condition laid down in case-law is not satisfied, as there is no relationship of direct control between the two parties to the contract. That, in my view, prompts a number of considerations.

38. First, it is necessary to draw attention to the fact that the Court has reiterated, on several occasions, that the primary objective of EU rules on public procurement is the free movement of services and the widest possible opening-up to competition in all of the Member States. (24) That entails an obligation on all contracting authorities to apply EU procurement law where the conditions for its application are satisfied, with the result that any derogation from the application of that obligation must be interpreted strictly. (25) It follows that any extension of the scope of an exemption to the applicability of EU procurement law must be very carefully scrutinised.

39. Second, it is necessary, however, to draw attention to the fact that the Court has recognised that a public authority, which is a contracting authority, has the possibility of performing the tasks conferred on it in the public interest by using its own administrative, technical and other resources, without being obliged to call on outside entities not forming part of its own departments. (26)

40. Based specifically on that premiss, the Court has recognised the derogation for in-house transactions from public tendering procedures. In fact, where an administrative authority performs tasks conferred on it in the public interest by using an entity which constitutes its own resource, there can be no question of a contract for pecuniary interest concluded with an entity legally distinct from the contracting authority, and there is therefore no need to apply the EU rules in the field of public procurement. (27)

41. Moreover, it is apparent from a careful reading of the case-law (28) that the basis for the exemption for in-house transactions resides specifically in the fact that, since the contractor does not enjoy a degree of independence such as to preclude the contracting authority from exercising over it control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments, there can be no contractual relationship in the strict sense, as there is no 'concordance of two autonomous wills representing separate legal interests'. (29)

42. It is my view that where a horizontal internal transaction takes place in the context of the fulfilment of public-interest tasks incumbent on a contracting authority, which carries out those tasks using two entities over which it exercises control similar to the control which it exercises over its own departments, the rationale behind the in-house exemption, as developed in case-law, may in principle apply. In point of fact, in accordance with the case-law cited at point 39 above, if the authority uses its own resources to perform the tasks conferred on it in the public interest, it is not compelled to call on outside entities not forming part of its own departments. I consider that this applies also in circumstances in which the authority's own resources consist of two entities over which it exercises control and, in order to perform those public-interest tasks, it is necessary to conclude a contract between those entities. Therefore, in a situation of that nature also, in certain conditions, the requirements for the application of EU procurement law might not be present.

43. It must, however, be pointed out that, as set out in points 40 and 41 above, the justification for the application of the in-house exemption lies in the fact that the conclusion of the contract at issue is not the result of the expression of the autonomous will of the parties to the contract, but the expression of a single will. It must be noted here that, in a horizontal internal transaction, the relationship existing between the contracting authority and the contractor is far more tenuous than the relationship that exists in a vertical in-house transaction. It is not in fact a relationship of direct control but merely an indirect link, the scope of which is contingent on the relationship that exists between each of the bodies and their common controlling authority.

44. From that perspective, the condition that the contract must be the expression of a single will seems to me to be capable of being satisfied if the two entities which enter into the contract are subject to the exclusive control of the same authority. Only then is it, in my view, possible to conclude that the contract is the expression of a single act of will on the part of a public authority, which seeks thereby to perform the tasks conferred on it in the public interest by using its own resources. Indeed, where a contract is concluded between an entity over which several authorities exercise joint control and another entity which is controlled (exclusively or jointly with other authorities) by one of the authorities which exercise control over the first entity, it seems to me that the transaction can hardly be regarded as the expression of a single act of will.

45. From that point of view, I therefore consider that the exemption from the application of EU rules for horizontal internal transactions may be admissible only if the body which exercises over the two entities, that is to say the contracting authority and the contractor, control similar to the control which it exercises over its own departments is not just the same body but it exercises that similar control over both entities on an exclusive basis. I therefore consider it necessary to preclude the possibility of extending the in-house exemption to instances of horizontal transactions concluded between entities over which an authority exercises similar control, as defined in case-law, jointly with other contracting authorities.

46. A restrictive approach of that nature to the type of similar control which the controlling authority must necessarily exercise over the two entities entering into the procurement contract, if the derogation from EU procurement law for horizontal internal transactions is to be permissible, seems to me not only to be consistent with the rationale behind the in-house exemption and with the need set out by the Court, and referred to in point 38 above, to interpret that derogation strictly, but also to meet the need, referred to by a number of the parties which submitted observations, to avoid extending the derogations from the rules on public procurement beyond the limits of reasonableness, and thereby run the risk of abstracting significant economic sectors from the rules on public procurement and the objectives of opening up to competition (30) which, as I mentioned in point 38, those rules pursue. (31)

47. As far as the main proceedings are concerned, it is clear from the information set out in the documents before the Court that the City of Hamburg is possibly able to exercise over HIS only joint similar control together with the other Länder and the Federal Government, although this is disputed, among other things, by some of the interveners. (32) Consequently, even accepting that the City of Hamburg exercises over the TUHH similar control, and does so on an exclusive basis — which it will, in any event, be for the national court to determine, including on the basis of the second question which it has referred to the Court — the exemption as described in the points above in relation to horizontal internal transactions would not in any case apply.

48. In conclusion, it follows from the considerations set out above that, subject to the checks which are for the national court to make, a contract such as the contract at issue in the main proceedings constitutes a public contract within the meaning of Directive 2004/18, since it is a contract concluded in writing between a contracting authority and an economic operator having as its object the provision of services within the meaning of the directive. As such, it is in principle subject to the tendering procedures laid down under the directive. Regardless of the question whether a relationship of ‘control similar to the control exercised over its own departments’ exists between the City of Hamburg, on the one hand, and the TUHH and HIS, on the other, that contract cannot be caught by the exemption from those procedures under the Teckal case-law, as there is no relationship of control between the contracting authority, that is to say the TUHH, and the economic operator which is the contractor, namely HIS. Nor, in my view, does such a contract fall into the category of a horizontal internal transaction which may be eligible for exemption from the application of the public tendering procedures because it is a transaction designed to enable the authority which controls the two entities concluding the contract to perform the tasks conferred on it in the public interest, since, as I set out in points 44 to 46 above, that possibility must, in my view, be confined to cases in which the controlling authority exercises similar control over the two parties to the contract on an exclusive basis, which is certainly not true in the dispute pending before the national court.

2. Cooperation between public bodies

49. The referring court also considers the possibility that the contract at issue in the main proceedings may be caught by the second derogation, which has emerged in case-law, from the application of public tendering procedures, namely the exemption referred to in point 5 above which is provided for in relation to cooperation between public bodies.

50. The case-law makes that exemption contingent on the fulfilment of five cumulative requirements, all of which must be satisfied for the contract at issue to be excluded from the scope of EU procurement law. (33) The Court has thus stipulated that contracts which, first, establish cooperation between public bodies and, second, establish cooperation between public entities with the aim of ensuring that a public task that they all have to perform is carried out, may fall outside the scope of the public tendering procedures. Third, the contracts must be concluded exclusively by public bodies, without the participation of a private party. Fourth, no private operator must be placed in a position of advantage visàvis competitors, and, fifth and last, the cooperation established must be governed solely by considerations and requirements relating to the pursuit of objectives in the public interest. (34)

51. It is, however, for the national court to make the checks necessary to determine whether all of those criteria are satisfied in the specific case. The Court may none the less provide the national court with all guidance on the interpretation of EU law that could be useful for its decision. (35)

52. More specifically, the national court is uncertain on two counts as to the applicability to the present case of the derogation for cooperation between public bodies.

53. First, the national court rules out the possibility that that derogation may apply because HIS takes the form of a limited liability company organised under private law. That observation by the referring court raises the question of the personal scope of the derogation at issue.

54. In that connection, it must be pointed out that, in its abovementioned judgment in Commission v Germany, the Court employed the term ‘public authorities’ (36) to describe the entities which could take part in the cooperation, the cooperation at issue being entered into between the City of Hamburg and four neighbouring Landkreise. (37) The Court’s use of that term signalled that the derogation was not exclusively confined to cooperation between local authorities. (38) Subsequently, in its judgment in Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce and Others, the Court employed the concept of cooperation between ‘public entities’. (39)

55. Setting aside the terminological issue, it seems to me, however, that a functional rather than a formal approach is required here. (40) From that perspective, I consider that the private-law nature of one of the entities participating in the cooperation is not of itself a bar to the application of the derogation in question, always provided that it is established that, despite its private-law nature, the entity is in reality a public body, (41) which seems to me clearly to be the case when it comes to a company such as HIS with wholly public capital.

56. In my view, the third of the conditions set out in case-law, and mentioned in point 50 above, does not require that the entities establishing the cooperation should possess the formal nature of public-law bodies, but in fact requires that no private interests should participate in such entities. It may be added, in that regard, that the participation of private interests must be excluded for the duration of the contract at issue in the main proceedings. If, in fact, the capital of the contractor, which is of a private-law nature, were opened to private shareholders, the effect would be to award a public contract to a semi-public company without any call for competition, and that would interfere with the objective pursued by EU law. (42)

57. Second, the national court considers that the second condition laid down in case-law, namely that the cooperation must be designed to ensure the carrying out of a common public task, is not satisfied in the present case because, even though Articles 2 and 3 of the articles of incorporation of HIS provide that its business purpose is to assist higher education establishments and, consequently, it is pursuing objectives in the general interest, its task cannot be equated with a genuine public service mission which has been conferred on it.

58. I do not share the approach which the referring court appears to take, according to which it is absolutely necessary for each of the public entities taking part in the cooperation to perform the public task before it can be regarded as a task which is common to both of them.

59. Even if it is necessary that the cooperation serves to perform a common public task, and it is not therefore sufficient that the statutory duty to perform the public task in question concerns only one of the public authorities involved, whilst the other's role is limited to that of a vicarious agent which takes on the performance of this external task under a contract, (43) I still consider that there may also be cooperation designed to ensure that a common public task is carried out, if the public tasks performed by the public entities in question specifically complement each other and the cooperation itself concerns precisely those specifically complementary tasks. The notion of complementarity cannot, however, constitute the passport to the system of exemptions for cooperation involving activities which are in some way connected. In my opinion, it is not in fact sufficient for the public tasks to be complementary. They must complement each other in a specific way, in the sense that, with reference to all of the public entities concerned, the element of complementarity must relate specifically to the task which forms the object of the cooperation, as, for instance, seems to me to be the case for the teaching and research in the main proceedings.

60. In that regard, the information in the documents before the Court indicates that the specific task performed by HIS, a company with wholly public capital, is to assist higher education establishments to achieve the rational and economic fulfilment of their mission of providing higher education. That task seems to me specifically to complement the task of teaching and research performed by the universities, and thus may constitute, provided that all of the other conditions are satisfied, cooperation which is caught by the derogation in case-law for cooperation between public entities. I would add, in that connection, that, as far as I am concerned, it is far from unimportant in terms of the analysis, that the performance of that task is the expression of the will of the German constitutional legislature which provided, in Article 91c(1) of the German Basic Law, for forms of cooperation between the Federation and the Länder in constructing and operating the IT systems needed to discharge their responsibilities.

61. Having analysed the uncertainties expressed by the national court, a question raised by the Commission remains to be considered. At the hearing, the Commission maintained that the exemption at issue could not be applied to the present case, since cooperation between public entities concerning activities falling into the category of a public-service mission could not occur under a contract in which services are provided for remuneration.

62. In that regard, I would first point out that, in its abovementioned judgment in Commission v Germany, the Court established that EU law does not require public authorities to use any particular legal form in order to carry out jointly their public service tasks. (44) In that case, moreover, the cooperation between the City of Hamburg and the Landkreise took specifically contractual form.

63. However, it must also be borne in mind that, in that judgment, the Court noted that the provision of the services in question, namely the supply of waste disposal services, gave rise to payment only to the operator of the facility, the other contracting party of the City of Hamburg, while the actual cooperation set in place by the contract between the authorities concerned, that is to say the City of Hamburg Cleansing Department and the Landkreise, did not give rise to any financial transfers between those entities. (45)

64. I therefore wonder whether it is necessary, in order for the exemption at issue to be applicable to the agreement establishing the cooperation, that the agreement should not give rise to any financial transfers between the public entities concerned.

65. I would, however, point out in that connection that, in its judgment in Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce and Others, in which the Court took up again in a more detailed and systematic manner, based on its earlier judgment in Commission v Germany, the five cumulative conditions which must be satisfied in order for the contract at issue to be eligible for exemption from EU procurement law, it made no mention of any criterion of that nature. I infer from the absence of any such reference that the Court did not intend to stipulate that there should be no financial transfers between the entities involved in the cooperation as a prerequisite for the application of the exemption.

66. However, I consider it essential in relation to an exemption of that nature that the remuneration provided by one entity to another entity for the performance of a specific service, in the context of their cooperation, cannot be equivalent to the market price, but must reflect the costs and financial expenditure actually incurred in providing the service, and that leads me to harbour doubts as to the compatibility with that requirement of any provisions providing for the costs of supplying the service to be paid on a flatrate basis.

67. It will, in any event, be for the national court to make the necessary checks in that regard, and in relation to the fulfilment of all of the other conditions laid down in case-law for the application of the derogation for cooperation between public bodies.

B – The second question referred

68. By its second question, submitted to the Court in the event that the first question is answered in the affirmative, the referring court asks, in essence, whether the similar control required by the case-law in Teckal must extend to all aspects of the contractor's activity or it is sufficient if such control is confined to the area of procurement.

69. I would first point out that, in the light of the considerations set out in my analysis of the first question referred, if the Court were to adopt the approach which I have suggested, it would not be necessary to answer that question, since applicability of the in-house exemption would in any event be precluded in the case pending before the national court. I shall therefore set out the following considerations on the second question merely for the sake of completeness.

70. I have already drawn attention at point 34 to the essential features of similar control as defined in case-law. At points 39 to 41, I have, however, described the rationale underlying recognition of the in-house exemption, and that rationale also sheds light on the significance of the requirement concerning similar control.

71. In my view, it follows from those considerations, and particularly from the need for the control to be structural and functional, that, in principle, such control should extend to all aspects of the contractor's activity and not be confined to the procurement sector alone. The in-house entity must, in fact, in essence, act as an organ of the authority and the latter must exercise a power of decisive influence over both the strategic objectives and the significant decisions of the entity which it controls. (46)

72. It is, however, necessary to bear in mind that the Court has already had occasion to clarify that, while case-law requires that the control exercised over a contractor by a contracting authority must be similar to that which the authority exercises over its own departments, it need not be identical in every respect. (47)

73. It must be noted in that regard that the autonomy which the universities enjoy in relation to teaching and research is the expression of the freedom of teaching and research, a principle that is set out not only at constitutional level in Article 5(3) of the German Basic Law, but also in the Charter of Fundamental Rights of the European Union, Article 13 of which provides that arts and scientific research are to be free of constraint and that academic freedom must be respected. From that perspective, I therefore consider that in order for entities such as the universities to be eligible for the in-house exemption, it cannot be required that control should be exercised over their teaching and research activities also, since the autonomy of the universities in relation to those activities is an expression of values of a constitutional nature common to the legal systems of the Member States and enshrined in the Charter.

74. Moreover, it may also be noted in that regard that the Court has already had occasion to deal in its case-law with the special characteristics of university establishments in terms of procurement law. (48)

75. It follows from the foregoing considerations that should the Court consider it necessary to answer the second question referred by the national court also, the answer should, in my view, be that the similar control exercised must extend to all of the contractor's activities, except for the special rights and powers which the universities enjoy in the areas of teaching and research.

V – Conclusions

76. In the light of the foregoing, I propose that the Court reply as follows to the first question referred by the Hanseatisches Oberlandesgericht Hamburg:

A contract for the provision of services in relation to which the recipient of the services, which constitutes a contracting authority within the meaning of Directive 2004/18, does not exercise over the entity providing the services control similar to the control which it exercises over its own departments, but both are subject to the control of the same body, which may be classified as a contracting authority under the directive, and in which both the recipient of the services and the entity providing the services carry out the essential part of their activities with the body which controls them, constitutes a public contract if it is a contract concluded in writing between the recipient contracting authority and the economic operator providing the services, provided that the object of the contract is the provision of services which may be defined as the provision of services within the meaning of the directive.

A contract of that nature may be caught by the exemption from the application of the public tendering procedures required by EU procurement law only in circumstances in which the controlling authority exercises, on an exclusive basis, over both the recipient of the services and over the entity providing the services, similar control to the control which it exercises over its own departments, and both entities carry out the essential part of their activities for that controlling authority, or in circumstances in which the contract satisfies all of the prerequisites for the application of the derogation for cooperation between public bodies.

32 – In particular, the Commission disputes the existence of a relationship of control between the City of Hamburg and HIS, as the City does not have a permanent representation on the HIS supervisory board. ---

41 – In that regard, I would point out in passing that, according to the case-law, an entity's private law status does not constitute a criterion for precluding its classification as a body governed by public law and thus a contracting authority (see Case C-214/00 Commission v Spain [2003] ECR I-4667, paragraph 55, and Case C-283/00 Commission v Spain [2003] ECR I-11697, paragraph 74, relating to Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54), Article 1(b) of which contains a definition of 'body governed by public law' identical to that contained in Directive 2004/18). It is merely necessary to ascertain, and this is a matter for the national court, whether, in the light of the relevant case-law, that entity fulfils the three cumulative conditions set out in the second subparagraph of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18, considering that the method in which the entity concerned has been set up is irrelevant in that regard. JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Fifth Chamber)

19 June 2014 (*)

(Request for a preliminary ruling — Public service contracts — Directive 2004/18/EC — Award of the contract without a procurement procedure (in-house award) — Contractor legally separate from the awarding authority — Centre for hospital assistance and support services — Non-profit association operating in the public interest — Majority of the partners made up of awarding authorities — Minority of the partners made up of entities under private law, non-profit charitable associations — Activity carried out of at least 80% of the annual turnover for the partners' benefit)

In Case C-574/12,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Supremo Tribunal Administrativo (Portugal), made by decision of 6 November 2012, received at the Court on 7 December 2012, in the proceedings

Centro Hospitalar de Setúbal EPE,

Serviço de Utilização Comum dos Hospitais (SUCH)

Eurest (Portugal) — Sociedade Europeia de Restaurantes Lda,

– the Spanish Government, by J. García-Valdecasas Dorrego, acting as Agent, – the European Commission, by M. Afonso, A. Tokár and M. Noll-Ehlers, acting as Agents,

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 27 February 2014,

Judgment

1 By the request for a preliminary ruling, the referring court asks the Court to make clear its case-law concerning the award of public contracts by direct in-house award without application of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

2 The request has been made in a dispute between the Centro Hospitalar de Setúbal EPE (Hospital of Setúbal; 'CHS') and the Serviço de Utilização Comum dos Hospitais (Joint Hospital Service Provision; 'SUCH') and Eurest (Portugal) — Sociedade Europeia de Restaurantes Lda ('Eurest') concerning the conformity of the award of a public contract awarded directly by the CHS to SUCH.

Directive 2004/18

3 Directive 2004/18 establishes the rules applicable to public contracts awarded by awarding authorities.

4 Recital 4 in the preamble to that directive states:

'Member States should ensure that the participation of a body governed by public law as a tenderer in a procedure for the award of a public contract does not cause any distortion of competition in relation to private tenderers.'

5 Article 1 of that directive, entitled 'Definitions', provides in paragraph 2(a):

'"Public contracts" are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services within the meaning of this Directive.'

6 Article 1(8) of that directive provides:

'The terms "contractor", "supplier" and "service provider" mean any natural or legal person or public entity or group of such persons and/or bodies which offers on the market, respectively, the execution of works and/or a work, products or services.

The term "economic operator" shall cover equally the concepts of contractor, supplier and service provider. It is used merely in the interests of simplification.

7 Article 1(9) defines in detail the entities which are regarded as awarding authorities and which must, when concluding a contract for pecuniary interest with an economic operator, undertake a procurement procedure following the rules laid down in Directive 2004/18.

8 Article 7 of Directive 2004/18, entitled 'Threshold amounts for public contracts', establishes the thresholds for the estimated values beyond which the award of a contract must be made in accordance with the rules in that directive. Those thresholds are changed at regular intervals by Commission regulations and are adapted to the economic circumstances. At the date of the facts in the main proceedings, the threshold concerning service contracts awarded by awarding authorities other than central governmental authorities was set at EUR 193 000 by Commission Regulation (EC) No 1177/2009 of 30 November 2009 (OJ 2009 L 314, p. 64).

9 Article 20 of Directive 2004/18, which forms part of Title II thereof, Chapter III, entitled 'Arrangements for public service contracts', provides:

'Contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex II A shall be awarded in accordance with Articles 23 to 55.'

10 Under Article 21 of that directive, which forms part of Chapter III thereof:

‘Contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex II B shall be subject solely to Article 23 and Article 35(4).’

11 In Annex II B to Directive 2004/18, under Category 17, are ‘Hotel and restaurant services’.

The award of a contract without application of the procedures laid down in Directive 2004/18 — in-house award

12 The conditions for such an award have been established and developed by the case-law of the Court, which has held that a contracting authority is exempted from initiating a procedure for the award of a public contract in accordance with Directive 2004/18 where it exercises over the contractor control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and the tenderer carries out the essential part of its activities with the contracting authorities to which it belongs (see, to that effect, Case C-107/98 Teckal EU:C:1999:562, paragraph 50).

13 The Court has also held that the investment, however small, of a private undertaking in the capital of an undertaking of which the awarding authority also forms part prevents, in any event, the awarding authority from being able to exercise a control over it similar to that which it exercises over its own departments, given that any private capital investment in an undertaking follows considerations proper to private interests and pursues objectives of a different kind from those pursued by a public authority (see Case C-26/03 Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau EU:C:2005:5, paragraphs 49 and 50).

Portuguese law

14 Directive 2004/18 was enacted in the Portuguese legal order by the Public Procurement Code, approved by Decree-Law No 18/2008 of 29 January 2008, as amended and republished as an annex to Decree-Law No 287/2009 of 2 October 2009 (Diário da República, 1st series, No 192, 2 October 2009).

15 Applying the case-law of the Court as referred to in paragraphs 12 and 13 of the present judgment, Article 5(2) of that code is worded as follows:

‘Section II to this Code shall also not apply to contracts, regardless of their purpose, concluded between contracting authorities and another entity, where:

(a) the contracting authority, on its own or in conjunction with other contracting authorities, exercises over the activity of that entity a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments; and

(b) that entity carries on the essential part of its activities for the benefit of one or more contracting authorities which exercise control over the entity similar to that which is referred to in the preceding paragraph.’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

16 On 27 July 2011, CHS, which is a public hospital, concluded with SUCH a contract concerning the supply by SUCH of meals to patients and staff of CHS (‘the 2011 contract’). That contract concerns a service contract awarded directly to SUCH, without application of the award procedures laid down in Directive 2004/18, in the light, according to the contracting parties, of the in-house relationship between SUCH and the public hospitals, which are the same in number as the partners of SUCH, and with a view to meeting the hospitals’ needs by internal means.

17 The contract was concluded for the period from 10 August 2011 to 9 August 2016 and is renewable. Its annual price is EUR 1 295 289, totalling EUR 6 476 455 over the five-year life of the contract.

18 As is apparent from the file provided to the Court, SUCH was created by Decree-Law No 46/668 of 24 November 1965. Its statutes were approved in October 2010 by the Secretary of State for Health. In accordance with Article 2 of those statutes, SUCH is a non-profit organisation the aim of which is to carry out a public service mission. It is an instrument able internally to meet the needs of its partners and, to that end, it is required to take charge of initiatives that are capable of contributing to the better, more efficient functioning of its partners, providing them with economies of scale, and to contribute to the financial sustainability of the national social security service.

19 Under Article 7 of the statutes of SUCH, public sector and social sector entities may be its partners, that is to say, non-profit social support institutions, including the services and institutions of the Ministry of Health and of other ministries. In addition, SUCH is to ensure that the majority of the voting rights at the general meeting are held by its public entity partners which are subject to the management, supervision and guidance powers of the member of the Government responsible for health.

20 Article 5(3) of the statutes of SUCH provides that SUCH is also able to provide services under competitive market conditions to non-member public entities or private entities, be they national or foreign, provided that there is no harm to the interests of its partners, and that it is beneficial to them and to SUCH, whether economically or in terms of technical enhancement. However, the provision of those services must be accessory to the activity of SUCH and must not represent an invoice volume of more than 20% of its overall annual turnover for the previous financial year.

21 At the date on which the 2011 contract was concluded, SUCH had 88 partners, including 23 social support institutions, all of them non-profit organisations, of which 20 were charitable organisations (‘Misericórdias’).

22 Eurest, a company active in the sector of the provision of services such as those covered by the 2011 contract, brought an action before the Tribunal Administrativo e Fiscal de Almada (Administrative and Tax Court, Almada). By judgment of 30 January 2012, that court declared the 2011 contract to be null and void because of the lack of any relationship of control between CHS and SUCH which could justify the direct award of the contract in question.

23 That court based its finding in that regard on a judgment of the Tribunal de Contas (Court of Auditors) which held that, notwithstanding the changes to the statutes of SUCH, the number of its non-public partners, its broad autonomy and independence vis-à-vis public authorities, the particular working dynamics of its management board, and the fact that SUCH is a business organisation of considerable size and complexity, did not permit the view to be taken that the requirements under Article 5(2)(a) of the Public Procurement Code had been met. That decision was upheld by the Tribunal de Contas, in plenary session, in a judgment of 3 July 2012.

25 The Supremo Tribunal Administrativo points out that a public hospital such as CHS, being a legal person under public law, constitutes an awarding authority and that the contract for pecuniary interest entered into between CHS and SUCH, an entity distinct from the awarding authority, constitutes a public service contract within the meaning of Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18. In order to ascertain whether the contract could be awarded directly in-house, the referring court notes that the ‘similar control’, required to that end by the case-law of the Court, may be exercised over the contractor jointly by a number of awarding authorities and that that control implies an effective power of intervention by one or more of the awarding authorities not only in the strategic decisions of the contractor but also in its ordinary management.

26 However, the referring court points out that the particular legal nature of SUCH, having regard to the fact that its partners also include private social solidarity institutions, raises new questions in the light of the Court’s case-law resulting from the judgment in Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau EU:C:2005:5. It therefore asks whether that case-law presupposes that a private undertaking participating in the capital of a company in which the awarding authority also participates must necessarily be profit making.

27 The referring court is also doubtful, in the light of the concerns expressed by the Tribunal de Contas, whether the requirement for ‘similar control’ is met in the present case, having regard to the number of non-public partners of SUCH, the nature of the guidance exercised over SUCH by the awarding authorities which are its partners and by the public authorities, its size and the complexity of its operation and the possibility of its acting autonomously as regards the public authorities.

28 With regard to the second condition established by the case-law of the Court, namely the requirement that the entity in question carry out the essential part of its activities with the controlling authority or authorities, the referring court notes that, in accordance with that case-law, the contractor must act as an operator whose activities are intended exclusively or almost exclusively to meet the needs of the awarding authority or authorities and any other activities are of only marginal significance. It asks whether that condition is met where an entity such as SUCH can provide services, under conditions of competition, to third party entities up to 20% of its overall annual turnover for the previous financial year.

29 Having regard to those considerations and taking account of the fact that it is called upon to rule at final instance, the Supremo Tribunal Administrativo has decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

‘1. Is it compatible with Community doctrine on in-house procurements that a public hospital, having dispensed with the procedure provided for by law for concluding the relevant contract, should award to a non-profit organisation, which it is in partnership with, and whose aim is to carry out a public service mission in the area of health with a view to enhancing the effectiveness and efficiency of its partners, a contract for the provision of hospital catering services within its area of competence, thereby transferring to that organisation responsibility for its functions in that area, if, under the provisions of its statutes, partners of that organisation may be, not only entities from the public sector, but also those from the social sector, given that on the date of the award, out of a total of 88 partners, there were 23 non-governmental organisations (IPSS) from the social sector, all of which were non-profit making and included charitable associations?

2. Can it be considered that the contractor is subordinate to the decisions of its public partners, in that the latter, on their own or as a whole, exercise a control which is similar to that which they exercise over their own departments, if, under the provisions of its statutes, the contractor must ensure that the majority of the voting rights are held by member partners and are subject to the management, supervision and guidance powers of the member of the Government responsible for health, given that the majority of the Management Board is also made up of public partners?

3. In the light of Community doctrine on in-house procurements, can it be considered that the requirement of “similar control” has been fulfilled, if, under the provisions of its statutes, the contractor is subject to the guidance powers of the member of the Government responsible for health who is in charge of appointing the President and Vice-President of the Management Board, approving the resolutions of the General Meeting on taking out loans involving a net debt equal to or greater than 75% of the equity recorded in the previous financial year, approving resolutions on amendments to the statutes, approving resolutions of the General Meeting on the dissolution of the contractor and determining how the assets are to be distributed in the event of a dissolution?

4. Does the fact that the contractor is a large and complex organisation, which operates throughout Portuguese territory, is in partnership with most departments and institutions of the SNS, including the majority of the country’s hospitals, has an estimated turnover in the order of EUR 90 000 000, has a business that includes varied and complex areas of activity, with very impressive activity indicators, and more than 3 300 workers, and participates in two additional enterprise groupings and in two commercial companies, mean that its relations with its public partners may be described as merely internal or in-house?

5. Does the fact that the contractor, under the provisions of its statutes, is able to provide services on a competitive basis to non-partner public entities or private entities, be they national or foreign (i) provided that there is no resulting loss or harm caused to the partners, and that it is beneficial to them and to the contractor, whether economically or in terms of enhancement or technical performance, and (ii) provided that the provision of those services does not represent a volume of invoicing that is greater than 20% of its overall annual turnover recorded in the previous financial period, mean that the requirement for in-house procurements, in particular the requirement for the "essential purpose of the activity" under Article 5(2)(b) of the CCP, has been fulfilled?

6. If the response to any of the above questions is not in itself sufficient to conclude whether or not the requirements under Article 5(2) of the CCP have been fulfilled having regard to Community doctrine on in-house procurements, does an overall assessment of these responses imply the existence of that type of procurement?'

Preliminary observation

30 It must be observed as a preliminary point that, in accordance with the provisions of Chapter III, Title II, of the directive, the application of its provisions varies according to the categorisation of the services in question. According to the information contained in the file made available to the Court, it appears that the services covered by the 2011 contract fall within the scope of Annex II B to that directive.

31 Such an assessment is, however, for the referring court to make on the basis of the facts of the case before it and, in any event, it is not likely to affect either the application of Directive 2004/18 as such or the application of the exception concerning in-house operations where the conditions laid down in that regard by the case-law of the Court are met.

32 By this question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether the requirement for 'similar control', established by the case-law of the Court in order that the award of a public contract may be regarded as an in-house operation and may be made directly, without application of Directive 2004/18, is met where the contractor is a non-profit association operating in the public interest which, in accordance with its statutes, can have as partners not only public sector entities but also private social solidarity institutions carrying out non-profit activities and where, at the date of the award of the contract, the latter formed a large part, although a minority, of the number of partners of the contractor association.

33 In that regard, it must be borne in mind, firstly, that the fact that the contractor has the legal form of an association governed by private law and that it is non-profit is irrelevant as regards the application of the rules of EU law on public contracts and, in consequence, of the case-law of the Court concerning the exception for in-house operations. Such a fact does not preclude the contractor in question from carrying out an economic activity (see, to that effect, Case C-573/07 Sea EU:C:2009:532, paragraph 41, and Case C-305/08 CoNISMa EU:C:2009:807, paragraph 45).

34 Next, it must be noted that the question which arises, in essence, in the present case is whether the case-law resulting from the judgment in Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau EU:C:2005:5 applies, given that SUCH it is not established in the form of a company and does not therefore hold share capital and that its partners in the social sector are not undertakings in the terms used in that judgment.

35 In that regard, it must be pointed out that the exception concerning the in-house awards is based on an approach according to which, in such cases, the awarding public authority can be regarded as using its own resources in order to accomplish its tasks in the public interest.

36 One of the reasons which led the Court to the findings established in the judgment in Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau EU:C:2005:5 was based not on the legal form of the private entities forming part of the contractor or on their commercial purpose, but on the fact that those entities obeyed considerations particular to their private interests, which were different in nature from that of the objectives of public interest pursued by the awarding authority. For that reason, that authority could not exercise control over the contractor similar to that which it exercised over its own services (see, to that effect, Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau EU:C:2005:5, paragraphs 49 and 50).

37 Having regard to the fact, pointed out by the referring court, that SUCH is a non-profit association and the private partners which formed part of that association at the time of the award of the contract at issue in the main proceedings were private social solidarity institutions, all of them also non-profit, it must be noted that the fact that the Court referred, in the judgment in Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau EU:C:2005:5, to concepts such as that of 'undertaking' or 'share capital' is due to the specific facts of the case which gave rise to that judgment and does not mean that the Court intended to restrict its findings to those cases alone where commercial for-profit undertakings form part of the contractor.

38 Another reason which led the Court to the findings in the judgment in Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau EU:C:2005:5 is that the direct award of a contract would offer a private undertaking with a capital presence in that contractor an advantage over its competitors (see, to that effect, Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau EU:C:2005:5, paragraph 51).

39 In the main proceedings, SUCH's private partners pursue interests and objectives which, however positive they may be from a social point of view, are different in nature from the public interest objectives pursued by the awarding authorities which are at the same time partners of SUCH.

40 In addition, as the Advocate General noted in point 37 of his Opinion, the private partners of SUCH, despite their status as social solidarity institutions carrying out non-profit activities, are not barred from engaging in economic activity in competition with other economic operators. In consequence, the direct award of a contract to SUCH is likely to offer an advantage for the private partners over their competitors.

41 Accordingly, the considerations which led the Court to the findings set out in paragraphs 36 and 38 of the present judgment are also valid in circumstances such as those of the main proceedings.

42 The fact that the participation of private partners in the contractor is merely as a minority is not sufficient to call those conclusions into question (see, to that effect, Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau EU:C:2005:5, paragraph 49).

43 Finally, it must be noted that the fact that, in accordance with its statutes, SUCH was able only to admit private entities as its partners is, in principle, irrelevant. The relevant factor in the present case is that, at the time of the award of the contract at issue in the main proceedings, SUCH was actually made up not only of public partners but also of entities from the private sector.

44 Having regard to the foregoing considerations, the answer to the first question is that, where the contractor under a public contract is a non-profit association which, at the time of the award of the contract, has as partners not only public sector entities but also private social solidarity institutions carrying out non-profit activities, the requirement for 'similar control', established by the case-law of the Court in order that the award of a public contract may be regarded as an in-house operation, is not met, so that Directive 2004/18 applies.

The second to sixth questions

45 In view of the answer given to the first question, there is no need to answer the other questions referred.

Costs

46 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fifth Chamber) hereby rules:

Where the contractor under a public contract is a non-profit association which, at the time of the award of the contract, has as partners not only public sector entities but also private social solidarity institutions carrying out non-profit activities, the requirement for 'similar control', established by the case-law of the Court in order that the award of a public contract may be regarded as an in-house operation, is not met, so that Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts applies.

delivered on 27 February 2014 (1)

Case C-574/12

Centro Hospitalar de Setúbal, EPE
v
Eurest Portugal — Sociedade Europeia de Restaurantes Lda

(Public procurement — Directive 2004/18/EC — No obligation to initiate a tendering procedure pursuant to EU law (so-called 'inhouse award') — 'Similar control' requirement — Contractor which is legally distinct from the contracting authority and which is set up in the form of a non-profit organisation — Participation of private interests in the contractor — Requirement that the contractor must carry out the essential part of its activities with the contracting authorities which exercise 'similar control')

1. By the six questions for a preliminary ruling referred to it by the Supremo Tribunal Administrativo (Portugal) in the present case, the Court of Justice is again asked to clarify the scope of the conditions which must be satisfied if a contracting authority is to be able to make use of the exemption for so-called 'in-house' transactions. Pursuant to that exemption, first established by the Court in its judgment in Teckal (2) and now the subject of copious case-law, a contracting authority is exempted from initiating the procedure for the award of a public contract if two conditions are satisfied: (i) if the contracting authority exercises over the contractor 'control similar' to the control which it exercises over its own departments and (ii) if the contractor carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling contracting authority or authorities. (3)

2. The present case raises a number of new issues which will allow the Court to clarify further the scope of the in-house exemption. First, the Court is asked to define the scope of its case-law, according to which the presence of private interests in the contractor precludes the possibility of the contracting authority exercising over that entity control similar to the control which it exercises over its own departments. (4) More specifically, the Court will need to clarify whether the strict approach taken in that case-law to private participation in the share capital of companies awarded contracts must also be applied in circumstances in which the contractor is a non-profit organisation whose partners include charitable organisations, in addition to the contracting authorities.

3. Second, the Court is asked to specify, in the present case, the parameters of the second 'Teckal criterion', namely the condition that the contractor must carry out the essential part of its activities with the controlling contracting authority or authorities.

A – EU law

4. Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18/EC (5) provides that '"[p]ublic contracts" are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services within the meaning of this directive'.

B – National law

5. According to Article 5(2) of the Portuguese Public Procurement Code (6) which transposed Directive 2004/18 into Portuguese law in the light of the Court's case-law, '[the rules on public contracts] shall also not apply to contracts, regardless of their purpose, concluded between contracting authorities and another entity, where:

(a) the contracting authority, on its own or in conjunction with other contracting authorities, exercises over the activity of that entity a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments; and

(b) that entity carries on the essential part of its activities for the benefit of one or more contracting authorities which exercise control over the entity similar to that which is referred to in the preceding paragraph.'

II – Facts, national procedure and questions referred

6. The Centro Hospitalar de Setúbal ('CHS'), the first applicant in the proceedings pending before the national court, is a Portuguese public hospital.

7. The Serviço de Utilização Comum dos Hospitais ('SUCH'), the second applicant in the proceedings pending before the national court, is a non-profit organisation, set up by Legislative Decree No 46.668 of 24 November 1965, which has its own statutes. (7) Pursuant to Article 2 of its statutes, the aim of SUCH is to carry out a public service mission; it is an instrument for self-managing the needs of its partners and pursues the objective of helping them to function efficiently. It also contributes to the implementation of health policy by contributing significantly to the efficiency and financial sustainability of the Portuguese National Health Service.

8. Pursuant to Article 7(1) of the statutes of SUCH, its partners may only be entities from the public sector or from the social sector which provide health care or pursue activities related to the promotion and protection of health. Pursuant to Article 7(2), SUCH must, however, ensure that the majority of the voting rights in the General Meeting are held by entities subject to the management, supervision and guidance powers of the member of the government responsible for health. At the time of the material facts in the present case, SUCH had 88 partners, including CHS, as well as 23 non-governmental organisations, all of them non-profit organisations, including 20 charitable organisations (Misericórdias).

9. Pursuant to Article 3 of its statutes, SUCH is subject to the management, supervision and guidance powers of the member of the government responsible for the health sector, who is in charge of appointing the President and Vice-President of the Management Board, approving the resolutions of the General Meeting on taking out loans involving a net debt equal to or greater than 75% of the equity recorded in the previous financial year, on amendments to the statutes and on the dissolution of SUCH.

10. Pursuant to Article 5(3) of its statutes, SUCH is able to provide services under competitive market conditions to non-partner public entities or private entities, be they national or foreign, provided that there is no resulting loss or harm caused to its partners, and that it is beneficial to them and to SUCH, whether economically or in terms of enhancement or technical performance. According to Article 5(4), SUCH must ensure that at least 80% of its activity is carried out for the benefit of its partners.

11. On 27 July 2011, CHS concluded a contract with SUCH for the provision of catering services by SUCH to the patients and staff of CHS. The contract was concluded for a renewable five-year period and provided for the payment of an annual price of EUR 1 295 289, totalling EUR 6 476 455 over the five-year life of the contract. The provision of the services forming the subject-matter of the contract was awarded directly to SUCH by CHS without initiating the tendering procedures provided for by Directive 2004/18, since, in the view of the parties to it contract, the contract was caught by the in-house relationship existing between SUCH and its hospital partners, including CHS.

12. Taking the view that the direct award to SUCH of the provision of the services forming the subject-matter of the contract entered into with CHS was unlawful, since it was awarded without initiating the procedure for the award of a public contract and thus in breach of national and EU procurement legislation, Eurest (Portugal) — Sociedade Europeia de Restaurantes Lda ('Eurest') — a company which also provides the services covered by the contract at issue and which was party to a contract with CHS for the provision of catering services, a contract which was terminated following the conclusion of the contract between CHS and SUCH, brought an action before the Tribunal Administrativo e Fiscal de Almada (Administrative and Tax Court, Almada) seeking, first, the annulment of the decision of the CHS Management Board to terminate its contract with that hospital and, second, the annulment of the contract concluded between CHS and SUCH.

13. By judgment of 30 January 2012, the Tribunal Administrativo e Fiscal de Almada upheld the application and declared to be null and void the contract concluded between CHS and SUCH. The Tribunal found that the conditions laid down under Article 5(2) of the Public Procurement Code had not been shown to be satisfied and that, consequently, the award of the services covered by the contract should be subject to a public tendering procedure. CHS and SUCH appealed against the judgment of the lower court before the Tribunal Central Administrativo do Sul (Central Administrative Tribunal, South) which dismissed their appeals by judgment of 26 April 2012. Both SUCH and CHS lodged appeals against that judgment before the referring court, the Supremo Tribunal Administrativo.

14. The referring court points out, first, that it is undisputed that, being a legal person under public law, a hospital such as CHS constitutes a contractor. Nor is it disputed that the contract entered into between CHS and SUCH, a distinct entity, constitutes a public service contract. The referring court also points out that, in order for the contract to form the subject of a direct in-house award, the two conditions laid down by Article 5(2) of the Public Procurement Code, codifying the Teckal case-law and set out in point 5 above, must be satisfied.

15. As regards, in particular, the first condition, namely the existence of 'similar control', the referring court notes that the particular legal nature of SUCH, whose partners include private social solidarity institutions (Instituições Particulares de Solidariedade Social — IPSS), raises new questions in the light of the Court's case-law, according to which the participation, even as a minority participation, of a private undertaking in the capital of a company excludes in any event the existence of similar control, (8) particularly given that, under EU law, an entity does not have to be profit-making before it can constitute an undertaking. Moreover, referring to a decision by which the Portuguese Court of Auditors refused to approve the contract at issue, the statement of reasons for which was set out in the judgment under appeal before it, the referring court asks whether the similar control requirement may be satisfied in the present case, bearing in mind the number of SUCH's non-public partners, its broad autonomy and independence vis-à-vis public authorities, its particular working dynamics, especially its Management Board, and its considerable size and complexity.

16. As regards the second condition governing in-house transactions, the referring court asks whether that condition may be satisfied where, under the provisions of the statutes of SUCH, it may obtain 20% of its turnover by providing services to third-party entities other than its partners.

17. In the light of those considerations, by order of 6 November 2012, the referring court deemed it necessary to stay the proceedings pending before it and to refer to the Court of Justice the following questions for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) Is it compatible with Community doctrine on in-house procurements that a public hospital, having dispensed with the procedure provided for by law for concluding the relevant contract, should award to a non-profit organisation, which it is in partnership with, and whose aim is to carry out a public service mission in the area of health with a view to enhancing the effectiveness and efficiency of its partners, a contract for the provision of hospital catering services within its area of competence, thereby transferring to that organisation responsibility for its functions in that area, if, under the provisions of its statutes, partners of that organisation may be, not only entities from the public sector, but also those from the social sector, given that on the date of the award, out of a total of 88 partners, there were 23 non-governmental organisations (IPSS) from the social sector, all of which were non-profit making and included charitable associations?

(2) Can it be considered that the contractor is subordinate to the decisions of its public partners, in that the latter, on their own or as a whole, exercise a control which is similar to that which they exercise over their own departments, if, under the provisions of its statutes, the contractor must ensure that the majority of the voting rights are held by member partners and are subject to the management, supervision and guidance powers of the member of the Government responsible for health, given that the majority of the Management Board is also made up public partners?

(3) In the light of Community doctrine on in-house procurements, can it be considered that the requirement of "control which is similar" has been fulfilled, if, under the provisions of its statutes, the contractor is subject to the guidance powers of the member of the government responsible for health who is in charge of appointing the President and Vice-President of the Management Board, approving the resolutions of the General Meeting on taking out loans involving a net debt equal to or greater than 75% of the equity recorded in the previous financial year, approving resolutions on amendments to the statutes, approving resolutions of the General Meeting on the dissolution of the contractor and determining how the assets are to be distributed in the event of a dissolution?

(4) Does the fact that the contractor is a large and complex organisation, which operates throughout Portuguese territory, is in partnership with most departments and institutions of the SNS, including the majority of the country's hospitals, has an estimated turnover in the order of EUR 90 000 000, has a business that includes varied and complex areas of activity, with very impressive activity indicators, and more than 3 300 workers, and participates in two additional enterprise groupings and in two commercial companies, mean that its relations with its public partners may be described as merely internal or in-house?

(5) Does the fact that the contractor, under the provisions of its statutes, is able to provide services on a competitive basis to non-partner public entities or private entities, be they national or foreign (i) provided that there is no resulting loss or harm caused to the partners, and that it is beneficial to them and to the contractor, whether economically or in terms of enhancement or technical performance, and (ii) provided that the provision of those services does not represent a volume of invoicing that is greater than 20% of its overall annual turnover recorded in the previous financial period, mean that the requirement for in-house procurements, in particular the requirement for the "essential purpose of the activity" under Article 5(2)(b) of the CCP, has been fulfilled?

(6) If the response to any of the above questions is not in itself sufficient to conclude whether or not the requirements under Article 5(2) of the CCP have been fulfilled having regard to Community doctrine on in-house procurements, does an overall assessment of these responses imply the existence of that type of procurement?'

III – Procedure before the Court

18. The order for reference was received at the Court Registry on 7 December 2012. Written observations were submitted by CHS, SUCH, Eurest, the Portuguese and Spanish Governments and the European Commission, all of which made oral submissions at the hearing on 21 November 2013.

IV – Legal analysis

19. It should first be noted that it is clear from the order for reference that it is common ground that the contract entered into between CHS and SUCH constitutes a public contract and, as such, is in principle subject to EU public procurement law, and more specifically to the provisions of Directive 2004/18. (9)

20. However, the issue in the dispute before the national court, to which all of the questions for a preliminary ruling submitted to the Court of Justice by the national court relate, concerns the applicability to that procurement contract of the exemption for so-called in-house awards.

A – The first question

21. By its first question, the national court asks the Court of Justice, in essence, whether the exemption from the applicability of the provisions of Directive 2004/18, resulting from its case-law on in-house awards, may also take effect where the contractor is a non-profit organisation whose purpose is to perform a public-service mission and, under its statutes, its partners may be not only entities from the public sector but also those from the social sector, and where, at the time the contract was awarded, some, albeit a minority, of its partners did not belong to the public sector but were organisations from the social sector engaged in non-profit-making activities, in particular charitable activities.

22. That question relates to the first of the two criteria established in Teckal, namely the criterion that the contracting authority must exercise over the contractor 'control similar' to the control which it exercises over its own departments. (10) It is therefore appropriate to set out in brief, as a preliminary point, the scope of the 'similar control' requirement, as defined in the case-law.

23. In that regard, the Court has determined that similar control exists when the contractor in question is subject to the kind of control which enables the contracting authority to influence its decisions. It must be a case of a power of decisive influence over both strategic objectives and significant decisions of that entity. In other words, the contracting authority must be able to exercise structural and functional control over the entity. The Court also requires that the control must be effective. (11)

24. Moreover, according to the case-law, where use is made of an entity jointly owned by a number of public authorities, the 'similar control' may be exercised jointly by those authorities, without it being essential for such control to be exercised individually by each of them. (12)

25. However, in accordance with settled case-law, the participation, even as a minority, of a private undertaking in the capital of a company in which the contracting authority in question is also a participant excludes in any event the possibility of that contracting authority exercising over that company a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments. (13)

26. That said, turning specifically to the question referred to the Court, it should first be pointed out that the fact that the contracting authority is set up in a form which is of a private-law nature, such as an organisation, in no way excludes per se the application of the inhouse exemption. (14) Indeed, the Court has on several occasions recognised that the exemption may apply to a contracting entity set up under private law, such as, a company limited by shares. (15)

27. The fact that the contractor to which the contract is directly awarded is non-profit-making is not significant for the purposes of applying the in-house exemption. In point of fact, the application of that exemption is based on the internal relationship which exists between the contracting authority and the contractor, as a result of which there is no concordance of two autonomous wills representing separate legal interests. (16) It is not therefore contingent on the legal nature of the contractor or on whether or not that entity is profit-making. It is, incidentally, clear from the case-law that the fact that an entity, and in particular an organisation, is non-profit making, does not in any way preclude it from engaging in economic activity and is not, consequently, of itself capable of exempting that entity from the application of EU procurement law. (17)

28. Moving on then to the inclusion among the contractor's partners of entities from not just the public but also from the social sector, it should be borne in mind that, as set out in points 2 and 25 above, the Court has established, in what is now settled case-law, that the participation, even as a minority, of a private undertaking in the capital of a company in which the contracting authority, which is planning to make the in-house award, is also a participant in any event excludes the possibility of that contracting authority exercising the requisite similar control over the company in question.

29. As noted incidentally by the referring court itself, according to the case-law, it is not possible for the contracting authority to exercise similar control over the contractor, if private interests are present in the latter in the form of a shareholding by an undertaking in a company's share capital.

30. The situation of SUCH, however, differs from a case of that nature since, first, it is not established in the form of a company and does not therefore hold share capital, and, second, as the private social solidarity institutions which constitute its partners are not public in nature, they are not necessarily undertakings in the strict sense.

31. This, therefore, is the pivotal issue raised by the first question referred: is it necessary to apply to a situation such as that of SUCH the principle developed in the case-law, according to which the presence of private interests in the contractor precludes the possibility of the contracting authority exercising similar control over the contractor, thus ruling out the possibility of making direct awards to that contractor based on the in-house exemption?

32. In that regard, I would first draw attention to the fact that the Court has reiterated, on several occasions, that the primary objective of EU rules on public procurement is the free movement of services and the widest possible opening-up to competition in all of the Member States. (18) That involves an obligation on all contracting authorities to apply EU procurement law where the conditions for its application are satisfied, with the result that any derogation from the application of that obligation must be interpreted strictly. (19)

33. From that perspective, I would point out that, according to the case-law, there are two reasons for precluding the existence of an in-house relationship justifying the direct award of a contract where private interests have a capital presence in the contractor. As the Court has in fact stated, first, the relationship between a public authority which is a contracting authority and its own departments is governed by considerations and requirements proper to the pursuit of objectives in the public interest. Any private capital investment in an undertaking, on the other hand, follows considerations proper to private interests and pursues objectives of a different kind. (20)

34. Second, the Court has also stated that the award of a public contract to a semi-public company without calling for tenders would interfere with the objective of free and undistorted competition and the principle of equal treatment of the persons concerned, in particular in that such a procedure would offer a private undertaking with a capital presence in that undertaking an advantage over its competitors. (21)

35. I consider that both of the considerations set out by the Court in relation to the participation of a private undertaking in a company's share capital apply to the kind of situation which, based on the information in the documents before the Court, is that of SUCH.

36. In point of fact, first, the conclusion that the pursuit of private interests is underpinned by considerations different from the considerations that inform the pursuit of public interests is not, in my view, solely confined to cases in which private investment is present in a company. There is no question that the participation in a contracting entity of entities such as private social solidarity institutions is driven by reasons and interests of a private nature, such as, for instance, charitable interests whose objectives, although commendable, do not necessarily tally with the public interest. Indeed, although it may in some cases be possible to describe them as being in the general interest, such objectives exhibit features characteristic of private interests, having, for instance, religious (22) or voluntary connotations, and, while they may complement the public interest, they actually fall outside it.

37. Second, since non-profit organisations, such as the charitable organisations which are partners of SUCH, are not barred from engaging in economic activity in competition with other operators and may take part in calls for tender, (23) the direct award of a public contract under the in-house exemption is likely to offer here also, as in the case of companies, an advantage for those operators over their competitors.

38. In my view, in the light of the foregoing considerations, and at least as the law stands, (24) it cannot be accepted that a contracting authority is able to exercise control similar to the control which it exercises over its own departments over a non-profit organisation whose partners include, albeit as a minority, non-public entities of a private-law nature which pursue private interests, such as non-profit organisations which pursue interests of a charitable and solidarity-based nature. It seems to me, consequently, that the direct award of a procurement contract by a contracting authority to an entity of that nature, on the basis of the in-house exemption, must be excluded. It will then, clearly, be for the national court to make, where appropriate, the necessary checks in that regard.

39. In those circumstances, it seems to me to be necessary to set out a number of additional considerations.

40. First, the fact that even the minority participation in a contractor of entities which pursue private interests, even if those entities are nonprofit-making, precludes, as the law stands, the existence of an in-house relationship between one or more contracting authorities and that entity, in no way implies that the objectives of organisations promoting social solidarity, or of voluntary or charitable organisations, may not be taken into consideration in the context of procurement law also. In that connection, I must point out, first, that solidarity is specifically recognised in Article 2 of the Treaty on European Union as one of the values underpinning the model of European society and that, consequently, entities actively promoting that value contribute to the construction of a European society in keeping with the spirit of the Treaties. (25) Second, and in line with that observation, it must be noted that social and solidarity-related considerations do not fall outside procurement law, as may be inferred, for example, from Article 26 of Directive 2004/18 which provides that the conditions governing the performance of a contract may concern social considerations. (26)

41. Second, it should be pointed out that the mere fact that the status of the non-profit organisation awarded the contract means that its partners may include entities from not only the public but also from the social sector is not of itself capable of precluding the existence of an inhouse relationship, in circumstances in which, at the time when the contract was awarded, that organisation's partners were public authorities exclusively. Indeed, it would not be consistent with the principle of legal certainty to allow the mere possibility that private parties may participate in an organisation, which is provided for under its statutes, to keep in indefinite suspense the determination of whether or not that organisation is entirely public in character. It follows that, in a situation in which public authorities only are members of the organisation in question at the time when the contract at issue is awarded, opening of participation in that organisation to private entities may be not taken into consideration unless there is, at that time, a real prospect, in the short term, of such an opening. The mere possibility that private persons may hold capital in an organisation is not, therefore, enough to support the conclusion that the condition relating to similar control by the public authority has not been satisfied. (27)

42. However, if a contract were to be attributed, without being put out to competitive tender, to an organisation all of whose members were public authorities and, during the period for which that contract was valid, private entities were admitted as members of that organisation, this would constitute the alteration of a fundamental condition of the contract, which would require the contract to be put out for competitive tender. (28)

43. In the light of all of the foregoing considerations, it is, in my view, necessary to answer the first question referred by the national court to the effect that the exemption from the applicability of EU procurement law provided for in relation to in-house awards may not take effect if the contractor to which the contracting authority plans directly to award the contract, without a competitive tender, is an entity governed by private law whose partners include, albeit as a minority, entities pursuing private interests.

B – The second and third questions

44. By its second and third questions, which I consider may be analysed together, the national court asks whether 'similar control' may be exercised over a contractor in circumstances in which certain provisions of its statutes confer particular powers, within the bodies established under its statutes, on its partners governed by public law or on the member of the government responsible for the sector.

45. More specifically, by its second question, the national court asks the Court of Justice, in essence, whether 'similar control' is exercised, on a contractor by its public-sector partners, on their own or as a whole, in a situation in which, under the provisions of its statutes, the contractor must ensure that the majority of the voting rights are held by the partners which answer to and are subject to the management, supervision and guidance powers of the member of the government responsible for health, and in which the majority of the Management Board is also made up public partners.

46. By its third question, the national court asks, in essence, whether 'similar control' is exercised in a situation in which, under the provisions of its statutes, the contractor is subject to the guidance powers of the member of the government responsible for health who is in charge of appointing the President and Vice-President of the Management Board, and for approving certain resolutions of the General Meeting, such as those provided for by Article 3 of the statutes of SUCH. (29)

47. It is, however, clear from the answer to the first question referred that it is not possible for a contracting authority to exercise over a contractor control similar to the control which it exercises over its own departments, if entities that pursue private interests have even a minority participation in that contractor. It seems to me to follow logically from that finding, which reflects a strict interpretation of the exemption, in accordance with the case-law cited in point 32 above, that the participation of private interests in the contractor cannot be offset on the basis of provisions in that contractor's statutes which confer particular powers of supervision and guidance on its remaining public partners or on the member of the government responsible for the sector. Consequently, in my view, both the second and third questions must be answered in the negative.

48. I would also point out, incidentally, that the fact that the contractor is subject to powers of guidance of a direct (30) or indirect (31) nature, which are exercised by the member of the government responsible for the sector, does not necessarily mean that the contracting authorities exercise over the contractor, on their own or as a whole, control which is similar to the control which they exercise over their own departments.

49. It is in fact true that, depending on the specific circumstances of the individual case, the power of control over the decision-making bodies established under the company's statutes may be regarded as one of the factors enabling the contracting authorities which wield that control to exercise over the contractor control similar to that which they exercise over their own departments. (32) It is also in theory true that it may be possible that, in certain specific circumstances of a particular case, (33) supervision and guidance powers conferred on public authorities which control the contracting authorities, which in turn exercise control over the contractor, may contribute to curtailing the contractor's freedom of choice in a way that makes it possible to confirm the exercise of similar control by the contracting authorities over that contractor.

50. However, notwithstanding those considerations, the existence of similar control must be determined specifically by reference to the contracting authorities, which must exercise that control over the entity to which they intend directly awarding the contract, and not by reference to the State as such through the intermediary of the member of the government responsible for the sector.

51. In the light of the foregoing considerations, I consider that it is necessary to answer the second and third questions to the effect that, where there is even minority private participation in a contractor by entities which pursue private interests, provisions in that contractor's statutes which confer particular supervision or guidance powers on its remaining public partners, or the member of the government responsible for the sector, do not make it possible to confirm the exercise of similar control over that contractor, which is capable of justifying the application of the in-house exemption.

C – The fourth question

52. By the fourth question, the national court asks the Court of Justice, in essence, whether the fact that the contractor is a large and complex organisation, which operates throughout the national territory means that its relations with its public partners may be described as in-house, such as to justify directly awarding a contract to it.

53. That question, like the first three questions referred, concerns the first 'Teckal criterion', namely the existence of 'similar control'. In point 23 above, I described the scope of that criterion, as defined in the case-law, namely that it is a form of control which is structural, functional and effective. In point 27 above, I set out, however, that according to the case-law, the basis for the in-house exemption is the contractor's lack of autonomy.

54. It is then clear from those considerations that the size and complex nature of an entity do not of themselves constitute factors which make it possible positively to confirm that an authority exercises structural and functional control effectively over an entity and, therefore, to describe the relationship which exists between them as 'similar control' within the meaning of the case-law.

55. That does not, however, mean that such factors are totally irrelevant to an analysis of whether similar control exists. The size and complex nature of an entity may, it seems to me, provide indicators and, as part of an overall assessment of all of the circumstances of the specific case, may be contributory factors in reaching the conclusion that the entity in question possesses a degree of autonomy which precludes the existence of similar control. I therefore consider that the answer to the fourth question must be to that effect.

56. By its fifth question, the national court asks the Court of Justice, in essence, whether the in-house exemption can apply if, under the provisions of its statutes, a contractor is able to provide services on a competitive basis to non-partner public entities or private entities, provided, first, that there is no resulting loss or harm caused to the partners, and that it is beneficial to them and to the contractor, and, second, that the provision of those services does not represent a volume of invoicing that is greater than 20% of its overall annual turnover recorded in the previous financial period.

57. While the first four questions all concerned the first Teckal criterion, namely the existence of 'similar control', the fifth question concerns the second criterion which must be satisfied in order for the inhouse exemption to apply, namely the condition that the contractor must carry out the essential part of its activities with the controlling contracting authority or authorities.

58. I must draw attention here to the fact that the Court has made clear that the second Teckal criterion is aimed precisely at ensuring that the rules on procurement remain applicable in the event that an undertaking controlled by one or more authorities is active in the market and therefore likely to be in competition with other undertakings. The Court has in fact pointed out that an undertaking is not necessarily deprived of freedom of action merely because the decisions concerning it are controlled by the controlling authority, if it can still carry out a large part of its economic activities with other operators. (34)

59. The Court has also made clear that the undertaking in question carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling authority, within the meaning of Teckal, only if that undertaking's activities are intended mostly and principally for that authority alone, and any other activities are of only marginal significance. (35) Where several contracting authorities control an undertaking, the activities to be taken into account are those which that undertaking carries out with all of those contracting authorities together. (36)

60. Moreover, in its judgment in Asociación Nacional de Empresas Forestales, (37) the Court held that, subject to the necessary findings of fact by the national court, that condition was satisfied in a case in which the contractor carried out some 90% of its activities with the public authorities and bodies which controlled it. (38)

61. In those circumstances, as regards, first, the provision under its statutes according to which the contractor at issue is able to provide services on a competitive basis to third parties only provided that there is no resulting loss or harm caused to its partners and that it is beneficial to them, I consider that, since it acts as a brake on that contractor's pursuit of activities in the free market, that provision cannot constitute an obstacle to the application of the second Teckal criterion.

62. The question whether that condition is satisfied if the contractor obtains 20% of its overall annual turnover from non-partner public entities or private entities, that is to say from, third parties, appears, however, to be of greater significance. In that regard, it seems to me that it is necessary to adopt a strict approach to interpreting the exemption in question, as required by the case-law cited in point 32 above. From that point of view, in a situation in which the contractor carries out 20% of its activity in the free market, and not with the controlling authorities, it does not seem to me to be possible to consider that, as required by the case-law cited in point 59 above, it is carrying out its activity mostly and principally for the controlling authorities alone, and that, consequently, any other activity is of only marginal significance. In effect, an activity which accounts for a fifth of an entity's total activity cannot, as far as I am concerned, be defined, purely in quantitative terms, as a marginal activity.

63. I therefore consider that, as the law stands, (39) it will be necessary to answer the fifth question to the effect that the in-house exemption cannot apply if, under the provisions of its statutes, a contractor is able to provide services on a competitive basis to non-partner public entities or private entities, up to the level of 20% of its overall annual turnover recorded in the previous financial period.

64. It will be necessary to answer the sixth question referred, as requested by the national court itself, only if the response to any of the first five questions is not in itself sufficient to conclude whether or not the requirements for the application of the in-house exemption have been fulfilled. In those circumstances, the national court asks whether an overall assessment of those responses implies that the in-house exemption applies in a case such as that pending before it.

65. In the light of the answers given to the first five questions, I consider that, should the Court adopt the approach which I have suggested, it need not answer that question. It is clear from those answers, and in particular the answers to the first and fifth questions, that in a case such as that pending before the national court, as the law stands, (40) that exemption may not apply, without there being any need to make an overall assessment of the responses. I therefore propose that the Court refrain from answering that question.

V – Conclusion

66. In the light of the above considerations I therefore propose that the Court should answer the questions referred by the Supremo Tribunal Administrativo in the following terms:

The exemption from the applicability of EU procurement law provided for in relation to in-house awards may not take effect if the contractor to which the contracting authority plans directly to award the contract, without a competitive tender, is an entity governed by private law whose partners include, albeit as a minority, entities pursuing private interests. In such a case, the existence of provisions in that contractor's statutes which confer particular supervision or guidance powers on its remaining public partners, or the member of the government responsible for the sector, do not make it possible to confirm the exercise of similar control over that contractor, which is capable of justifying the application of the in-house exemption.

The size and complex nature of an entity may provide indicators and, as part of an overall assessment of all of the circumstances of the specific case, may be contributory factors in reaching the conclusion that the entity in question possesses a degree of autonomy which precludes the existence of similar control.

The in-house exemption cannot apply if, under the provisions of its statutes, a contractor is able to provide services on a competitive basis to non-partner public entities or private entities, up to the level of 20% of its overall annual turnover recorded in the previous financial period.

It is entirely possible that, if that provision is retained in the final version of the new directive, it may, in certain specific cases, result in an interpretation different from the interpretation based on the current state of legislation.

25 – In that regard, it may, for example, be pointed out that the Court has accorded the Member States a power of discretion specifically in relation to the organisation of their social welfare systems, by recognising that they have the right to admit private operators to that system subject only to the condition that such operators are non-profit-making. ---

39 – It should be pointed out that, in the latest version of the Proposal for a Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council on public procurement, cited in footnote 24, it is explicitly provided that the in-house exemption may apply provided that more than 80% of the contractor's activities are carried out for the contracting authority or authorities which control it (see Article 11(1)(b)). It is clear that, if that threshold is confirmed in the directive, the legislature will have made a choice which will change the state of the law in the future. In my view, that does not, however, have any part to play in the interpretation of the law as it stands.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Fourth Chamber)

5 December 2013 (*)

(Public procurement – Negotiated procedure with prior publication of a contract notice – Whether possible for the contracting authority to negotiate on tenders which do not comply with the mandatory requirements of the technical specifications relating to the contract)

In Case C-561/12,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Riigikohus (Estonia), made by decision of 23 November 2012, received at the Court on 5 December 2012, in the proceedings

Nordecon AS,

Ramboll Eesti AS

v

Rahandusministeerium,

THE COURT (Fourth Chamber),

composed of L. Bay Larsen (Rapporteur), President of the Chamber, M. Safjan, J. Malenovský, A. Prechal and S. Rodin, Judges,

Advocate General: N. Wahl,

Registrar: A. Calot Escobar,

having regard to the written procedure,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– Nordecon AS, by A. Ots,

– the Estonian Government, by M. Linntam and N. Grünberg, acting as Agents,

– the Czech Government, by M. Smolek and T. Müller, acting as Agents,

– the Spanish Government, by A. Rubio González, acting as Agent,

– the European Commission, by A. Tokár and L. Naaber-Kivisoo, acting as Agents, having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to proceed to judgment without an Opinion,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 30(2) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Nordecon AS, the legal successor to Nordecon Infra AS, ('Nordecon') and Ramboll Eesti AS ('Ramboll Eesti'), on the one hand, and Rahandusministeerium (Ministry for Finance), on the other hand, concerning the annulment of a negotiated procedure for the award of a public contract with prior publication of a contract notice.

Legal context

3 Article 1(11) of Directive 2004/18 provides:

'"Negotiated procedures" means those procedures whereby the contracting authorities consult the economic operators of their choice and negotiate the terms of contract with one or more of these.'

4 Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, entitled 'Principles of awarding contracts', provides:

'Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way.'

5 Article 23 of Directive 2004/18, entitled 'Technical specifications', provides at paragraphs 1 and 2 thereof:

'1. The technical specifications as defined in point 1 of Annex VI shall be set out in the contract documentation, such as contract notices, contract documents or additional documents. …

2. Technical specifications shall afford equal access for tenderers and not have the effect of creating unjustified obstacles to the opening up of public procurement to competition.'

6 Article 24 of Directive 2004/18, entitled 'Variants', provides at paragraphs 1 to 4 thereof:

'1. Where the criterion for award is that of the most economically advantageous tender, contracting authorities may authorise tenderers to submit variants.

2. Contracting authorities shall indicate in the contract notice whether or not they authorise variants: variants shall not be authorised without this indication.

3. Contracting authorities authorising variants shall state in the contract documents the minimum requirements to be met by the variants and any specific requirements for their presentation.

4. Only variants meeting the minimum requirements laid down by these contracting authorities shall be taken into consideration.

7 Article 30 of Directive 2004/18, entitled 'Cases justifying use of the negotiated procedure with prior publication of a contract notice', provides at paragraphs 1 to 3 thereof:

'1. Contracting authorities may award their public contracts by negotiated procedure, after publication of a contract notice, in the following cases:

(a) in the event of irregular tenders or the submission of tenders which are unacceptable under national provisions compatible with Articles 4, 24, 25, 27 and Chapter VII, in response to an open or restricted procedure or a competitive dialogue insofar as the original terms of the contract are not substantially altered.

(b) in exceptional cases, when the nature of the works, supplies, or services or the risks attaching thereto do not permit prior overall pricing;

(c) in the case of services, inter alia services within category 6 of Annex II A, and intellectual services such as services involving the design of works, insofar as the nature of the services to be provided is such that contract specifications cannot be established with sufficient precision to permit the award of the contract by selection of the best tender according to the rules governing open or restricted procedures;

2. In the cases referred to in paragraph 1, contracting authorities shall negotiate with tenderers the tenders submitted by them in order to adapt them to the requirements which they have set in the contract notice, the specifications and additional documents, if any, and to seek out the best tender in accordance with Article 53(1).

3. During the negotiation, the contracting authorities shall ensure equal treatment for all tenderers. In particular, they shall not provide information in a discriminatory manner which may give some tenderers an advantage over others.'

Estonian law

8 Article 27(1) Law on public procurement (riigihangete seadus; 'the RHS') provides:

'A negotiated procedure with publication of a contract notice is a procurement procedure in which any interested person may submit an application to take part in the procedure and in which the contracting authority makes a proposal to at least three applicants, to be chosen by the contracting authority on the basis of objective, non-discriminatory criteria, to submit tenders and negotiates the tenders with those applicants in order to adapt them to the requirements laid down in the specifications and choose the successful tender.'

9 Article 31(5) of the RHS provides:

'Where the contracting authority awards a contract to the tenderer who has submitted the most economically advantageous tender and the contract notice provides for the possibility of submitting in the tender, in addition to solutions corresponding to all the conditions laid down in the contract notice and the specifications, alternative solutions as well, it is to define in the specifications the conditions relating to the alternative solutions and the conditions under which they shall be submitted.'

10 Article 52(1) of the RHS provides:

'The contracting authority shall evaluate alternative solutions where it awards the contract to the tenderer who has submitted the most economically advantageous tender and where the contract notice permits alternative solutions to be submitted.'

11 Article 67(1) of the RHS provides:

'The contracting authority shall open all the tenders, except in the cases provided for in Article 65(4) herein, and negotiate with the tenderers the tenders submitted in order to adapt them, if necessary, to the requirements laid down in the contract notice and in the specifications and choose the successful tender.'

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

12 On 25 September 2008, the Maanteeamet (the Estonian Highways Office) launched a negotiated procedure with the publication of a contract notice entitled 'Planning and construction of the Aruvalla to Kose section of the E263 [road]'.

13 In accordance with points 4.3.1 and 4.7.1 of Annex III to the specifications relating to the contract at issue in the main proceedings, the central reservation of that section of road was to be 13.5 metres wide from the 26.6 kilometre mark to the 32 kilometre mark and 6 metres wide from the 32 kilometre mark to the 40 kilometre mark.

14 On 20 January 2010, the Maanteeamet declared that the four tenders submitted, namely, the tenders of the Lemminkäinen and Marko consortiums, the joint tender of Ehitusfirma Rand ja Tuulberg AS, Binders SIA and Insenierbuve SIA, and the tender of the Nordecon consortium, made up of Nordecon Infra AS and Ramboll Eesti, were admissible, even though the tender from the latter consortium proposed a central reservation 6 metres wide along the entire length of that section of road.

15 During the negotiations which followed the submission of those tenders, the Maanteeamet, by letter of 26 April 2010, invited the tenderers other than the Nordecon consortium to alter the width of the central reservation in their original tenders and to set it at 6 metres for the entire length of the section of road concerned, as the Nordecon consortium had proposed. After negotiations with all the tenderers, the latter submitted their offers by 27 May 2010, the date fixed by the contracting authority, after correcting the price because of the alteration requested.

16 By two decisions of 10 June 2010 the Maanteeamet first declared all the tenders admissible and secondly accepted the joint tender of the Lemminkäinen consortium, which was the lowest in price.

17 On 21 July 2010, in response to a complaint by Nordecon Infra AS, those two decisions were annulled by the Rahandusministeerium's complaints committee, which found that, in a negotiated procedure with prior publication of a contract notice, the negotiation conducted by the contracting authority could not relate to matters satisfying the requirements clearly and unambiguously laid down in the contract documents, such as those relating to the width of the central reservation. On 27 September 2010, the Maanteeamet's director general rejected the joint tender of the Lemminkäinen consortium and accepted the tender of the Nordecon consortium, that offer being the lowest in price after the tender of the Lemminkäinen consortium.

18 Following the Merko consortium's introducing an application for annulment, the Rahandusministeerium, by decision of 26 October 2010, annulled the procurement procedure at issue in the main proceedings on the grounds, in particular, that the contracting authority had unlawfully declared the tender of the Nordecon consortium admissible and declared that tender, which included an alternative solution not permitted under the contract notice, successful and that the negotiations conducted by the contracting authority could not concern matters satisfying the requirements clearly and unambiguously laid down in the contract documents, such as those relating to the width of the central reservation of the section of road concerned.

19 Nordecon, which in the meantime had become the legal successor to Nordecon Infra AS, and Ramboll Eesti brought an action against that decision before the Tallina halduskohus (Administrative Court, Tallinn), which dismissed the action by judgment of 2 March 2011. According to the Tallina halduskohus, the tender of the appellants in the main proceedings ought to have been declared inadmissible, for the contract notice concerned had, in breach of Article 31(5) and 52 of the RHS, provided, not for the possibility of submitting alternative solutions and of awarding the contract to be awarded to the tenderer offering the most economically advantageous tender, but for the lowest price to be taken into consideration. Moreover, in a negotiated procedure with prior publication of a contract notice, negotiations might relate only to aspects that were not defined at the time of the submission of the tender or that did not appear in the contract documents.

20 Nordecon and Ramboll Eesti brought an appeal against the Tallina halduskohuss's judgment before the Tallina ringkonnakohus (Regional Court, Tallinn). By judgment of 21 December 2011, the Tallina ringkonnakohus upheld the Tallina halduskohuss's judgment.

21 As regards point 8.1 of the tender specifications relating to the contract at issue in the main proceedings, under which the Maanteeamet had allowed alternative solutions, except for the construction of the surface structures of a main road (including access roads), the Tallina ringkonnakohus held that the contract notice did not provide for the possibility of submitting alternative solutions or for the award of the contract to the tenderer offering the most economically advantageous tender. The Maanteeamet therefore allowed, in infringement of Articles 31(5) and 52(1) of the RHS, alternative solutions to be submitted. Furthermore, the original tender of the appellants in the main proceedings ought to have been rejected.

22 Nordecon AS and Ramboll Eesti AS appealed on a point of law to the Riigikohus (Supreme Court), asking it to set aside the judgment of the Tallina ringkonnakohus, deliver a new judgment and declare the decision of the Rahandusministeerium of 26 October 2010 unlawful.

23 According to the referring court, it is not in dispute that the submission of alternative solutions was not allowed by the contract notice or that the evaluation of the tenders was not carried out by the yardstick of the most economically advantageous tender.

24 While granting that, in a negotiated procedure with prior publication of a contract notice, questions relating to the conditions under which a contract is awarded may, at least in part, be left open to negotiation, without its being necessary to consider alternative solutions, the referring court asks whether the contracting authority may also undertake negotiations when there are tenders that do not satisfy the mandatory requirements of the contract documents and whether the negotiations undertaken must, at the very least, lead to the successful tender's being consistent with those mandatory requirements.

25 In that regard, the referring court notes that Article 30(2) of Directive 2004/18 leaves open the question whether, during such negotiations, tenders may also be adapted to the mandatory requirements of the technical specifications. If such an adaptation is possible, the referring court asks whether it is also possible to conduct negotiations on the basis of tenders which, in their original form, do not fully satisfy the mandatory requirements. Nor, according to the referring court, does the directive clearly indicate whether the adaptation following from negotiations must result in the tender's fully complying with the technical specifications and whether, so as to achieve such compliance, the contracting authority may also alter the technical specifications.

26 It is on that basis that the Riigikohus decided to stay proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'1. Must Article 30(2) of Directive [2004/18] be interpreted as allowing the contracting authority to conduct negotiations with tenderers in respect of tenders which do not comply with the mandatory requirements laid down in the technical specifications relating to the contract?

2. If the answer to [the first question] is in the affirmative, must Article 30(2) of Directive 2004/18 then be interpreted as allowing the contracting authority during the negotiations, after the tenders have been opened, to alter the mandatory requirements of the technical specifications, provided that the subject-matter of the contract is not altered and equal treatment of all tenderers is ensured?

3. If the answer to [the second question] is in the affirmative, must Article 30(2) of Directive 2004/18 then be interpreted as precluding legislation which, after the tenders have been opened, excludes alteration of the mandatory requirements of the technical specifications during the negotiations?

4. If the answer to [the first question] is in the affirmative, must Article 30(2) of Directive 2004/18 then be interpreted as prohibiting the contracting authority from accepting as the best tender a tender which, at the end of the negotiations, does not comply with the mandatory requirements of the technical specifications?'

Admissibility of the request for a preliminary ruling

27 Nordecon, while not raising an objection of inadmissibility, contests the relevance of the questions referred for a preliminary ruling, claiming that resolution of the dispute in the main proceedings does not depend on any answer that may be given to those questions. In particular, it contends that the main question asked by the Riigikohus, that is to say, the first, to which all the other questions are connected, is not relevant, for the negotiations were not conducted with tenderers that had submitted irregular tenders. Accordingly, those questions are based on erroneous assumptions.

28 In that regard, it is settled case-law that, in proceedings under Article 267 TFEU, the Court is empowered to give rulings on the interpretation or the validity of a European Union provision only on the basis of the facts which the national court puts before it (see Case 104/77 Oehlschlger [1978] ECR-791, paragraph 4; Case C-11/07 Eckelkamp and Others [2008] ECR I-6845, paragraph 52; and Order of 8 November 2012 in Case C-433/11 SKP [2012], paragraph 24).

29 In the context of those proceedings, which are based on a clear separation of functions between the national courts and the Court, any assessment of the facts of the case is a matter for the national court. Similarly it is solely for the national court before which the dispute has been brought and which must assume responsibility for the forthcoming judicial decision, to determine, in the light of the particular circumstances of the case, both the need for a preliminary ruling in order to enable it to deliver judgment and the relevance of the questions which it submits to the Court. Consequently, where the questions submitted concern the interpretation of European Union law, the Court is, in principle, bound to give a ruling on the substance (see, to that effect, Eckelkamp and Others, paragraph 27).

30 The Court may refuse to give a substantive ruling on a question referred for a preliminary ruling by a national court only where it is quite obvious that the interpretation of European Union law that is sought bears no relation to the facts of the main action or its subject-matter, where the problem is hypothetical, or where the Court does not have before it the factual or legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted to it (Eckelkamp and Others, paragraph 28).

31 In the present case, the referring court takes as its starting-point the finding that the contracting authority negotiated tenders that did not comply with the mandatory requirements of the specifications, which it is not for the Court to call in question. Moreover, none of the situations referred to in paragraph 30 of the present judgment that allow the Court to refuse to rule on a question referred for a preliminary ruling has, in the present case, been established.

32 The reference for a preliminary ruling must therefore be considered to be admissible.

Consideration of the questions referred

33 By its first question, the referring court asks whether Article 30(2) of Directive 2004/18 allows the contracting authority to negotiate with tenderers tenders that do not comply with the mandatory requirements laid down in the technical specifications of the contract.

34 In that regard, it must be recalled that, in certain cases, Article 30(2) of Directive 2004/18 allows the negotiated procedure to be used in order to adapt the tenders submitted by the tenderers to the requirements set in the contract notice, the specifications and additional documents, if any, and to seek out the best tender.

35 According to Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, contracting authorities are to treat economic operators equally and in a non-discriminatory manner and are to act in a transparent way.

36 The Court has stated that the obligation of transparency is essentially intended to preclude any risk of favouritism or arbitrariness on the part of the contracting authority (Case C-599/10 SAG ELV Slovensko and Others [2012] ECR, paragraph 25).

37 Accordingly, even though the contracting authority has the power to negotiate in the context of a negotiated procedure, it is still bound to see to it that those requirements of the contract that it has made mandatory are complied with. Were that not the case, the principle that contracting authorities are to act transparently would be breached and the aim mentioned in paragraph 36 above could not be attained.

38 Moreover, allowing a tender that does not comply with the mandatory requirements to be admissible with a view to negotiations would entail the fixing of mandatory conditions in the call for tenders being deprived of useful effect and would not allow the contracting authority to negotiate with the tenderers on a basis, made up of those conditions, common to those tenderers and would not, therefore, allow it to treat them equally.

39 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the first question is that Article 30(2) of Directive 2004/18 does not allow the contracting authority to negotiate with tenderers tenders that do not comply with the mandatory requirements laid down in the technical specifications of the contract.

40 In the light of the answer to the first question, there is no need to reply to the second to fourth questions.

Costs

41 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 30(2) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts does not allow the contracting authority to negotiate with tenderers tenders that do not comply with the mandatory requirements laid down in the technical specifications of the contract.

12 December 2013 (*)

(Procedures for awarding public contracts in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors – Directive 93/38/EEC – Directive not transposed into national law – Whether the State may rely on that directive against a body holding a public service concession in the case where that directive has not been transposed into national law)

In Case C-425/12,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Tribunal Administrativo e Fiscal do Porto (Portugal), made by decision of 26 June 2012, received at the Court on 18 September 2012, in the proceedings

Ministério da Agricultura, do Mar, do Ambiente e do Ordenamento do Território,

THE COURT (Fifth Chamber), composed of T. von Danwitz (Rapporteur), President of the Chamber, E. Juhász, A. Rosas, D. Šváby and C. Vajda, Judges,

Advocate General: N. Wahl,

Registrar: M. Ferreira, Principal Administrator, having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 4 July 2013,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– Portgás – Sociedade de Produção e Distribuição de Gás SA, by J. Vieira Peres, advogado, – the Ministério da Agricultura, do Mar, do Ambiente e do Ordenamento do Território, by M. Ferreira da Costa and M. Pires da Fonseca, acting as Agents,

– the European Commission, by M. Afonso and A. Tokár, acting as Agents, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 18 September 2013,

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 84), as amended by Directive 98/4/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 16 February 1998 (OJ 1998 L 101, p. 1) (‘Directive 93/38’).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Portgás – Sociedade de Produção e Distribuição de Gás SA (‘Portgás’) and the Ministério da Agricultura, do Mar, do Ambiente e do Ordenamento do Território (Ministry of Agriculture, the Sea, the Environment and Town and Country Planning; 'the Ministério') concerning a decision ordering the recovery of financial aid which was granted to that company under the European Regional Development Fund, on the ground that, when it procured gas meters from another company, Portgás had not complied with the European Union law rules on public procurement.

Legal context

3 Article 2(1) of Directive 93/38 provides:

'This Directive shall apply to contracting entities which:

(a) are public authorities or public undertakings and exercise one of the activities referred to in paragraph 2;

(b) when they are not public authorities or public undertakings, have as one of their activities any of those referred to in paragraph 2 or any combination thereof and operate on the basis of special or exclusive rights granted by a competent authority of a Member State.'

4 Among the activities mentioned in Article 2(2) of Directive 93/38 is the provision or operation of fixed networks intended to provide a service to the public in connection with the production, transport or distribution of gas.

5 Under Article 4(1) and (2) of that directive:

'1. When awarding supply, works or service contracts, or organising design contests, the contracting entities shall apply procedures which are adapted to the provisions of this Directive.

2. Contracting entities shall ensure that there is no discrimination between different suppliers, contractors or service providers.'

6 Article 14(1)(c)(i) of Directive 93/38 provides that the directive applies to contracts awarded by contracting entities which carry out activities in the field of gas transport or distribution, provided that the estimated value of those contracts, net of value added tax, is not less than EUR 400 000.

7 Under Article 15 of Directive 93/38, supply and works contracts and contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex XVI A to that directive are to be awarded in accordance with the provisions of Titles III, IV and V thereof.

8 In accordance with Article 45(2) of Directive 93/38, the Portuguese Republic was required to adopt the measures necessary to comply with that directive and to apply them by 1 January 1998 at the latest. As regards the amendments made to Directive 93/38 by Directive 98/4, those amendments were to be transposed into the Portuguese domestic legal system by 16 February 2000 at the latest.

Portuguese law

9 Directive 93/38 was transposed into Portuguese law by Decree-Law No 223/2001 of 9 August 2001 (Diário da República I, series -A, No 184, of 9 August 2001, p. 5002). In accordance with Article 53(1) thereof, Decree-Law No 223/2001 entered into force 120 days after the date of its publication.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

10 Portgás is a company limited by shares under Portuguese law which is active in the natural gas production and distribution sector.

11 On 7 July 2001, Portgás concluded a contract for the supply of gas meters with Soporgás – Sociedade Portuguesa de Gás Lda. The value of that contract was EUR 532 736.92.

12 On 21 December 2001, Portgás submitted an application for Community co-financing under the European Regional Development Fund, which was approved. The contract awarding financial aid to cover the eligible expenditure of Project POR/3.2/007/DREN, which included the procurement of those gas meters, was signed on 11 October 2002.

13 Following an audit carried out by the Inspecção-Geral das Finanças (Inspectorate General of Finances), on 29 October 2009, the manager of the Programa Operacional Norte (Operational Programme North) ordered the recovery of the financial assistance which had been granted to Portgás in connection with that project, on the ground that, with regard to the procurement of those gas meters, Portgás had failed to comply with the rules of European Union law on public procurement, with the result that all expenditure that had been the subject of public co-financing was ineligible.

14 Portgás brought a special administrative action before the Tribunal Administrativo e Fiscal do Porto (Porto Administrative and Customs Court) by which it sought annulment of the decision ordering that recovery. Before that court, Portgás claimed that the Portuguese State could not require it, as a private undertaking, to comply with the provisions of Directive 93/38. According to Portgás, at the time when the contract was entered into with Soporgás – Sociedade Portuguesa de Gás Lda, the provisions of that directive had not yet been transposed into the Portuguese legal system and, therefore, they could not have direct effect in relation to Portgás.

15 The Ministério contended before the referring court that Directive 93/38 is addressed not only to the Member States but also to all contracting entities, as defined in that directive. According to the Ministério, in its capacity as the holder of the only public service concession in the area covered by the concession, Portgás was subject to the obligations arising from that directive.

16 Since it had doubts as to the interpretation of the provisions of European Union law invoked in the main proceedings, the Tribunal Administrativo e Fiscal do Porto decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

‘May Articles 4(1) and 14(1)(c)(i) of … Directive 93/38 …, and the other provisions of [that directive] and the general principles of Community law applicable, be interpreted as meaning that they create obligations for private persons who hold public service concessions – in particular an entity covered by Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 93/38 … – where that directive has not been transposed into national law by the Portuguese State, so that failure to comply with those obligations may be invoked against the entity holding the individual concession by the Portuguese State by means of an act attributable to one of its Ministries?’

17 By its question, the referring court is asking, in essence, whether Articles 4(1), 14(1)(c)(i) and 15 of Directive 93/38 may be relied on against a private undertaking solely on the ground that, in its capacity as the exclusive holder of a public service concession, that undertaking comes within the group of persons covered by that directive and, if so, whether the authorities of the Member State concerned may rely on those provisions in circumstances where Directive 93/38 has not yet been transposed into the domestic system of that Member State.

18 As a preliminary point, it should be recalled that, according to settled case-law of the Court, whenever the provisions of a directive appear, so far as their subject-matter is concerned, to be unconditional and sufficiently precise, they may be relied on before the national courts by individuals against the State where the latter has failed to implement the directive in domestic law by the end of the period prescribed or where it has failed to implement the directive correctly (see, inter alia, Case 8/81 Becker [1982] ECR 53, paragraph 25, and Case C-282/10 Dominguez [2012] ECR, paragraph 33 and the case-law cited).

19 So far as Articles 4(1), 14(1)(c)(i) and 15 of Directive 93/38 are concerned, it must be pointed out that those provisions require, in unconditional and precise terms, contracting entities carrying out activities in, inter alia, the gas transport and distribution sectors to award supply contracts, the estimated value of which is not less than EUR 400 000, in accordance with the provisions of Titles III, IV and V of that directive and to ensure that there is no discrimination between different suppliers, contractors or service providers.

20 It follows that those provisions of Directive 93/38 are unconditional and sufficiently precise to be relied on before national courts.

21 That being so, it is necessary to establish whether those provisions may be relied on, before national courts, against a private undertaking, such as Portgás, in its capacity as the exclusive holder of a public service concession.

22 In this connection, it should be recalled that, in accordance with the third paragraph of Article 288 TFEU, the binding nature of a directive, which constitutes the basis for the possibility of relying on it, exists only in relation to 'each Member State to which it is addressed'. It follows, according to settled case-law, that a directive cannot of itself impose obligations on an individual and cannot therefore be relied on as such against such a person before a national court (Case 80/86 Kolpinghuis Nijmegen [1987] ECR 3969, paragraph 9; Case C-91/92 Faccini Dori [1994] ECR I-3325, paragraph 20; and Dominguez, paragraph 37 and the case-law cited).

23 So far as concerns the entities against which the provisions of a directive may be relied on, it is apparent from the Court's case-law that those provisions may be relied on against a State, regardless of the capacity in which the latter is acting, whether as employer or public authority. In either case, it is necessary to prevent the State from being able to take advantage of its own failure to comply with European Union law (see, to that effect, Case 152/84 Marshall [1986] ECR 723, paragraph 49; Case C-188/89 Foster and Others [1990] ECR I-3313, paragraph 17; and Dominguez, paragraph 38).

24 Thus, according to settled case-law, the entities against which reliance may be placed on the provisions of a directive that are capable of having direct effect include a body, whatever its legal form, which has been given responsibility, pursuant to a measure adopted by the State, for providing a public-interest service under the control of the State and which has, for that purpose, special powers beyond those which result from the normal rules applicable in relations between individuals (Foster and Others, paragraph 20; Case C-343/98 Collino and Chiappero [2000] ECR I-6659, paragraph 23; Case C-157/02 Rieser Internationale Transporte [2004] ECR I-1477, paragraph 24; Case C-356/05 Farrell [2007] ECR I-3067, paragraph 40; and Dominguez, paragraph 39).

25 It follows from that case-law that, even if a private party comes within the group of persons covered by a directive, the provisions of that directive may not be relied on as such against that person before the national courts. Consequently, as the Advocate General has noted in point 41 of his Opinion, the mere fact that a private undertaking which is the exclusive holder of a public service concession is among the entities expressly referred to as constituting the group of persons covered by Directive 93/38 does not mean that the provisions of that directive may be relied on against that undertaking.

26 Rather, it is necessary that that public service should be provided under the control of a public authority and that that undertaking should have special powers beyond those which result from the normal rules applicable in relations between individuals (see, to that effect, Rieser Internationale Transporte, paragraphs 25 to 27).

27 As regards the position of Portgás, it is apparent from the order for reference that that undertaking has been entrusted by the Portuguese State with providing, as holder of an exclusive concession, a public service, namely, the operation of the gas distribution network in the region of northern Portugal.

28 However, the information provided by the referring court does not enable the Court to determine whether, at the time of the facts at issue in the main proceedings, that public service was provided under the control of State authorities and whether Portgás had special powers going beyond those which result from the normal rules applicable in relations between individuals.

29 In this connection, it should be observed that, as regards the question whether that public-interest service was provided under the control of the Portuguese authorities, Portgás has argued, without being contradicted by the Portuguese Government, that the Portuguese State does not hold a majority or the entirety of its share capital and that the Portuguese State may neither appoint members to its management and supervisory bodies nor issue instructions concerning the operation of its public service activity. However, it is not clear from the documents before the Court whether those circumstances were satisfied at the time of the facts at issue in the main proceedings.

30 As to whether Portgás had special powers going beyond those which result from the normal rules applicable in relations between individuals, it should be observed that, although that undertaking enjoyed, pursuant to the concession contract, special and exclusive rights, that does not mean, as the Advocate General has noted in point 39 of his Opinion, that it had such special powers. The fact that Portgás could request that the expropriations necessary for the establishment and operation of the infrastructures be carried out, without, however, being able itself to do so, is not sufficient, in itself, for a finding that Portgás had special powers going beyond those which result from the normal rules applicable in relations between individuals.

31 In those circumstances, is for the referring court to establish whether, at the time of the facts at issue in the main proceedings, Portgás was a body which had been given responsibility for providing, under the control of a public authority, a public-interest service and whether that undertaking had, for that purpose, such special powers.

32 On the assumption that Portgás featured among the entities against which, pursuant to the case-law cited in paragraph 24, the provisions of Directive 93/38 may be relied on by an individual, it is necessary to examine whether those provisions could also be relied on against Portgás by the Portuguese authorities.

33 In this connection, it should be observed that, although the Court has held that unconditional and sufficiently precise provisions of a directive may be relied on by individuals against a body which has been given responsibility, under the control of the State, for a public-interest service and which has, for that purpose, special powers (see, to that effect, Foster and Others, paragraphs 18 and 20, and Dominguez, paragraphs 38 and 39 and the case-law cited), the case in the main proceedings has arisen in a context different from the context of that case-law.

34 In the context of the present case, it should be recalled that, according to the case-law of the Court, the obligation on a Member State to take all the measures necessary to achieve the result prescribed by a directive is a binding obligation imposed by the third paragraph of Article 288 TFEU and by the directive itself. That duty to take all appropriate measures, whether general or particular, is binding on all the authorities of the Member States (see Case C-129/96 Inter-Environnement Wallonie [1997] ECR I-7411, paragraph 40 and the case-law cited) as well as on bodies which, under the control of those authorities, have been given responsibility for a public-interest service and which have, for that purpose, special powers. It follows that the authorities of the Member States must be in a position to ensure that such bodies comply with the provisions of Directive 93/38.

35 It would be contradictory to rule that State authorities and bodies satisfying the conditions set out in paragraph 24 of the present judgment are required to apply Directive 93/38, while denying those authorities the possibility to ensure compliance, if necessary before national courts, with the provisions of that directive by a body satisfying those conditions when that body must itself also comply with Directive 93/38.

36 Furthermore, the Member States would be able to take advantage of their own failure to comply with European Union law in failing correctly to transpose a directive into national law if compliance with the provisions of Directive 93/38 by such bodies could not be ensured on the initiative of a State authority.

37 Lastly, that approach would make it possible for a private competitor to rely on the provisions of Directive 93/38 against a contracting entity which satisfies the criteria set out in paragraph 24 of the present judgment, whereas State authorities could not rely on the obligations flowing from that directive against such an entity. Consequently, whether or not such a contracting entity would be required to comply with the provisions of Directive 93/38 would depend on the nature of the persons or bodies relying on Directive 93/38. In those circumstances, Directive 93/38 would no longer be applied in a uniform manner in the domestic legal system of the Member State concerned.

38 It follows that a private undertaking, which has been given responsibility, pursuant to a measure adopted by the State, for providing, under the control of the State, a public-interest service and which has, for that purpose, special powers going beyond those which result from the normal rules applicable in relations between individuals, is obliged to comply with the provisions of Directive 93/38 and the authorities of a Member State may therefore rely on those provisions against it.

39 In the light of all the foregoing considerations, the answer to the question referred is that:

– Articles 4(1), 14(1)(c)(i) and 15 of Directive 93/38 must be interpreted as meaning that they cannot be relied on against a private undertaking solely on the ground that, in its capacity as the exclusive holder of a public-interest service concession, that undertaking comes within the group of persons covered by Directive 93/38, in circumstances where that directive has not yet been transposed into the domestic system of the Member State concerned.

– Such an undertaking, which has been given responsibility, pursuant to a measure adopted by the State, for providing, under the control of the State, a public-interest service and which has, for that purpose, special powers going beyond those which result from the normal rules applicable in relations between individuals, is obliged to comply with the provisions of Directive 93/38 and the authorities of a Member State may therefore rely on those provisions against it.

Costs

40 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fifth Chamber) hereby rules:

Articles 4(1), 14(1)(c)(i) and 15 of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, as amended by Directive 98/4/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 16 February 1998, must be interpreted as meaning that they cannot be relied on against a private undertaking solely on the ground that, in its capacity as the exclusive holder of a public-interest service concession, that undertaking comes within the group of persons covered by Directive 93/38, in circumstances where that directive has not yet been transposed into the domestic system of the Member State concerned.

Such an undertaking, which has been given responsibility, pursuant to a measure adopted by the State, for providing, under the control of the State, a public-interest service and which has, for that purpose, special powers going beyond those which result from the normal rules applicable in relations between individuals, is obliged to comply with the provisions of Directive 93/38, as amended by Directive 98/4, and the authorities of a Member State may therefore rely on those provisions against it.

delivered on 18 September 2013 (1)

Case C-425/12

Portgás - Sociedade de Produção e Distribuição de Gás, SA
v
Ministério da Agricultura, do Mar, do Ambiente e do Ordenamento do Território

(Procedure for awarding public contracts in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors – Directive 93/38/EEC – Directive not implemented in domestic law – Possibility for a State authority to rely on certain provisions of Directive 93/38/EEC against a body which is a public service concession-holder having the status of a contracting entity)

1. Although the Court has recently commemorated the fiftieth anniversary of its emblematic judgment in van Gend & Loos, (2) the discussions relating to the consequences of recognising the direct effect of EU law are far from closed. That is the case in particular with regard to the scope of the direct effect of directives. This is demonstrated in the present case, which presents the Court with a further opportunity to set out the requirements for being able to rely on a directive which has not been implemented in domestic law.

2. More specifically, the present case raises the question as to whether and, as the case may be, under what circumstances the State may, as against a body which is a public service concession-holder and also has the status of a contracting entity, rely on a number of provisions of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, (3) as amended by Directive 98/4/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 16 February 1998, (4) where that measure has not been transposed into domestic law within the prescribed period.

I – Legal framework

3. Article 2(1) of Directive 93/38 is worded as follows:

‘This Directive shall apply to contracting entities which:

(a) are public authorities or public undertakings and exercise one of the activities referred to in paragraph 2;

(b) when they are not public authorities or public undertakings, have as one of their activities any of those referred to in paragraph 2 or any combination thereof and operate on the basis of special or exclusive rights granted by a competent authority of a Member State.'

4. The activities referred to in Article 2(2) of Directive 93/38 include the provision or operation of fixed networks intended to provide a service to the public in connection with the production, transport or distribution of gas.

5. Article 4(1) and (2) of that directive provides:

'1. When awarding supply, works or service contracts, or organising design contests, the contracting entities shall apply procedures which are adapted to the provisions of this Directive.

2. Contracting entities shall ensure that there is no discrimination between different suppliers, contractors or service providers.'

6. In accordance with Article 14(1)(c)(i) thereof, that directive applies to contracts awarded by contracting entities carrying out activities in connection with the transport or distribution of gas, provided that the estimated value, net of value added tax ('VAT'), is not less than EUR 400 000.

7. Pursuant to Article 45(2) of Directive 93/38, the Portuguese Republic was required to adopt the measures necessary to comply with that directive and to apply them by 1 January 1998 at the latest. The amendments made to that directive by Directive 98/4 had, pursuant to Article 2(2) thereof, to be implemented in the Portuguese domestic legal system by no later than 16 February 2000.

B – Portuguese law

8. Decree-Law No 223/2001 of 9 August 2001 (5) implemented Directive 93/38 in Portuguese law. Under Article 53(1) thereof, Decree-Law No 223/2001 entered into force 120 days after the date of its publication.

II – The case before the referring court, the question referred and the procedure before the Court

9. Portgás – Sociedade de Produção e Distribuição de Gás, SA ('Portgás') is a limited liability company governed by Portuguese law which is active in the natural gas production and distribution sector. (6)

10. On 7 July 2001, Portgás concluded with Soporgás – Sociedade Portuguesa de Gás Lda a contract relating to the supply of gas meters. The value of that contract was EUR 437 053.20 net of VAT (that is, EUR 532 736.92).

11. On 21 December 2001, Portgás submitted an application for Community co-financing under the European Regional Development Fund, which was approved. The contract awarding financial assistance to cover the eligible expenditure of Project POR/3.2/007/DREN, which included the acquisition of the gas meters, was signed on 11 October 2002.

12. On 29 October 2009, following a project audit carried out by the services of the Inspectorate General of Finance, the manager of Programa Operacional Norte (Operational Programme North) ordered recovery of the financial assistance which had been granted to Portgás in the context of Project POR/3.2/007/DREN on the ground that, since that company had failed to comply with the rules of EU law on public procurement, all the expenditure which had been co-financed through public funds had to be regarded as ineligible.

13. Portgás brought a special administrative action before the Tribunal Administrativo e Fiscal do Porto (Porto Administrative and Customs Court), seeking a declaration of nullity or the annulment of that decision on the ground that the Portuguese State could not require it, as a private undertaking, to comply with the provisions of Directive 93/38. Since that directive had not yet been transposed into Portuguese law at the material time, those provisions could not, it argued, have direct effect for it.

14. For its part, the Ministério da Agricultura, do Mar, do Ambiente e do Ordenamento do Território (the Ministry of Agriculture, the Sea, the Environment and Town and Country Planning, 'the Ministry'), which is the defendant in the main proceedings, pointed out before the referring court that Directive 93/38 is addressed not only to the Member States but also to all contracting entities, as defined by that directive. According to that ministry, Portgás was, in its capacity as sole public service concession-holder in the area covered by the concession, subject to the obligations arising under that directive.

15. Since it was uncertain as to the interpretation of the provisions of EU law relied on in the main proceedings, the Tribunal Administrativo e Fiscal do Porto decided on 26 June 2012 to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'Can Articles 4(1) and 14(1)(c)(i) of … Directive 93/38 …, as amended by Directive 98/4 …, and the other provisions of those directives and the general principles of Community law applicable, be interpreted as meaning that they create obligations for private persons who hold public service concessions – in particular an entity covered by Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 93/38 – where that directive has not been transposed into national law by the Portuguese State, so that failure to comply with those obligations may be invoked against the entity holding the individual concession by the Portuguese State by means of an act attributable to one of its Ministries?'

16. Written observations have been submitted to the Court by the applicant in the main proceedings, by the Portuguese Government and by the Commission.

17. Written questions and a request for the focussing of oral arguments were addressed to the parties. The hearing was held on 4 July 2013.

III – Analysis

18. This request for a preliminary ruling arose from a dispute between Portgás and the Ministry concerning a decision ordering the recovery of financial assistance which had been granted to that company in the context of the European Regional Development Fund, on the ground that, at the time when it acquired gas meters from another company, Portgás had not complied with a number of rules of EU law applicable with respect to public contracts.

19. Portgás challenges that decision, pointing out that, in view of its status as a private undertaking, the provisions of Directive 93/38, which at the material time had not yet been implemented in domestic law, could not have direct vertical effect for it. Taking the view that Directive 93/38 is addressed not only to the Member States but also to any contracting entities, within the meaning of Article 2(1)(b) of that directive, the Ministry submits, for its part, that the directive contains obligations for all entities covered by that provision, in particular those operating on the basis of exclusive rights granted by a Member State. That, it submits, is precisely the case with regard to the applicant company as a public service concession-holder.

20. In essence, the referring court seeks to ascertain whether and under what circumstances the provisions of Directive 93/38 may be relied upon as against a public service concession-holder having the status of a contracting entity in circumstances where that directive has not been implemented in domestic law.

21. Although, as is clear from settled case-law, the issue of the possibility of relying on a directive as against an entity having the status of a public service concession-holder is by no means unprecedented, the case at hand presents a certain specific feature in that that possibility of relying on a directive is claimed by a State authority.

22. From the outset, I would point out that there is no dispute whatsoever as to the issue of whether the provisions of the directive for which interpretation is sought, that is to say, Articles 4(1) and 14(1)(c)(i) of Directive 93/38, fulfil the 'technical' requirements of being sufficiently precise, clear and unconditional so that they can be relied upon as against the State. (7)

23. Moreover, it seems to me that there can scarcely be any doubt that those provisions fulfil the necessary criteria. With regard to supply and service contracts the estimated value of which, net of VAT, is no less than EUR 400 000, those provisions impose, in particular, on contracting entities carrying out activities in the gas transport and distribution sectors a precise and unconditional obligation, according to which the award of those contracts must be in conformity with the provisions and procedures provided for by Directive 93/38 and must be carried out without discrimination between suppliers, contractors or service providers. No particular implementing measure appears to be necessary to ensure compliance with those requirements. That assessment has, in my view, firm support in the case-law on comparable provisions relating to the award of public contracts. (8)

24. By contrast, the point at issue here is whether those provisions may be relied upon as against Portgás purely in its capacity as a public service concession-holder having the status of a contracting entity within the meaning of Article 2(1) of Directive 93/38. Similarly, the question is raised as to whether, irrespective of the possibility of regarding Portgás as an emanation of the State within the meaning of the Court's case-law, it is possible for a State authority to rely directly on some of the provisions of that directive.

25. In the present case, I therefore consider that, in order to answer the question raised, it is first of all necessary to determine whether it is possible to rely on the provisions of Directive 93/38 against Portgás purely in its capacity as a public service concession-holder, and, if so, to establish whether the administrative authorities of a Member State may rely on provisions of that directive which, at the material time, had not been implemented in the national legal system.

26. In other words, after resolving the issue of against whom the provisions of a directive which has not been implemented or which has been improperly implemented can be invoked, it is still necessary to determine who may rely on those provisions and, where appropriate, on what basis.

A – The possibility of invoking the provisions of Directive 93/38 against Portgás purely in its capacity as a public service concession-holder and contracting entity within the meaning of Article 2 of that directive

27. In the present case, two conflicting views are represented.

28. On the one hand, the applicant in the main proceedings argues, in essence, that, since Directive 93/38 had not yet been implemented in domestic law on the date on which the supply contract at issue was entered into, the Portuguese administrative authorities could not invoke the provisions of that directive against it. It points out that, according to settled case-law, directives which have not been implemented cannot impose obligations on individuals. It claims that it has precisely the status of an individual, notwithstanding the fact that it has the status of a public service concession-holder. It points out, in that regard, that it does not have any rights or powers going beyond the general law.

29. On the other hand, the Portuguese Government and the Commission submit, in essence, that Portgás, in its capacity as sole public service concession-holder and contracting entity within the meaning of Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 93/38, was required to comply with the provisions of that directive, even though the latter had not yet been implemented in domestic law on the date on which the supply contract at issue was concluded.

30. It seems to me important to bear in mind that recognition of the direct effect of directives is based, ultimately, on two complementary objectives: the need effectively to guarantee the rights which individuals may derive from those measures and the desire to penalise national authorities which have failed to respect the binding effect of directives and to ensure their effective application. (9)

31. Considered from that point of view, and as the Court has consistently held, the binding nature of a directive, which constitutes the basis for the possibility of relying on that directive before a national court, exists only in relation to 'each Member State to which it is addressed'. It follows that a directive cannot, of itself, impose obligations on an individual and that a provision of a directive may not be relied upon as such against such a person. (10) A national authority may not rely, as against an individual, on a provision of a directive the necessary implementation of which in national law has not yet taken place. (11)

32. In other words, and notwithstanding the uncertainties which have reasonably arisen in that regard, (12) the direct effect of directives can be only 'vertical' and 'upwards', in that it can apply only in the case of an action brought by an individual against a State authority. The corollary of that rule consisting of the obligation of the national court to interpret the rules of its own national law in conformity with the provisions of a directive reaches a limit where such an interpretation leads to the imposition on an individual of an obligation laid down by a directive which has not been transposed. (13)

33. That limitation is, however, counterbalanced by the fact that the entities against which unconditional and sufficiently precise provisions of a European directive can be relied upon have many forms and qualities. It is also firmly established that the concept of 'Member State' against which the provisions of a directive may be relied upon is understood in a way which is both functional and extensive.

34. It covers, first, all organs of the public administration, including decentralised authorities. (14) Moreover, where a person involved in legal proceedings is able to rely on a directive against the State, he may do so regardless of the capacity in which the latter is acting, whether as an employer or as a public authority. In either case it is necessary to prevent the State from taking advantage of its own failure to comply with EU law. (15)

35. That concept covers, more broadly, all persons governed by public or private law who maintain special links with the State, that is to say, to reiterate the wording enshrined in Foster and Others, (16) and repeated many times since then, (17) bodies and undertakings, whatever their legal form, which have been made responsible, pursuant to a measure adopted by the State, for providing a public service under the control of the State and have for that purpose special powers beyond those which result from the normal rules applicable in relations between individuals.

36. The Court has thus held that the provisions of a directive capable of having direct effect could be relied upon against a legal person governed by private law where the State has entrusted to that legal person a particular task and where it has direct or indirect control of that legal person. (18)

37. However, it does not seem to me to follow from case-law that the mere fact that an entity has the status of a contracting authority, for the purposes of EU law, means that it must be regarded as forming part of the State.

38. Although, according to the case-law of the Court, the provisions of a directive may have direct effect against a body responsible for providing a public service under the control of the State, it is also necessary that that entity should have special powers going beyond those which result from the normal rules applicable in relations between individuals.

39. However, if, as the Commission stated, the status of contracting entity is, under Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 93/38, conferred only on private entities which 'operate on the basis of special or exclusive rights granted by a competent authority of a Member State', that status does not necessarily imply that those entities have 'special powers' within the meaning of the rule in Foster and Others, as clarified, in particular, in Collino and Chiappero (19) and Rieser Internationale Transporte. (20)

40. Moreover, I am far from convinced that it is necessary to extend the possibility of relying on directives by virtue of their direct effect as against such an entity.

41. First of all, it is necessary to point out that, in general, the fact that an entity comes within the personal scope of a directive is not a decisive factor in determining whether the provisions of that directive which have not been transposed may be relied on as against it, (21) since what is important is that, under the third paragraph of Article 288 TFEU, only the Member States are addressees of a directive. Accordingly, although Portgás is one of the entities expressly falling within the scope of the directive at issue, in its capacity as a company holding a public service concession which was entrusted to it by the State on an exclusive basis, it is difficult to argue that it was under an obligation to comply with the provisions of Directive 93/38 before the implementing legislative measure entered into force.

42. Next, in spite of the parallels which may reasonably be drawn, the concept of ‘contracting entity’ does not have the same scope as the concept of ‘State’, in the functional sense of the term, against which an individual can invoke the direct effect of a directive. (22)

43. Similarly, the fact that a private undertaking is entrusted with providing, as sole concession-holder, a service in the public interest is not sufficient for being able to invoke against it the provisions of a directive which has not been implemented in the domestic legal order. It is necessary to establish that that undertaking has special powers and is subject to the control of the public authorities. (23)

44. Returning to the case before the referring court, it appears at first sight from the evidence presented to the Court (24) that the relationship between Portgás and the Portuguese State authorities is not as close as that which existed in Foster and Others, between the entity at issue and the British authorities. The powers of control which the Portuguese authorities have in relation to Portgás are, it seems to me, much more limited. (25)

45. However, since the referring court has not provided sufficient information concerning Portgás to determine whether, at the material time, that undertaking had special powers and was subject to the control of the public authorities, in accordance with the rule established in Foster and Others (26) and the approach traditionally adopted by the Court in similar cases, (27) it is for the referring court to examine whether those requirements were fulfilled as regards the situation of Portgás at the material time.

46. In the absence of evidence that Portgás should be placed on the same footing as the State, the possibility of relying on the directive ought to be excluded, since, as is clear from the settled case-law of the Court referred to above, the provisions of a directive which has not been implemented cannot impose obligations on an individual or be relied upon as against that individual.

47. To decide otherwise would be tantamount to conferring a downward direct effect on the provisions of Directive 93/38 and, furthermore, to allowing the State, understood in a unitary manner, to rely, as against individuals, on its own failure to comply with EU law.

48. However, in the event that Portgás is to be treated as an undertaking having public-authority powers and therefore as falling within the functional concept of the State – or an emanation thereof – referred to above, it is still necessary to determine whether the ministry concerned in the present case is in a position to rely on the application of the unimplemented directive.

B – The question whether the provisions of the directive at issue may be invoked by a State authority against an entity regarded as an ‘emanation of the State’

49. As I stated above, there scarcely appears to be any doubt that the provisions of directives cannot be relied on by virtue of their direct effect as against individuals, since directives impose obligations only on the Member States to which they are addressed.

50. Having clarified that point, one question remains. Is a State prevented in any case from being able to rely on the provisions of a directive which has not been implemented or does that limitation cover only cases in which the possibility of invoking the provisions of a directive which has not been implemented is relied upon as against an individual? In the present case, in the event that Portgás should be regarded as being an ‘emanation of the State’ against which the provisions of the directive may be invoked, is it none the less necessary to prevent the Ministry from being able to rely on that directive?

51. I am of the view that that question must be answered in the negative.

52. However, for the reasons which I will set out below, in such a hypothetical situation, the possibility for a State authority to rely on a failure to comply with the provisions of a directive as against another subdivision of the State is, it seems to me, a problem which is unrelated to the traditional discussion concerning the vertical – and a fortiori horizontal – direct effect of directives, but has its origins in the obligation imposed on all State authorities to comply with the provisions of directives (third paragraph of third paragraph of Article 288 TFEU) as well as to adhere to the duty of sincere cooperation and to ensure complete fulfilment of the obligations arising out of the Treaties or resulting from the acts of the institutions (Article 4(3) TEU).

53. In the first place, the problem does not in my view appear to have any direct connection with the case-law on the kind of direct effect which must be accorded to the provisions of directives.

54. It follows from the terms used in the case-law and indeed from the reading of it which has been provided in the legal literature that the 'deux pôles du rapport vertical caractéristique de l'effet direct des directives' (two poles of the vertical relationship characteristic of the direct effect of directives) (28) consist, as I stated previously, in the existence, on the one hand, of a 'Member State' – or of one of its subdivisions or emanations – against which the provisions of a directive which has not been implemented, or has been improperly implemented, may be relied on and, on the other hand, of 'an individual', who alone is allowed to rely on such provisions, once the period set for implementation has expired. (29)

55. Although it is true that the Court has accepted that public authorities, which a priori may be treated as subdivisions of the State, could possibly, by virtue of the direct effect of directives, rely on the precise and unconditional provisions of a directive which was not implemented, those authorities or entities would have to be regarded as specific individuals in relation to the directive at issue. Thus, in Comune di Carpaneto Piacentino and Others, the Court pointed out that '[b]odies governed by public law, which, in this context, must be assimilated to individuals, are therefore entitled to rely on that rule in respect of activities engaged in as public authorities but not listed in Annex D to the directive'. (30)

56. Secondly, it seems to me important to point out that the argument based on the principle of estoppel or on the nemo auditur propriam turpitudinem allegans rule cannot have the same effect where it is a State entity which relies on the provisions of a directive as against another State entity or another subdivision of the State. Although that argument has some validity where the State wishes to bring an action against individuals for failure to fulfil obligations set out in a European directive, in that it seeks to prevent the State from being able to derive any advantage from its obligation of implementation, the same does not apply in the case where the dispute is between two subdivisions of the State.

57. Accordingly, to return to the case before the referring court, if it is assumed that Portgás must be regarded as being an emanation of the State within the meaning of the rule in Foster and Others, the Court is ultimately addressing two failings: on the one hand, the State has failed to fulfil its obligation under Article 288 TFEU to implement Directive 93/38 but, on the other hand, Portgás may be criticised, as a contracting authority, for failing to comply with the provisions of that directive.

58. In such a situation, I am of the view that that problem is not related to any discussion concerning the scope and intensity of the direct effect which must be attributed to the precise and unconditional provisions of directives, but arises within the context of the obligations imposed on State authorities by virtue of their duty of sincere cooperation and their obligation to ensure complete fulfilment of the obligations arising out of EU law.

59. It seems to me important to point out in this regard that, although the prime obligation imposed on the Member States in relation to the implementation of directives undeniably consists in ensuring that national law complies with the instruments through the adoption, within the prescribed period, of implementing measures which are in conformity in terms of both wording and purposes, their obligation is not limited to this. The binding effect conferred on directives requires that, quite apart from the obligation to transpose, all authorities and subdivisions of the State must guarantee the effective implementation of those measures.

60. Pursuant to the principle of sincere cooperation, the Member States are to take any appropriate measure, general or particular, to ensure fulfilment of their obligations under EU law. As the Court has pointed out, the obligation on Member States arising from a directive to achieve the result envisaged by the directive and their duty under the Treaties to take all appropriate measures, whether general or particular, to ensure the fulfilment of that obligation are binding on all the authorities of Member States. (31)

61. The Court accordingly held that not only central State authorities, but also decentralised authorities, whatever their degree of autonomy, and the courts are subject to the obligation to take all appropriate measures to ensure the implementation of directives.

62. I take the view that it is not necessary to limit the imposition of that implementation obligation solely to those authorities and that it is appropriate, in the interest of consistency, to extend it to all bodies and entities which fulfil the conditions for classification as emanations of the State within the functional meaning of the term, the precise meaning of this classification having been laid down in Foster and Others.

63. Accordingly, to return to the case presently before the Court, if it is held that an entity, such as Portgás, which is a public service concession-holder and also has the status of contracting authority, may be treated in the same way as the State, I see no obstacle to the possibility of invoking the provisions of Directive 93/38 against such an entity. Quite to the contrary: not only may those provisions be invoked against the entity, but it would also be subject, in its capacity as a subdivision of the State, to the obligation to take all the measures necessary for the implementation of those provisions, irrespective, moreover, of whether they fulfil the technical requirements for being relied upon by virtue of direct effect. In these circumstances, it must be concluded that Portgás was subject to the obligations laid down by that directive from 1 January 1998 and it could also have been penalised for infringing those obligations either by decision of the competent supervisory authority or by decision of the national courts upon application by third parties harmed as a result of that infringement. Such penalties would constitute appropriate measures for implementing the directive in question, since they have the specific objective of favouring the adoption of decisions or procedures in accordance with that directive.

64. Moreover, by invoking the infringement of certain provisions of Directive 93/38 by Portgás, the Ministry, in its capacity as the supervisory authority, is merely complying with its implementation obligation and duty to sincere cooperation, regardless of whether that directive has been implemented. From that perspective, the Ministry cannot be criticised on the ground that it has secured any advantage from the failure to transpose.

65. That cooperation and compliance obligation appears to me, furthermore, to be strengthened where, as in the main proceedings, the State authority at issue is, as a supervisory authority, responsible for ensuring the proper functioning and conformity of operations financed by the Structural Funds. As the Commission pointed out in its written observations, the management authorities which were appointed by the Member States to manage the activities of those funds have a particular responsibility inasmuch as they must expressly ensure that those activities are in conformity with the provisions of the Treaty and with the instruments of secondary law, which include those instruments applicable to the award of public contracts. (32)

66. Accordingly, if the Court were to conclude that Portgás is to be considered a part of the State, I see no reason why it should not be possible to rely on the provisions of Directive 93/38 as against it, even if the directive is relied upon by another State authority. It is true that the case-law confers direct effect on directives which have not been transposed only where they are invoked by an individual against the State or a body which may be assimilated thereto, expressly excluding such direct effect where it is relied upon by the State as against an individual. However, this does not imply that the provisions of a directive cannot be relied upon in a dispute between the State and a body in which it is implicated. The issue is no longer one of direct effect, but of the requirement to implement a directive in view of the duty to fulfil the obligations arising from EU law and of sincere cooperation which is imposed on all authorities and emanations of the State.

IV – Conclusion

67. In light of the foregoing considerations, I propose that the Court of Justice reply to the question submitted by the Tribunal Administrativo e Fiscal do Porto as follows:

Articles 4(1) and 14(1)(c)(i) of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, as amended by Directive 98/4/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 16 February 1998, cannot be relied upon by the authorities of a Member State against a private undertaking solely on the ground that that undertaking is the exclusive holder of a public-interest service concession falling within the personal scope of that directive, in circumstances where that directive has not yet been implemented in the domestic legal system of that Member State. It is for the national court to identify whether, in addition to its status as a public service concession-holder, the undertaking at issue has special powers.

For the purposes of concluding that Asfinag was a body against which the provisions of a directive capable of having direct effect could be relied on, the Court established beforehand that that body, in addition to having been entrusted with a service in the public interest pursuant to an act adopted by the public authorities under the supervision of those public authorities, had special powers.

22 – As Advocate General Alber stated in his Opinion in Rieser Internationale Transporte, cited above, at point 35, ‘[i]t is true that the term “contracting authority” does not necessarily have the same meaning as the term “State” in the functional sense against which an individual can rely on the direct effect of a directive’.

23 – As Advocate General van Gerven pointed out in his Opinion in Foster and Others, cited above, at point 22, an undertaking against which an unconditional and sufficiently precise provision may be relied upon is one in respect of which the State ‘has assumed responsibilities which put it in a position to decisively influence the conduct of that person or body in any manner whatsoever (other than by means of general legislation) with regard to the matter in respect of which the relevant provision of a directive imposes an obligation which the Member State has failed to implement in national law’.

24 – That evidence consists of, inter alia, Decree-Law No 33/91 (Diário da República I, Series A – No 13, of 16 January 1991, p. 235) and the gas distribution award contract concluded in December 1993 between Portgás and the Portuguese State.

---

25 – In that regard, it appears that the State has neither the power to appoint the managers of the company nor the ability to issue general guidelines – and in certain cases binding directions – on various matters or even the power to determine the purpose to which certain funds are to be put, which would have placed it in a position to exert pressure on the management of the undertaking at issue.

26 – As is clear from paragraph 15 of the judgment in Foster and Others, cited above, although the Court has jurisdiction in proceedings for a preliminary ruling to determine the categories of persons against whom the provisions of a directive may be relied on, it is for the national courts, by contrast, to decide whether a party to the proceedings before them falls within one of the categories so defined.

In the present case, it may seem surprising that the discussion has focussed on the question of the possibility of relying on Directive 93/38, whereas, in any event, the competent national authorities were required to ensure full compliance with the provisions of the European regulation, which refers to the rules applicable to public contracts, the binding and directly applicable nature of which is not the subject of any doubt.

10 July 2014 (*)

(Request for a preliminary ruling — Public procurement — Contracts falling below the threshold provided for in Directive 2004/18/EC — Articles 49 TFEU and 56 TFEU — Principle of proportionality — Conditions for exclusion from a tender procedure — Criteria for qualitative selection relating to the personal situation of the tenderer — Obligations relating to the payment of social security contributions — Definition of serious infringement — Difference between the sums owed and those paid which exceeds EUR 100 and is greater than 5% of the sums owed)

In Case C-358/12,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia (Italy), made by decision of 15 March 2012, received at the Court on 30 July 2012, in the proceedings

Consorzio Stabile Libor Lavori Pubblici

v

Comune di Milano,

intervener:

Pascolo Srl,

THE COURT (Tenth Chamber),

– the Czech Government, by M. Smolek, acting as Agent,

– the Polish Government, by B. Majczyna and M. Szpunar, acting as Agents, – the European Commission, by A. Tokár and L. Pignataro-Nolin, acting as Agents, having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to proceed to judgment without an Opinion,

gives the following

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Articles 49 TFEU, 56 TFEU and 101 TFEU.

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Consorzio Stabile Libor Lavori Pubblici (‘Libor’) and the Comune di Milano (Municipality of Milan) concerning the decision of the Comune di Milano to annul the definitive award of a public works contract to Libor on the ground that Libor had failed to fulfil its obligations relating to the payment of social security contributions in the amount of EUR 278.

Legal context

3 Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114), as amended by Commission Regulation (EC) No 1177/2009 of 30 November 2009 (OJ 2009 L 314, p. 64) (‘Directive 2004/18’), states in recital 2 in its preamble:

‘The award of contracts concluded in the Member States on behalf of the State, regional or local authorities and other bodies governed by public law entities, is subject to the respect of the principles of the Treaty and in particular to the principle of freedom of movement of goods, the principle of freedom of establishment and the principle of freedom to provide services and to the principles deriving therefrom, such as the principle of equal treatment, the principle of non-discrimination, the principle of mutual recognition, the principle of proportionality and the principle of transparency. However, for public contracts above a certain value, it is advisable to draw up provisions of Community coordination of national procedures for the award of such contracts which are based on these principles so as to ensure the effects of them and to guarantee the opening-up of public procurement to competition. These coordinating provisions should therefore be interpreted in accordance with both the aforementioned rules and principles and other rules of the Treaty.’

4 Article 7 of Directive 2004/18 sets the threshold amounts from which the measures for coordinating procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts which it lays down apply. For public works contracts, Article 7(c) of that directive sets the threshold at EUR 4 845 000.

5 Article 45 of Directive 2004/18 concerns the criteria for qualitative selection relating to the personal situation of the candidate or tenderer. Article 45(2) provides:

‘Any economic operator may be excluded from participation in a contract where that economic operator:

(e) has not fulfilled obligations relating to the payment of social security contributions in accordance with the legal provisions of the country in which he is established or with those of the country of the contracting authority;

(f) has not fulfilled obligations relating to the payment of taxes in accordance with the legal provisions of the country in which he is established or with those of the country of the contracting authority;

Member States shall specify, in accordance with their national law and having regard for Community law, the implementing conditions for this paragraph.'

6 Legislative Decree No 163 of 12 April 2006 establishing the Code on public works contracts, public service contracts and public supply contracts pursuant to Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC (Decreto legislativo n. 163 — Codice dei contratti pubblici relativi a lavori, servizi e forniture in attuazione delle direttive 2004/17/CE e 2004/18/CE) (Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 100 of 2 May 2006), as amended by Decree-Law No 70 of 13 May 2011 (GURI No 110 of 13 May 2011, p. 1) converted into law by Law No 106 of 12 July 2011 ('Legislative Decree No 163/2006'), governs, in their entirety, the procedures in Italy for the award of public works contracts, public service contracts and public supply contracts.

7 Legislative Decree No 163/2006 contains, in Part II, among the provisions applicable regardless of the amount of the contract, Article 38 which lays down the general requirements for participation in procedures for the award of concessions and contracts for works, supplies and services. Article 38(1)(i) of the decree provides:

'1. Persons shall be excluded from participation in procedures for the award of concessions and contracts for works, supplies and services, cannot be awarded subcontracts and cannot enter into related contracts, if:

(i) they have committed serious infringements, definitively established, of the rules governing social security contributions, under Italian law or that of the State in which they are established'.

8 Article 38(2) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 defines the concept of 'serious' infringement of the rules governing social security contributions. It provides, in essence, that, for the purposes of Article 38(1)(i) of the decree, failures are to be regarded as serious if they preclude the issue of a social security contributions payment certificate (documento unico di regolarità contributiva, 'DURC').

9 The infringements which preclude the issue of a DURC are identified by a Decree of the Ministry of Labour and Social Security of 24 October 2007 governing the social security contributions payment certificate (Decreto del ministero del lavoro e della previdenza sociale che disciplina il documento unico di regolarità contributiva) (GURI No 279 of 30 November 2007, p. 11). Article 8(3) of that Ministerial Decree provides:

'For the sole purposes of participation in the tender procedure, a non-serious difference between the sums owed and those paid with regard to each social security institution and each construction fund shall not preclude the issue of a DURC. A difference equal to or less than 5% between the sums owed and those paid in respect of each payment or contribution period or, in any event, a difference less than EUR 100, shall not be regarded as serious, without prejudice to the obligation to pay that amount within thirty days of the DURC being issued.'

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

10 By notice of 6 June 2011, the Comune di Milano issued an invitation to tender for the award of a contract for 'extraordinary maintenance and work to install intruder alarm systems in residential properties belonging to the Municipality of Milan', to be awarded on the basis of the largest discount, starting from a basic contract value of EUR 4 784 914.61.

11 The notice expressly required each tenderer to declare, on pain of exclusion, that it satisfied the general requirements for participation in the tender procedure laid down in Article 38 of Legislative Decree No 163/2006.

12 Libor submitted an application to participate in the tender procedure and declared, in the wording of Article 38(1)(i) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006, that it ‘had not committed any serious infringements, definitively established, of the rules governing social security contributions, under Italian law’.

13 On conclusion of the procedure, the Comune di Milano awarded the contract to Libor and notified it of that decision by note of 28 July 2011. It then checked the declaration given by the successful tenderer. To that end, it obtained the DURC from the competent administration, from which it was apparent that when Libor submitted its application to participate in the tender procedure it was not up to date with its social security contributions, since it had failed, within the time-limits laid down, to pay contributions in respect of May 2011 of EUR 278, which was the total amount of contributions due for that month. Libor paid that sum belatedly on 28 July 2011.

14 In the light of the infringement disclosed by the DURC, the Comune di Milano annulled the definitive award to Libor and excluded it from the procedure. The Comune di Milano identified Pascolo Srl as the new successful tenderer.

15 Libor brought an action in the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia (Lombardy Regional Administrative Court) against the decision to annul the award, contending in particular that Article 38(2) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 is incompatible with EU law.

16 The referring court states that the tender procedure in question does not fall under Directive 2004/18 as the value of the contract at issue in the main proceedings is below the threshold set by Article 7(c) of that directive. It considers, nevertheless, that that tender procedure has cross-border interest, so that, according to the case-law of the Court, the basic rules of the FEU Treaty must be complied with. In that regard, the referring court entertains doubts as to whether Article 38(2) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 is compatible with the principle of proportionality and the principle of equal treatment under EU law.

17 According to the referring court, by introducing a purely legal concept of ‘seriousness’ of the infringement relating to contributions, that provision has the effect of removing any discretion of the contracting authority in determining whether the requirement for participation of not being in arrears with contributions has been satisfied. The court considers that that exclusion is compatible as such with EU law, in that it reinforces equal treatment between the various economic operators taking part in a tender procedure.

18 However, the referring court is uncertain whether the criteria drawn up by the national legislature are consistent with the principle of proportionality. It notes that the condition of an undertaking’s compliance with its obligation to pay social security contributions was introduced in order to ensure the reliability, diligence and responsibility of the tendering undertaking and its proper conduct in relation to its employees. The referring court asks whether, in relation to a specific tender procedure, failure to comply with that condition is really a significant indication of the unreliability of an undertaking. It is an abstract criterion which takes no account of the characteristics of an individual tender procedure, in relation to its subject-matter and actual value, or of the turnover and economic and financial capacity of the undertaking which committed the infringement. Moreover, the exclusion of an undertaking from the tender procedure is disproportionate where, as in the case in the main proceedings, the infringement relates to a modest sum.

19 In addition, the referring court has doubts as to the consistency of the conditions for exclusion from the tender procedure for failure to pay social security contributions with those relating to the non-payment of taxes, according to which only those infringements concerning sums exceeding EUR 10 000 are classified as serious.

20 In those circumstances, the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Lombardia decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘Do the principle of proportionality which arises from the right of establishment and the principles of non-discrimination and protection of competition laid down in Articles 49 [TFEU], 56 [TFEU] and 101 [TFEU], and the rule of reasonableness contained in that principle of proportionality, preclude national legislation which, in relation to contracts both above and below the [European Union] threshold, classifies as serious an infringement relating to contribution obligations which has been definitively established, where its amount exceeds EUR 100 and is at the same time greater than 5% of the difference between the sums owed and those paid in respect of each payment or contribution period, with the consequent obligation on the contracting authority to exclude from the tender process any tenderer who has committed such an infringement, without assessing other aspects which objectively demonstrate the tenderer's reliability as a contractual partner?'

21 As a preliminary point, it should be noted that, although, as the question indicates, the national legislation in question in the main proceedings applies to tender procedures both above and below the thresholds laid down for public contracts in Article 7 of Directive 2004/18, the value of the public contract at issue in the main proceedings is less than the amount set in Article 7(c) of that directive.

22 In addition, it is apparent both from the wording of the question and the referring court's observations, as summarised in paragraph 18 above, that the referring court questions in particular whether the national legislation in question in the main proceedings is consistent with the principle of proportionality.

23 Therefore, by its question, the referring court is asking, in essence, whether Articles 49 TFEU, 56 TFEU and 101 TFEU and the principle of proportionality must be interpreted as precluding national legislation which, with regard to public works contracts the value of which is below the threshold laid down in Article 7(c) of Directive 2004/18, requires the contracting authorities to exclude from the award procedure for such a contract a tenderer who has committed an infringement relating to social security contributions where the difference between the sums owed and those paid exceeds EUR 100 and is greater than 5% of the sums owed.

24 It should be borne in mind at the outset that the application of Directive 2004/18 to a public contract is subject to the condition that the estimated value of the contract reaches the threshold laid down in Article 7 of that directive. Otherwise, the fundamental rules and the general principles of the Treaty apply, provided that the contract concerned has a certain cross-border interest in the light, inter alia, of its value and the place where it is performed (see, to that effect, Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce and Others, C-159/11, EU:C:2012:817, paragraph 23 and the case-law cited). It is for the referring court to examine whether there is such an interest (see, to that effect, Belgacom, C-221/12, EU:C:2013:736, paragraph 30 and the case-law cited).

25 So, although the public works contract at issue in the main proceedings does not reach the threshold laid down in Article 7(c) of that directive, it must be concluded, in so far as the referring court considers that that contract has a certain cross-border interest, that those fundamental rules and general principles apply in the main proceedings.

26 As regards the provisions of the Treaty to which the referring court refers, exclusion from a procedure for the award of a public contract such as that at issue in the main proceedings is not an agreement between undertakings, a decision by associations of undertakings, or a concerted practice within the meaning of Article 101 TFEU. It is not therefore necessary to examine national legislation such as that at issue in the main proceedings in the light of Article 101 TFEU.

27 On the other hand, as is apparent from recital 2 in the preamble to Directive 2004/18, the principles of freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services and the principle of proportionality are among the principles of the Treaty which must be respected when awarding public contracts.

28 So far as concerns Articles 49 TFEU and 56 TFEU, according to settled case-law of the Court, those provisions preclude any national measure which, even though it is applicable without discrimination on grounds of nationality, is liable to prohibit, impede or render less attractive the exercise by nationals of the European Union of the freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services guaranteed by those provisions of the Treaty (see, inter alia, Serrantoni and Consorzio stabile edili, C-376/08, EU:C:2009:808, paragraph 41).

29 As regards public contracts, it is the concern of the European Union, in relation to the freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services, to ensure the widest possible participation by tenderers in a call for tenders (see, to that effect, CoNISMa, C-305/08, EU:C:2009:807, paragraph 37). The application of a provision which excludes persons who have committed serious infringements of national rules governing social security contributions from participating in procedures for the award of public works contracts, such as Article 38(1)(i) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006, may compromise the widest possible participation by tenderers in a call for tenders.

30 Such a national provision which is capable of excluding tenderers from participating in a procurement procedure with a certain cross-border interest amounts to a restriction within the meaning of Articles 49 TFEU and 56 TFEU.

31 However, such a restriction may be justified in so far as it pursues a legitimate objective in the public interest, and to the extent that it complies with the principle of proportionality in that it is suitable for securing the attainment of that objective and does not go beyond what is necessary in order to attain it (see, to that effect, Serrantoni and Consorzio stabile edili, EU:C:2009:808, paragraph 44).

32 In that regard, first, it is apparent from the order for reference that the objective pursued by the ground for exclusion from a procurement procedure set out in Article 38(1)(i) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 is to ensure the reliability, diligence and responsibility of the tenderer and its proper conduct in relation to its employees. It must be considered that to ensure that the tenderer possesses such qualities constitutes a legitimate objective in the public interest.

33 Next, it must be stated that a ground for exclusion such as that in Article 38(1)(i) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 is suitable for securing the attainment of the objective pursued, in so far as the failure by an economic operator to pay social security contributions gives an indication of the lack of reliability, diligence and responsibility of that operator with regard to complying with its legal and social obligations.

34 Lastly, as regards the need for such a measure, it must be noted, in the first place, that the establishment, under national legislation, of a precise threshold for the exclusion from procurement procedures, namely a difference between the sums owed in respect of social security contributions and those paid which exceeds EUR 100 and is greater than 5% of the sums owed, ensures not only equal treatment of tenderers but also legal certainty, a principle which must be complied with for a restrictive measure to be proportionate (see, to that effect, Itelcar, C-282/12, EU:C:2013:629, paragraph 44).

35 In the second place, as regards the level of the exclusion threshold laid down in the national legislation, it should be borne in mind that, so far as concerns public contracts falling within the scope of Directive 2004/18, Article 45(2) of that directive leaves the application of the cases of exclusion mentioned to the assessment of the Member States, as evidenced by the phrase ‘may be excluded from participation in a contract’ which appears at the beginning of that provision and makes express reference, inter alia in subparagraphs (e) and (f), to the provisions of national law (see, as regards Article 29 of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), La Cascina and Others, C-226/04 and C-228/04, EU:C:2006:94, paragraph 21). In addition, under the second subparagraph of Article 45(2), Member States are to specify, in accordance with their national law and having regard for EU law, the implementing conditions for that paragraph.

36 Accordingly, Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18 does not provide for uniform application at EU level of the grounds of exclusion it mentions, since the Member States may choose not to apply those grounds of exclusion at all or to incorporate them into national law with varying degrees of rigour according to legal, economic or social considerations prevailing at national level. In that context, the Member States have the power to make the criteria laid down in Article 45(2) less onerous or more flexible (see, as regards Article 29 of Directive 92/50, La Cascina and Others, EU:C:2006:94, paragraph 23).

37 Article 45(2)(e) of Directive 2004/18 allows Member States to exclude from participation in a public contract any economic operator which has failed to fulfil its obligations relating to the payment of social security contributions without any minimum amount of outstanding contributions being set. In those circumstances, setting such a minimum amount in national law amounts to tempering the grounds for exclusion under that provision and cannot therefore be regarded as going beyond what is necessary. That is all the more true with regard to public contracts which fall below the threshold laid down in Article 7(c) of that directive and are thus not subject to the strict special procedures laid down in the directive.

38 In addition, the fact that the threshold for exclusion laid down in national law relating to the non-payment of taxes is, as the referring court has noted, considerably higher than the threshold for failure to pay social security contributions does not in itself have a bearing on whether the latter is proportionate. As is apparent from paragraph 36 above, Member States are free to incorporate the grounds of exclusion laid down inter alia in Article 45(2)(e) and (f) of Directive 2004/18 into national law with varying degrees of rigour according to legal, economic or social considerations prevailing at national level.

39 Moreover, this situation can be distinguished from that in Hartlauer (C-169/07, EU:C:2009:141), in which the Court held that the national legislation in question was not appropriate for ensuring attainment of the objectives pursued in so far as it did not attain them in a consistent and systematic manner. By contrast with the legislation examined in Hartlauer, the measure at issue in the main proceedings is based, as follows from paragraph 34 above, on objective, non-discriminatory criteria known in advance (see, to that effect, Hartlauer, EU:C:2009:141, paragraph 64).

40 It follows that a national measure such as that at issue in the main proceedings cannot be regarded as going beyond what is necessary to attain the objective pursued.

41 In the light of all the foregoing considerations, the answer to the question referred is that Articles 49 TFEU and 56 TFEU and the principle of proportionality must be interpreted as not precluding national legislation which, with regard to public works contracts the value of which is below the threshold laid down in Article 7(c) of Directive 2004/18, requires the contracting authorities to exclude from the award procedure for such a contract a tenderer who has committed an infringement relating to social security contributions where the difference between the sums owed and those paid exceeds EUR 100 and is greater than 5% of the sums owed.

Costs

42 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Tenth Chamber) hereby rules:

Articles 49 TFEU and 56 TFEU and the principle of proportionality must be interpreted as not precluding national legislation which, with regard to public works contracts the value of which is below the threshold laid down in Article 7(c) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, as amended by Commission Regulation (EC) No 1177/2009 of 30 November 2009, requires the contracting authorities to exclude from the award procedure for such a contract a tenderer who has committed an infringement relating to social security contributions where the difference between the sums owed and those paid exceeds EUR 100 and is greater than 5% of the sums owed.

Le cadre juridique

3 L'article 1er de la directive 2004/18 dispose:

«[...]

2. a) Les 'marchés publics' sont des contrats à titre onéreux conclus par écrit entre un ou plusieurs opérateurs économiques et un ou plusieurs pouvoirs adjudicateurs et ayant pour objet l'exécution de travaux, la fourniture de produits ou la prestation de services au sens de la présente directive.

[...]

8. Les termes 'entrepreneur', 'fournisseur' et 'prestataire de services' désignent toute personne physique ou morale ou entité publique ou groupement de ces personnes et/ou organismes qui offre, respectivement, la réalisation de travaux et/ou d'ouvrages, des produits ou des services sur le marché.

Le[s] terme[s] 'opérateur économique' couvre[nt] à la fois les notions d'entrepreneur, fournisseur et prestataire de services. Il[s sont] utilisé[s] uniquement dans un souci de simplification du texte.

9. Sont considérés comme 'pouvoirs adjudicateurs': l'État, les collectivités territoriales, les organismes de droit public et les associations formées par une ou plusieurs de ces collectivités ou un ou plusieurs de ces organismes de droit public.

4 Aux termes de l'article 2 de cette directive, «[l]es pouvoirs adjudicateurs traitent les opérateurs économiques sur un pied d'égalité, de manière non discriminatoire et agissent avec transparence».

5 En vertu de l'article 7, sous b), de ladite directive, celle-ci s'applique notamment aux marchés de services passés par des pouvoirs adjudicateurs autres que les autorités gouvernementales centrales reprises à l'annexe IV de celle-ci, pour autant qu'il s'agisse de marchés non exclus en vertu des exceptions visées à cet article et que leur valeur estimée hors taxe sur la valeur ajoutée soit égale ou supérieure à 193 000 euros.

8 Intitulé «Cas justifiant le recours à la procédure négociée sans publication d'un avis de marché», l'article 31 de ladite directive dispose:

1) dans le cas des marchés publics de travaux, de fournitures et de services:

c) dans la mesure strictement nécessaire, lorsque l'urgence impérieuse, résultant d'événements imprévisibles pour les pouvoirs adjudicateurs en question, n'est pas compatible avec les délais exigés par les procédures ouvertes, restreintes ou négociées avec publication d'un avis de marché visées à l'article 30. Les circonstances invoquées pour justifier l'urgence impérieuse ne doivent en aucun cas être imputables aux pouvoirs adjudicateurs;

9 L'article 38, paragraphe 8, de la directive 2004/18 prévoit la possibilité de mener une procédure accélérée dans les termes suivants:

«Dans les procédures restreintes et négociées avec publication d'un avis de marché visées à l'article 30, lorsque l'urgence rend impraticables les délais minimaux fixés au présent article, les pouvoirs adjudicateurs peuvent fixer:

a) un délai pour la réception des demandes de participation qui ne peut être inférieur à 15 jours à compter de la date d'envoi de l'avis de marché ou à 10 jours si l'avis est envoyé par moyens électroniques conformément au format et aux modalités de transmission indiquées à l'annexe VIII, point 3;

b) et, dans le cas des procédures restreintes, un délai pour la réception des offres qui ne peut être inférieur à 10 jours à compter de la date d'envoi de l'invitation à soumissionner.»

10 L'annexe II A de cette directive comporte notamment les catégories de services suivantes:

– catégorie 8, relative aux services de recherche et de développement, à l'exclusion des services de recherche et de développement autres que ceux dont les fruits appartiennent exclusivement au pouvoir adjudicateur et/ou à l'entité adjudicatrice pour son usage dans l'exercice de sa propre activité pour autant que la prestation du service soit entièrement rémunérée par le pouvoir adjudicateur et/ou l'entité adjudicatrice, et

– catégorie 12, relative aux services d'architecture, aux services d'ingénierie, aux services intégrés d'ingénierie, aux services d'aménagement urbain et d'architecture paysagère, aux services connexes de consultations scientifiques et techniques ainsi qu'aux services d'essais et d'analyses techniques.

13 L'article 66, premier alinéa, de ce décret dispose:

14 Le séisme survenu le 6 avril 2009 dans les environs de L'Aquila a engendré une situation d'urgence extraordinaire. Afin de faire face à celle-ci, des institutions spéciales, disposant d'un pouvoir réglementaire, ont été mises sur pied.

15 Le Comune di Castelvecchio Subequo et le Comune di Barisciano sont situés dans la région touchée par ce séisme, lequel a fortement endommagé le centre de ces deux communes, parmi d'autres. Il en est résulté la nécessité de redéfinir le contexte urbain et bâti des communes sinistrées dans des conditions qui, à la fois, soient innovantes et tiennent compte de l'ampleur ainsi que de la complexité des opérations à envisager.

16 C'est ainsi que le décret du Commissario delegato per la ricostruzione n° 3 du 9 mars 2010 prévoit que chaque commune concernée établit un plan de reconstruction. À cette fin, il y a lieu, tout d'abord, d'identifier et de délimiter les zones dans lesquelles le patrimoine bâti doit être reconstruit ou restauré et des travaux d'urbanisation doivent éventuellement être réalisés, et d'établir un état des lieux. Ensuite, un plan de reconstruction doit être élaboré en vue d'assurer le renouveau socio-économique, de promouvoir la réhabilitation de l'habitat en tenant compte de l'ensemble des données urbanistiques pertinentes et de faciliter le retour de la population, tout en identifiant les opérations de nature à renforcer la sécurité des constructions. Le plan de reconstruction doit également déterminer les opérations à réaliser, prévoir la mise en sécurité des secteurs concernés, contenir une évaluation économique de ces opérations, identifier les personnes concernées et programmer lesdites opérations en tenant compte des priorités. Ce plan doit, enfin, déterminer les modalités de l'interconnexion des différents secteurs, les domaines d'intervention, les travaux d'urbanisation à réaliser et établir une programmation coordonnée des ouvrages publics et privés.

18 Concrètement, outre l'assistance technique générale de l'administration communale, la mission confiée à chacun de ces établissements comporte les prestations suivantes:

– dans la phase préliminaire, relative à la délimitation des secteurs visés par le plan de reconstruction (phase 1), la mise en place du plan urbanistique et du programme de travaux publics, y compris la détermination des secteurs, l'identification des blocs de bâtiments concernés et des interventions publiques;

– dans la phase préparatoire, relative à la détermination des blocs de bâtiments concernés et des interventions publiques (phase 2), l'élaboration du projet préliminaire avec établissement d'une planimétrie, de coupes et de perspectives, l'étude de faisabilité, le plan d'évacuation des décombres;

– dans la phase d'élaboration et d'approbation du plan de reconstruction, relative à la définition des critères et des modalités d'intervention (phase 3), la rédaction du plan de reconstruction, y compris les critères et les modalités d'intervention et l'étude de faisabilité, ainsi que, à l'échelle de la zone globale, la voirie, le schéma structurel et le schéma directeur, et

– dans la phase de mise en œuvre du plan de reconstruction, relative à la coordination, à la vérification et au contrôle (phase 4), la finalisation du plan de reconstruction en adéquation avec les instruments de planification et de surveillance existants.

21 Le Consiglio Nazionale degli Ingegneri a introduit un recours contre chacune de ces délibérations et demande que les conventions concernées soient déclarées invalides pour contrariété avec le droit de l'Union.

22 Le Tribunale amministrativo regionale per l'Abruzzo (tribunal administratif régional des Abruzzes) considère que ce droit autorise, sous certaines conditions, un pouvoir adjudicateur à conclure un contrat à titre onéreux avec une autre administration publique sans recourir à une procédure d'appel d'offres public, se référant à cet égard, notamment, à l'arrêt du 9 juin 2009, Commission/Allemagne (C-480/06, Rec. p. I-4747), et que le droit italien reconnaît lui aussi cette possibilité par l'article 15 de la loi n° 241 du 7 août 1990, qui permet aux administrations publiques de conclure entre elles des accords afin de régir, de concert, l'accomplissement d'activités d'intérêt commun.

23 Cette juridiction souligne que les accords visés à cet article ont pour objectif la coordination de l'action des différents appareils administratifs, chacun porteur d'un intérêt public spécifique, dans le cadre d'une collaboration destinée à assurer la gestion des services publics la plus efficace et économe possible, et que la jurisprudence est actuellement fixée en ce sens que la notion d'intérêt commun est plutôt large, correspondant à la poursuite de l'intérêt public de la part des entités participant à l'accord conformément à leurs objectifs institutionnels, même en dehors de l'hypothèse de fonctions communes. Partant, il serait possible de recourir audit article dès lors qu'une administration publique confie, à titre onéreux ? pour autant toutefois que la contrepartie soit limitée au remboursement des coûts ?, à une autre administration publique, un service relevant des missions de cette dernière.

reconstruction et visent à fournir le soutien technique et administratif nécessaire aux structures institutionnelles compliquées».

25 Sur ces bases, la juridiction de renvoi est amenée à constater que les accords en cause au principal paraissent réguliers. En effet, ils visent à la poursuite d'un intérêt commun, au sens de la législation italienne, puisque leur objet correspond, dans le chef des communes, aux obligations et aux objectifs énoncés dans la réglementation extraordinaire mentionnée au point 16 de la présente ordonnance et, dans le chef des établissements universitaires concernés, à la fonction de recherche et de conseil liée à leur mission scientifique et didactique de base, fonction autorisée par le décret n° 382/1980. Est spécialement visée, à cet égard, «l'extraordinaire unicité des activités à exécuter, qui intéressent entre autres la recherche scientifique appliquée», ce qui permettrait à ces établissements universitaires d'étudier la problématique scientifique liée à la planification et à la reconstruction d'un territoire touché par un séisme, en rapport étroit avec leur domaine de compétence. En outre, si la participation éventuelle de personnes privées aux activités visées par lesdits accords n'est pas exclue, cette participation supposerait que ces personnes soient désignées à l'issue de procédures de concours ordinaires.

26 Cette juridiction nourrit cependant des doutes quant à la compatibilité avec la directive 2004/18 de la conclusion de tels accords entre des administrations publiques dès lors que l'une d'elles est susceptible de revêtir en même temps la qualité d'opérateur économique, indépendamment du fait que ces accords puissent être caractérisés par des objectifs et des intérêts publics évidents, comme c'est le cas des conventions en cause au principal. Or, ladite juridiction relève, par référence à l'arrêt du 23 décembre 2009, CoNISMa (C-305/08, Rec. p. I-12129), que les universités publiques italiennes peuvent être considérées comme des opérateurs économiques et sont donc admises à prendre part à des appels d'offres, de sorte que les contrats qu'elles concluent avec des pouvoirs adjudicateurs auraient vocation à rentrer dans le champ d'application du droit de l'Union en matière de marchés publics.

28 La juridiction de renvoi souligne cependant le fait que ces missions présentent un intérêt public pour les administrations contractantes et s'inscrivent dans un contexte factuel et réglementaire extraordinaire.

29 Dans ces conditions, le Tribunale amministrativo regionale per l'Abruzzo a décidé de surseoir à statuer et de poser à la Cour les questions préjudicielles suivantes:

«1) La directive [2004/18], et en particulier son article 1er, paragraphe 2, sous a) et d), ses articles 2 et 28 ainsi que son annexe II[A], catégories 8 et 12, s'opposent-ils à une réglementation nationale qui autorise la passation sous une forme écrite, entre deux pouvoirs adjudicateurs, d'accords portant sur des activités de soutien aux communes concernant l'étude, l'analyse et [l'élaboration du] projet de reconstruction des centres historiques du Comune di Barisciano et du Comune di Castelvecchio Subequo, telles que précisées dans le chapitre technique annexé [aux conventions en cause au principal] et identifiées par la législation sectorielle, nationale et régionale, en échange d'une contrepartie dont le caractère de rémunération n'est pas évident, dès lors que l'administration [devant exécuter cette mission] est susceptible de revêtir la qualité d'opérateur économique?

2) La directive [2004/18], et en particulier [les dispositions susmentionnées de celle-ci,] s'opposent-[elles] à une réglementation nationale [telle que celle susmentionnée] dès lors que le recours à l'attribution directe est expressément justifié à l'aune des législations primaire et secondaire qui ont été adoptées à la suite [du séisme survenu à L'Aquila le 6 avril 2009] et compte tenu des intérêts publics spécifiques qui ont été décrits?»

Sur les questions préjudicielles

32 Par ses questions, qu'il y a lieu d'examiner ensemble, la juridiction de renvoi demande, en substance, si la directive 2004/18 doit être interprétée en ce sens qu'elle s'oppose à une réglementation nationale qui autorise la conclusion, sans appel à la concurrence, d'un contrat par lequel des entités publiques instituent entre elles une coopération telle que celles en cause au principal, eu égard, le cas échéant, à un contexte factuel et réglementaire extraordinaire, tel que l'endommagement important d'une partie significative des bâtiments de plusieurs localités à la suite d'un séisme et les dispositions exceptionnelles adoptées en vue de mettre en œuvre les mesures nécessaires pour parer aux conséquences de ce séisme.

33 À titre liminaire, il y a lieu de relever que, conformément à l'appréciation opérée par la juridiction de renvoi, les conventions en cause au principal portent sur des prestations dont la valeur excède le seuil d'application de la directive 2004/18.

34 Afin de répondre aux questions posées, il importe de relever que, conformément à l'article 1er, paragraphe 2, de la directive 2004/18, un contrat à titre onéreux conclu par écrit entre un opérateur économique et un pouvoir adjudicateur, et ayant pour objet la prestation de services visés à l'annexe II A de cette directive constitue un marché public.

35 À cet égard, premièrement, il est sans incidence, d'une part, que cet opérateur soit lui-même un pouvoir adjudicateur et, d'autre part, que l'entité concernée ne poursuive pas à titre principal une finalité lucrative, qu'elle n'ait pas une structure d'entreprise ou encore qu'elle n'assure pas une présence continue sur le marché (arrêt du 19 décembre 2012, Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce e.a., C-159/11, non encore publié au Recueil, point 26).

39 Sous réserve des vérifications qui incombent à la juridiction de renvoi, il apparaît que les contrats en cause au principal présentent l'ensemble des caractéristiques énoncées aux points 34 à 38 de la présente ordonnance.

42 Il est cependant constant que cette exception n'est pas applicable dans un contexte tel que celui des affaires au principal, dès lors qu'il ressort de la décision de renvoi que les communes concernées n'exercent pas de contrôle sur les établissements universitaires qui sont leur cocontractant respectif.

46 À cet égard, il paraît résulter des indications contenues dans la décision de renvoi que ces contrats comportent un ensemble d'aspects matériels dont une partie importante, voire prépondérante, correspond à des activités généralement effectuées par des ingénieurs ou des architectes et qui, bien qu'elles soient basées sur un fondement scientifique, ne s'apparentent cependant pas à la recherche scientifique. Par conséquent, contrairement à ce que la Cour a pu constater au point 37 de l'arrêt Commission/Allemagne, précité, la mission de service public qui fait l'objet de la coopération entre des entités publiques instaurée par lesdits contrats ne paraît pas assurer la mise en œuvre d'une mission de service public qui est commune aux établissements universitaires et aux communes en cause au principal.

48 S'agissant de la nature des faits dans le prolongement desquels se situent les marchés en cause au principal, il est évident que l'endommagement important d'une partie significative des bâtiments de plusieurs localités à la suite d'un séisme de grande ampleur constitue un événement extraordinaire et imprévisible.

49 Toutefois, il y a lieu de souligner que des circonstances extraordinaires et imprévisibles ne peuvent justifier l'attribution directe d'un marché devant normalement faire l'objet d'une procédure ouverte, d'une procédure restreinte ou d'une procédure négociée avec publication d'un avis de marché que dans les conditions prévues à l'article 31, point 1, sous c), de la directive 2004/18.

50 Il résulte d'une jurisprudence constante que le recours à cette dérogation est soumis à trois conditions cumulatives, à savoir l'existence, outre d'un événement imprévisible, d'une urgence impérieuse incompatible avec les délais exigés par d'autres procédures et d'un lien de causalité entre l'événement imprévisible et l'urgence impérieuse qui en résulte [voir notamment, s'agissant de la directive 93/38/CEE du Conseil, du 14 juin 1993, portant coordination des procédures de passation des marchés dans les secteurs de l'eau, de l'énergie, des transports et des télécommunications (JO L 199, p. 84), arrêt du 2 juin 2005, Commission/Grèce, C-394/02, Rec. p. I-4713, point 40 et jurisprudence citée].

51 Eu égard à son caractère dérogatoire, cette disposition doit faire l'objet d'une interprétation stricte (voir notamment, s'agissant de la directive 93/38, arrêt du 4 juin 2009, Commission/Grèce, C-250/07, Rec. p. I-4369, point 34 et jurisprudence citée).

52 C'est ainsi, notamment, que, ne pouvant procéder à l'attribution directe d'un marché en cas d'urgence impérieuse que dans la mesure où cela est strictement nécessaire, un pouvoir adjudicateur ne saurait se prévaloir de la dérogation prévue à l'article 31, point 1, sous c), de la directive 2004/18 lorsqu'il lui aurait été matériellement possible de recourir à la procédure accélérée prévue à l'article 38, paragraphe 8, de celle-ci [voir notamment, s'agissant de la directive 92/50/CEE du Conseil, du 18 juin 1992, portant coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de services (JO L 209, p. 1), arrêt du 18 novembre 2004, Commission/Allemagne, C-126/03, Rec. p. I-11197, point 23 et jurisprudence citée] et, a fortiori, à la procédure normale telle qu'organisée par les paragraphes 1 à 7 de cet article (voir, s'agissant de la directive 93/38, arrêt du 2 juin 2005, Commission/Grèce, précité, point 44).

53 Partant, une réglementation nationale ne saurait autoriser le recours à une attribution directe de marchés publics en cas d'urgence impérieuse que dans le respect des conditions prévues à l'article 31, point 1, sous c), de la directive 2004/18, telles qu'explicitées aux points 50 à 52 de la présente ordonnance (voir, par analogie, arrêt du 28 mars 1985, Commission/Italie, 274/83, Rec. p. 1077, points 34 et 35), cette réglementation fût-elle motivée par un événement extraordinaire et imprévisible.

55 Il convient donc de répondre aux questions posées que la directive 2004/18 s'oppose à une réglementation nationale qui autorise la conclusion, sans appel à la concurrence, d'un contrat par lequel des entités publiques instituent entre elles une coopération lorsque – ce qu'il appartient à la juridiction de renvoi de vérifier – un tel contrat n'a pas pour objet d'assurer la mise en œuvre d'une mission de service public commune à ces entités, qu'il n'est pas exclusivement régi par des considérations et des exigences propres à la poursuite d'objectifs d'intérêt public ou qu'il est de nature à placer un prestataire privé dans une situation privilégiée par rapport à ses concurrents. Le fait qu'un tel contrat intervienne dans une situation extraordinaire ne peut être pris en considération que pour autant que le pouvoir adjudicateur établisse que sont réunies les conditions d'application de l'article 31, point 1, sous c), de cette directive.

Par ces motifs, la Cour (dixième chambre) dit pour droit:

La directive 2004/18/CE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 31 mars 2004, relative à la coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de travaux, de fournitures et de services, telle que modifiée par le règlement (CE) n° 1177/2009 de la Commission, du 30 novembre 2009, s'oppose à une réglementation nationale qui autorise la conclusion, sans appel à la concurrence, d’un contrat par lequel des entités publiques instituent entre elles une coopération lorsque – ce qu’il appartient à la juridiction de renvoi de vérifier – un tel contrat n’a pas pour objet d’assurer la mise en œuvre d’une mission de service public commune à ces entités, qu’il n’est pas exclusivement régi par des considérations et des exigences propres à la poursuite d’objectifs d’intérêt public ou qu’il est de nature à placer un prestataire privé dans une situation privilégiée par rapport à ses concurrents. Le fait qu’un tel contrat intervienne dans une situation extraordinaire ne peut être pris en considération que pour autant que le pouvoir adjudicateur établisse que sont réunies les conditions d’application de l’article 31, point 1, sous c), de cette directive.

10 October 2013 (*)

(Request for a preliminary ruling – Public procurement – Directive 2004/18/EC – Principle of equal treatment – Restricted procedure – Contract notice – Requirement for a copy of the most recent published balance sheet to be enclosed with the application – Copies of balance sheets not enclosed with some candidates' applications – Right of the contracting authority to ask those candidates to provide copies of those balance sheets after the deadline for filing applications)

In Case C-336/12,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Østre Landsret (Denmark), made by decision of 4 July 2012, received at the Court on 16 July 2012, in the proceedings

Ministeriet for Forskning, Innovation og Videregående Uddannelser

Manova A/S,

THE COURT (Tenth Chamber), composed of E. Juhász, President of the Tenth Chamber, acting for the President of the Chamber, A. Rosas, and D. Šváby (Rapporteur), Judges,

Advocate General: Y. Bot,

Registrar: M. Aleksejev, Administrator,

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 6 June 2013,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– Manova A/S, by J. Munk Plum, advokat,

– the Danish Government, by V. Pasternak Jørgensen, acting as Agent, assisted by R. Holdgaard, advokat, – the Italian Government, by G. Palmieri, acting as Agent, assisted by S. Fiorentino, avvocato dello Stato, – the Netherlands Government, by B. Koopman and C. Wissels, acting as Agents, – the European Commission, by U. Nielsen and A. Tokár, acting as Agents, having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to proceed to judgment without an Opinion,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of the principle of equal treatment.

2 The request has been made in proceedings between the Ministeriet for Forskning, Innovation og Videregående Uddannelser (Ministry of Science, Innovation and Higher Education) and Manova A/S

('Manova') concerning the lawfulness of a public procurement procedure organised by the Undervisningsministeriet (Education Ministry) ('the Ministry').

Legal context

European Union ('EU') law

3 According to recital 2 in the preamble to Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114):

'The award of contracts concluded in the Member States on behalf of the State, regional or local authorities and other bodies governed by public law entities, is subject to the respect of the principles of the [EC] Treaty and in particular to the principle of freedom of movement of goods, the principle of freedom of establishment and the principle of freedom to provide services and to the principles deriving therefrom, such as the principle of equal treatment, the principle of non-discrimination, the principle of mutual recognition, the principle of proportionality and the principle of transparency. …'

4 Article 2 of that directive, which concerns 'the principles of awarding contracts', provides:

'Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way.'

5 Under Article 21 of Directive 2004/18, contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex IIB to that directive are to be subject solely to Article 23, which relates to technical specifications, and Article 35(4), which relates to the notice of the results of the award procedure. Category 24 of that annex covers education and vocational education services.

6 Under Article 51 of Directive 2004/18, '[t]he contracting authority may invite economic operators to supplement or clarify the certificates and documents submitted pursuant to Articles 45 to 50'.

Danish law

7 Directive 2004/18 was transposed into Danish law by Order No 937 of 16 September 2004 ('Order No 937/2004'), which was in force at the time when the public procurement procedure at issue was organised. Under paragraph 1(1) of Order No 937/2004, contracting authorities were required to comply with Directive 2004/18, which was reproduced in the annex to the order.

8 Part II of the Law on obtaining tenders for certain public and publicly-supported contracts (lov om indhentning af tilbud på visse offentlige og offentlig støttede kontrakter), as published by Order No 1410 of 7 December 2007, lays down provisions on goods and services contracts. Under paragraph 15a(1) of that law, Part II applies to public service contracts which, like the contract at issue, relate to services listed in Annex IIB to Directive 2004/18 and have a value which exceeds DKK 500 000.

9 Under paragraph 15d(1) of that law, contracting authorities must ensure that, during the tendering procedure and award of the contract, '…the selection of tenderers is done on the basis of objective, factual and non-discriminatory criteria and that there is no discrimination as between tenderers'.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

10 By notice published on 12 September 2008, the Ministry launched a call for tenders in respect of services required for the operation of seven occupational guidance and advice centres ('guidance centres') starting from 1 August 2009. The value of the contract to be awarded was above the threshold which, under Article 7 of Directive 2004/18, triggers application of that directive.

11 The services in question, which essentially consist in the provision of guidance to people hoping to follow a higher educational or vocational training course, fall within Category 24 of Annex IIB to Directive 2004/18.

12 Since the Ministry took the view that the contract at issue related to complex services requiring negotiations, the procedure included a preliminary screening stage.

13 The section of the contract notice entitled ‘Qualitative selection criteria’ laid down the following provision:

‘Tenderers wishing to be considered must, as a basis for the assessment of their economic and technical qualifications, provide the following information and satisfy the minimum requirements set out:

(2) Submit a copy of the most recent balance sheet in so far as the tenderer is obliged to draw up such a document.

(3) Reference list …

(4) Information on the tenderer’s educational and technical qualifications …

If the [Ministry] receives more than three applications for each of the seven lots, all of which fulfil the above requirements, the candidates who will be invited to submit tenders and take part in the subsequent negotiation procedure shall be selected from among those who have demonstrated the best and most suitable experience in relation to the services put out for tender. References shall accordingly be accorded more weight than professional and technical qualifications.’

14 By 14 October 2008, the deadline for applications, 10 undertakings/institutions had lodged applications for screening, including the Syddansk Universitet (University of Southern Denmark) (‘the USD’), the Københavns Universitet (University of Copenhagen) (‘the UC’), and Manova.

15 The applications from the USD and the UC did not include copies of their balance sheets; in that connection, the UC referred to its website.

16 On 29 October 2008, the Ministry sent an email to each of those universities asking it to forward a copy of its balance sheet, a request which the UC met that same day and the USD on the following day.

17 On 4 November 2008, nine candidates – including Manova, the USD and the UC – were judged successful at the screening stage and invited to submit tenders, three candidates to tender for each guidance centre. For one of those centres, Manova found itself competing with the USD and for another, with the UC.

18 On 1 May 2009, following the final assessment of the tenders for those two guidance centres, the Ministry found that the tenders from the USD and the UC were economically more advantageous than the tenders submitted by Manova – which, ultimately, was the only other candidate to have submitted a competing tender for those centres – and concluded the contracts relating to those centres with those two universities. Those contracts are still in force.

19 Manova filed a complaint before the Klagenævnet for Udbud (Complaints Board for Public Procurement; ‘the Complaints Board’) against the decision to award those lots to those universities. By order of 10 March 2010, the Complaints Board found that the Ministry had acted in breach of the principle of equal treatment by not rejecting the candidature of the USD and the UC on the ground that copies of their most recent balance sheets had not been provided at the same time as their applications for admission to the screening stage. The Complaints Board accordingly annulled the contracts.

20 On 29 April 2010, the Ministry brought an action contesting that order. The case was referred to the Østre Landsret (Eastern Regional Court), the referring court.

21 The Østre Landsret observes that the approach consistently taken by the Complaints Board in its decision-making practice is that, under Article 51 of Directive 2004/18 and, more generally, the principle of equal treatment, a contracting authority may not, where certain information has not been provided, ask the tenderer to provide the information at a later stage, if the provision of that information was a condition which had to be met in submitting an application or a tender, failing which the application or tender would be rejected.

22 The referring court also notes that, as a general rule, paragraph 12 of Order No 712 of 15 June 2011 (which replaced Order No 937/2004 with effect from 1 July 2011) allows a contracting authority which has received applications or tenders which do not meet the formal requirements set out in the contract documents – because, for example, information or documents are missing – not to reject those applications or tenders, provided that the awarding authority acts in accordance with the principle of equal treatment.

23 The Østre Landsret believes that there is uncertainty as to what steps a contracting authority may take if 'records' have not been included with an application and as to the implications of the principle of equal treatment in such a situation.

24 In those circumstances, the Østre Landsret decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'Does the EU law principle of equal treatment mean that, after the deadline for applications to take part in a tendering procedure, a contracting authority may not ask a candidate to forward a copy of its most recent balance sheet, provision of which was required under the notice announcing a screening procedure, if the candidate did not provide such documents with its application?'

25 By its question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether the principle of equal treatment is to be interpreted as precluding a contracting authority from asking a candidate, after the deadline for applying to take part in a tendering procedure, to provide documents describing that candidate's situation – such as a copy of its published balance sheet – which were called for in the contract notice, but were not included with that candidate's application.

26 As a preliminary point, it should be borne in mind that, although, under Article 21 of Directive 2004/18, public contracts concerning services listed in Annex IIB to that directive are to be subject solely to Articles 23 and 35(4) thereof, the fundamental rules of the Treaty and the general principles of EU law apply to such contracts where they are of certain cross-border interest. The Court has found that the system established by the EU legislature for public contracts relating to services falling within the ambit of that annex cannot be interpreted as precluding application of the principles deriving from Articles 43 EC and 49 EC (now, respectively, Articles 49 TFEU and 56 TFEU) (see to that effect, inter alia, Case C-226/09 Commission v Ireland [2010] ECR I-11807, paragraphs 29 and 31).

27 It appears from the observations submitted to the Court that, from the point of view of the contracting authority itself, that is the position in the case before the referring court since one of the requirements under the contract notice was for applicants to declare on their honour that they had fulfilled all their obligations concerning taxes and social security contributions, not only in Denmark but also – where appropriate – in their Member State of establishment. However, it is for the referring court to carry out the necessary assessments in that regard.

28 One of the principal objectives of the public procurement rules under EU law is to ensure the free movement of services and the opening up of undistorted competition in all the Member States. In order to pursue that twofold objective, EU law applies, inter alia, the principle of the equal treatment of tenderers and the corollary obligation of transparency.

29 Accordingly, the application of the principle of equal treatment to public procurement procedures does not constitute an end in itself, but must be viewed in the light of the aims that it is intended to achieve.

30 It is settled case-law that the principle of equal treatment requires that comparable situations must not be treated differently, and that different situations must not be treated in the same way, unless such treatment is objectively justified (see Joined Cases C-21/03 and C-34/03 Fabricom [2005] ECR I-1559, paragraph 27 and the case-law cited).

31 The principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency preclude any negotiation between the contracting authority and a tenderer during a public procurement procedure, which means that, as a general rule, a tender cannot be amended after it has been submitted, whether at the request of the contracting authority or at the request of the tenderer concerned. It follows that, where the contracting authority regards a tender as imprecise or as failing to meet the technical requirements of the tender specifications, it cannot require the tenderer to provide clarification (see, to that effect, Case C-599/10 SAG ELV Slovensko and Others [2012] ECR, paragraphs 36 and 37).

32 However, the Court has explained that Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 does not preclude the correction or amplification of details of a tender, on a limited and specific basis, particularly when it is clear that they require mere clarification, or to correct obvious material errors (SAG ELV Slovensko and Others, paragraph 40).

33 In SAG ELV Slovensko and Others, the Court laid down certain requirements to mark the bounds of the contracting authority's right to make a written request to the tenderer or tenderers concerned for clarification of their bid.

34 First of all, a request for clarification of a tender, which may not be made until after the contracting authority has looked at all the tenders, must, as a general rule, be sent in an equivalent manner to all tenderers in the same situation (see, to that effect, SAG ELV Slovensko and Others, paragraphs 42 and 43).

35 Next, the request must relate to all sections of the tender which require clarification (see, to that effect, SAG ELV Slovensko and Others, paragraph 44).

36 In addition, that request may not lead to the submission, by a tenderer, of what would appear in reality to be a new tender (see, to that effect, SAG ELV Slovensko and Others, paragraph 40).

37 Lastly, as a general rule, when exercising its right to ask a tenderer to clarify its tender, the contracting authority must treat tenderers equally and fairly, in such a way that a request for clarification does not appear unduly to have favoured or disadvantaged the tenderer or tenderers to which the request was addressed, once the procedure for selection of tenders has been completed and in the light of its outcome (SAG ELV Slovensko and Others, paragraph 41).

38 That guidance in relation to tenders can also be applied to applications filed at the screening stage for candidates in a restricted procedure.

39 Accordingly, a contracting authority may request the correction or amplification of details of such an application, on a limited and specific basis, so long as that request relates to particulars or information, such as a published balance sheet, which can be objectively shown to pre-date the deadline for applying to take part in the tendering procedure concerned.

40 However, it should be explained that this would not be the case if the contract documents required provision of the missing particulars or information, on pain of exclusion. It falls to the contracting authority to comply strictly with the criteria which it has itself laid down (see, to that effect, Case C-496/99 P Commission v CAS Succhi di Frutta [2004] ECR I-3801, paragraph 115).

41 In the present case, it appears that the conditions mentioned in paragraphs 39 and 40 above have been respected. Nevertheless, it is for the referring court to carry out the necessary assessments in that regard.

42 In the light of the foregoing, the answer to the question referred is that the principle of equal treatment must be interpreted as not precluding a contracting authority from asking a candidate, after the deadline for applying to take part in a tendering procedure, to provide documents describing that candidate's situation – such as a copy of its published balance sheet – which can be objectively shown to pre-date that deadline, so long as it was not expressly laid down in the contract documents that, unless such documents were provided, the application would be rejected. That request must not unduly favour or disadvantage the candidate or candidates to which it is addressed.

Costs

43 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Tenth Chamber) hereby rules:

The principle of equal treatment must be interpreted as not precluding a contracting authority from asking a candidate, after the deadline for applying to take part in a tendering procedure, to provide documents describing that candidate's situation – such as a copy of its published balance sheet – which can be objectively shown to pre-date that deadline, so long as it was not expressly laid down in the contract documents that, unless such documents were provided, the application would be rejected. That request must not unduly favour or disadvantage the candidate or candidates to which it is addressed.

4 July 2013 (*)

(Public procurement – Directive 89/665/EEC – Public procurement review – Action brought by an unsuccessful tenderer for review of a decision awarding a contract – Action for review based on the ground that the bid selected did not meet the technical specifications for the contract – Counterclaim made by the successful tenderer alleging that certain technical specifications for the contract were not respected in the bid submitted by the tenderer seeking review – Neither of those bids in compliance with the technical specifications for the contract – National case-law requiring that the counterclaim be examined first and, where such a counterclaim proves well founded, that the main action be declared inadmissible without any consideration of its merits – Whether compatible with European Union law)

In Case C-100/12,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Piemonte (Italy), made by decision of 25 January 2012, received at the Court on 24 February 2012, in the proceedings

v

Azienda Sanitaria Locale di Alessandria, intervening parties:

Telecom Italia SpA,

Path-Net SpA,

THE COURT (Tenth Chamber),

composed of A. Rosas, President of the Chamber, E. Juhász and D. Šváby (Rapporteur), Judges,

Advocate General: J. Kokott,

Registrar: A. Impellizzeri, Administrator,

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 6 December 2012,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– Telecom Italia SpA and Path-Net SpA, by A. Lirosi, M. Martinelli and L. Mastromatteo, avvocati,

– the Italian Government, by G. Palmieri, acting as Agent, assisted by S. Varone, Avvocato dello Stato,

– the European Commission, by A. Tokár and D. Recchia, acting as Agents, having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to proceed to judgment without an Opinion,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007 (OJ 2007 L 335, p. 31) (‘Directive 89/665’).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between, on the one hand, Fastweb SpA (‘Fastweb’) and, on the other, Azienda Sanitaria Locale di Alessandria (ASL) (Alessandria Local Health Authority; ‘the ASL Alessandria’), Telecom Italia SpA (‘Telecom Italia’) and one of its subsidiaries, Path-Net SpA (‘Path-Net’), concerning the award of a public procurement contract to Path-Net.

3 The second and third recitals in the preamble to Directive 89/665 state:

‘… the existing arrangements at both national and Community levels for ensuring the [effective application of directives on public procurement] are not always adequate to ensure compliance with the relevant Community provisions particularly at a stage when infringements can be corrected;

… the opening-up of public procurement to Community competition necessitates a substantial increase in the guarantees of transparency and non-discrimination; …, for it to have tangible effects, effective and rapid remedies must be available in the case of infringements of Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law’.

4 Recital 3 to Directive 2007/66 states:

‘… The guarantees of transparency and non-discrimination sought by [a number of directives, including Directive 89/665] should be strengthened to ensure that the Community as a whole fully benefit from the positive effects of the modernisation and simplification of the rules on public procurement achieved by [a number of directives, including Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114)]. …’

5 Article 1 of Directive 89/665, entitled ‘Scope and availability of review procedures’, provides:

‘1. This Directive applies to contracts referred to in Directive [2004/18], unless such contracts are excluded in accordance with Articles 10 to 18 of that Directive.

Contracts within the meaning of this Directive include public contracts, framework agreements, public works concessions and dynamic purchasing systems.

Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contracts falling within the scope of Directive [2004/18], decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in Articles 2 to 2f of this Directive, on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules transposing that law.

3. Member States shall ensure that review procedures are available, under detailed rules which Member States may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.

…’

6 Article 2(1) of Directive 89/665 provides:

‘Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for powers to:

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully …

7 Recital 2 to Directive 2004/18 states:

‘The award of contracts concluded in the Member States on behalf of the State, regional or local authorities and other bodies governed by public law entities, is subject to the respect of the principles of the Treaty [on the Functioning of the European Union] and in particular to the principle of freedom of movement of goods, the principle of freedom of establishment and the principle of freedom to provide services and to the principles deriving therefrom, such as the principle of equal treatment, the principle of non-discrimination, the principle of mutual recognition, the principle of proportionality and the principle of transparency. However, for public contracts above a certain value, it is advisable to draw up provisions of Community coordination of national procedures for the award of such contracts which are based on these principles so as to ensure the effects of them and to guarantee the opening-up of public procurement to competition. These coordinating provisions should therefore be interpreted in accordance with both the abovementioned rules and principles and with other rules of the Treaty.’

8 Under Article 2 of Directive 2004/18:

9 Article 32 of Directive 2004/18 provides:

2. For the purpose of concluding a framework agreement, contracting authorities shall follow the rules of procedure referred to in this Directive for all phases up to the award of contracts based on that framework agreement. …

Contracts based on a framework agreement shall be awarded in accordance with the procedures laid down in paragraphs 3 and 4. …

Contracts based on framework agreements concluded with several economic operators may be awarded either:

– where not all the terms are laid down in the framework agreement, when the parties are again in competition on the basis of the same and, if necessary, more precisely formulated terms, and, where appropriate, other terms referred to in the specifications of the framework agreement, in accordance with the following procedure:

(a) for every contract to be awarded, contracting authorities shall consult in writing the economic operators capable of performing the contract;

(d) contracting authorities shall award each contract to the tenderer who has submitted the best tender on the basis of the award criteria set out in the specifications of the framework agreement.’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

10 Under Legislative Decree No 82/2005 of 7 March 2005 establishing the Digital Administration Code (Decreto legislativo 7 marzo 2005, n. 82: Codice dell’amministrazione digitale; Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 112 of 16 May 2005), the Centro Nazionale per l’Informatica nella Pubblica Amministrazione (CNIPA) (National Centre for Public Administration Informatics) is empowered to conclude framework agreements with economic operators of its choosing. Non-State-owned authorities may award contracts which are based on those framework agreements but which take into account the authorities’ own requirements.

11 The CNIPA concluded such a framework agreement, inter alia, with Fastweb and Telecom Italia. On 18 June 2010, the ASL Alessandria invited those companies to submit a tender relating to voice and data telephony on the basis of tender specifications. By decision of 15 September 2010, it selected the bid submitted by Telecom Italia and concluded a contract on 27 September 2010 with Path-Net, that company’s subsidiary.

12 Fastweb brought an action for review of the decision awarding that contract before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per il Piemonte (Regional Administrative Court, Piedmont; ‘the TAR Piemonte’); Telecom Italia and Path-Net intervened in those proceedings and filed a counterclaim. Each of those operators challenged the validity of the bid submitted by its sole competitor on grounds of failing to comply with certain technical requirements under the tender specifications.

13 Following a check, ordered by the TAR Piemonte, as to whether the bids submitted by the two companies met the tender specifications, it was found that neither of the bids complied with all the technical requirements under the tender specifications. Logically, according to the TAR Piemonte, that finding should mean that both actions for review should succeed, causing the public procurement procedure at issue before that court to be annulled, as no tenderer would have submitted a bid capable of winning the contract. That result would be in Fastweb’s interests, since the recommencement of the award procedure would provide it with another chance to win the contract.

14 However, the TAR Piemonte pointed out that, by Decision No 4 of 7 April 2011 made in Plenary Assembly, the Consiglio di Stato (Italian Council of State) had held – stating a key principle of law as regards actions for the review of public procurement procedures – that a counterclaim, challenging the locus standi of a party who has brought an action for review on the grounds that that party had been unlawfully admitted to the award procedure, must be examined before the main action is considered, even in cases where the applicant in the main action has a material interest in the recommencement of the award procedure in its entirety and irrespective of the number of participants competing in that procedure or the forms of order sought in the counterclaim or the needs of the authority concerned.

15 The Consiglio di Stato considers that only a party which has taken part lawfully in the award procedure has legal standing to challenge the decision awarding the public contract concerned. According to that court, a finding that the party seeking review of that decision had been unlawfully admitted to the procedure has full retroactive effect and the definitive exclusion of that party from the public procurement procedure would bar that party from challenging the outcome of the procedure.

16 In accordance with the case-law of the Consiglio di Stato, a practical interest in recommencement of the tendering procedure, as relied upon by the party which has brought an action challenging the decision awarding a public contract, does not confer on that party legal standing to do so. Such an interest is in no way different from the interest of any other economic operator in the sector which wishes to take part in a new award procedure. Consequently, the counterclaim contesting the locus standi of the party which has brought that action must always be examined first, even in cases where there were only two tenderers, namely the unsuccessful tenderer (the applicant in the main action) and the successful tenderer (the counterclaimant).

17 The TAR Piemonte is uncertain whether that case-law – specifically in so far as it provides that the counterclaim is unconditionally to be given priority over the main action – is consistent with the principles of equality, non-discrimination, free competition and effective judicial protection, as reflected in Articles 1(1) and 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665. According to that court, the fact that the counterclaim is to be the first claim examined – and, possibly, the only claim examined – confers on the successful tenderer an unjustified advantage over the other economic operators who participated in the award procedure where it is found that the contract has been unlawfully awarded.

18 In those circumstances, the TAR Piemonte decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

‘Do the principles of equality of the parties, of non-discrimination and of protection of competition in public tendering procedures, referred to in Directive [89/665] preclude the most recent case-law as laid down in Decision No 4 of 2011 of the Plenary Assembly of the Consiglio di Stato, according to which the counterclaim, by which it is sought to challenge the locus standi of the applicant in the main action by contesting its admission to the tendering procedure, must of necessity be heard before the main action and carry compelling implications for examination of the main action, even in cases where the applicant in the main action has an interest in the recommencement of the entire selection procedure (interesse strumentale) and irrespective of the number of competitors which took part in the procedure, with specific reference to cases where only two participants remained in play in that procedure (namely, the applicant in the main action and the counterclaimant, the latter being also the successful tenderer), each seeking to have the other excluded on the grounds that its bid failed to meet the minimum requirements for the bid to be considered suitable?’

Admissibility of the request for a preliminary ruling

19 Telecom Italia, Path-Net and the Italian Government challenge the admissibility of this request for a preliminary ruling on a number of grounds. The four preliminary pleas of inadmissibility thus raised cannot, however, be upheld.

20 First of all, this request for a preliminary ruling concerns a situation which falls squarely within the purview of Article 267 TFEU. In accordance with the first and second paragraphs of Article 267 TFEU, a court or tribunal of a Member State may request the Court to give a ruling on any question relating to the interpretation of the Treaties or of various instruments of secondary legislation where that court or tribunal considers that a decision on that question is necessary to enable it to give judgment in the case before it. In the present case, it is clear from the order for reference that the TAR Piemonte is uncertain as to the implications of Directive 89/665 in the procedural and factual context of the dispute before it, envisaging two possible responses which would entail two different outcomes.

21 Secondly, the order for reference adequately sets out the national legal context, since it describes and explains the case-law of the Consiglio di Stato, which is shaped by the way in which the Consiglio di Stato construes all the relevant rules and procedural principles of national law applicable to circumstances such as those under consideration in the main proceedings, and the inferences which can be drawn from the dicta of that court as regards the admissibility of the main action, brought by the unsuccessful tenderer.

22 Thirdly, even though the TAR Piemonte does not indicate which specific provision of European Union law it wishes to have interpreted, it refers explicitly, in the question itself, to Directive 89/665, and the order for reference gives sufficient information to enable the Court to establish the elements of European Union law that require interpretation, account being taken of the matters to which the dispute before the referring court relates (see, by analogy, Case C-346/05 Chateignier [2006] ECR I-10951, paragraph 19 and the case-law cited).

23 Fourthly and lastly, it does not appear that that dispute concerns a public procurement contract covered by one of the exemptions referred to in Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665. Accordingly, provided that the value of that contract reaches the threshold at which Directive 2004/18 becomes applicable, as provided for in Article 7 of that directive – a matter for the referring court to verify, although there is nothing to cast any doubt in that regard at this stage – Directives 89/665 and 2004/18 are applicable to a public contract such as the contract at issue in the main proceedings. In that regard, it should be borne in mind that the application of Directive 2004/18 is unaffected by the fact that a particular procedure for the award of a public procurement contract involves only national undertakings (see, to that effect, Case C-213/07 Michaniki [2008] ECR I-9999, paragraph 29 and the case-law cited).

24 By its question, the TAR Piemonte asks, in essence, whether the provisions of Directive 89/665 – and, in particular, Articles 1 and 2 thereof – must be interpreted to the effect that, if, in review proceedings, the successful tenderer raises a preliminary plea of inadmissibility on the grounds that the tenderer seeking review lacks standing to challenge the award because its bid should have been rejected by the contracting authority as not being in conformity with the technical requirements under the tender specifications, Article 1(3) of that directive precludes that action for review from being declared inadmissible as a consequence of the examination of that preliminary plea, where the applicant for review is itself contesting, on identical grounds, the validity of the bid submitted by the successful tenderer and where only those two economic operators submitted a bid.

25 It should be noted that, as is clear from Article 1 of Directive 89/665, the aim of that directive is to ensure that decisions made by contracting authorities in breach of European Union law can be effectively reviewed. Under Article 1(3) of the directive, Member States must ensure that review procedures are available, under detailed rules which they themselves may establish, at least to any person having or having had an interest in obtaining a particular contract who has been or risks being harmed by an alleged infringement.

26 In that regard, a decision by which the contracting authority rejects a bid even before the stage at which the winning bid is selected is a decision in respect of which it must be possible to seek review under Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665, since that provision applies to all decisions taken by contracting authorities which are subject to the rules of European Union law on public procurement and makes no provision for any limitation as regards the nature and content of those decisions (see, inter alia, Case C-249/01 Hackermüller [2003] ECR I-6319, paragraph 24 and the case-law cited).

27 Accordingly, in paragraph 26 of Hackermüller, the Court held that, if a review body were to refuse access to those procedures, on grounds of lack of locus standi, to a tenderer whose bid had been rejected even before the stage at which the winning bid is selected, the effect would be to deny that tenderer not only its right to seek review of the decision which it alleges to be unlawful, but also the right to challenge the validity of the ground for exclusion raised by that body to deny him the status of a person who has been or risks being harmed by the alleged unlawfulness.

28 Admittedly, if, in order to mitigate that situation, it is recognised that the tenderer has the right to challenge the validity of that ground of exclusion by means of an action for review which it brings in order to contest the lawfulness of the decision by which the contracting authority did not consider its bid as the best, it is conceivable that, at the end of that procedure, the review body may conclude that the bid actually should have been rejected at the outset and that the tenderer's action for review falls to be dismissed on the ground that, given that fact, it neither has been nor risks being harmed by the infringement alleged (see Hackermüller, paragraph 27).

29 In such a situation, the tenderer which has brought an action for review of the decision awarding a public contract must have the right to challenge before the review body, and in accordance with the review procedure, the validity of the grounds on which its bid was rejected (see, to that effect, Hackermüller, paragraphs 28 and 29).

30 That approach is also called for, as a rule, where the preliminary plea of inadmissibility is raised, not by the review body of its own motion, but in the context of a counterclaim brought by a party to the review procedure, such as the successful tenderer which has intervened lawfully in that procedure.

31 In the case before it, the TAR Piemonte, after checking whether the bids made by the two companies concerned were satisfactory, found that the bid submitted by Fastweb did not comply with all the technical rules under the tender specifications. It reached the same conclusion, however, with regard to the bid submitted by the other tenderer, Telecom Italia.

32 This situation can be distinguished from the facts in Hackermüller, inter alia because it has been found that the selected bid was, wrongly, not excluded at the stage of verification of the tenders, even though it did not comply with the technical requirements under the tender specifications.

33 In the presence of such a finding, a counterclaim filed by the successful tenderer cannot bring about the dismissal of an action for review brought by a tenderer where the validity of the bid submitted by each of the operators is challenged in the course of the same proceedings and on identical grounds. In such a situation, each competitor can claim a legitimate interest in the exclusion of the bid submitted by the other, which may lead to a finding that the contracting authority is unable to select a lawful bid.

34 In the light of the foregoing, the answer to the question is that Article 1(3) of Directive 89/665 must be interpreted to the effect that, if, in review proceedings, the successful tenderer – having won the contract and filed a counterclaim – raises a preliminary plea of inadmissibility on the grounds that the tenderer seeking review lacks standing to challenge the award because its bid should have been rejected by the contracting authority by reason of its non-conformity with the technical requirements under the tender specifications, that provision precludes that action for review from being declared inadmissible as a consequence of the examination of that preliminary plea in the absence of a finding as to whether those technical requirements are met both by the bid submitted by the successful tenderer, which won the contract, and by the bid submitted by the tenderer which brought the main action for review.

Costs

35 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Tenth Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 1(3) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007, must be interpreted to the effect that, if, in review proceedings, the successful tenderer – having won the contract and filed a counterclaim – raises a preliminary plea of inadmissibility on the grounds that the tenderer seeking review lacks standing to challenge the award because its bid should have been rejected by the contracting authority by reason of its non-conformity with the technical requirements under the tender specifications, that provision precludes that action for review from being declared inadmissible as a consequence of the examination of that preliminary plea in the absence of a finding as to whether those technical requirements are met both by the bid submitted by the successful tenderer, which won the contract, and by the bid submitted by the tenderer which brought the main action for review.

10 October 2013 (*)

(Public contracts – Directive 2004/18/EC – Economic and financial standing – Technical and/or professional ability – Articles 47(2) and 48(3) – Right of an economic operator to rely on the capacities of other entities – Article 52 – Certification system – Public works contracts – National legislation requiring possession of a qualification certificate corresponding to the category and the value of the works covered by the contract – Prohibition on reliance on the certificates of more than one entity for works within the same category)

In Case C-94/12,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per le Marche (Italy), made by decision of 15 December 2011, received at the Court on 20 February 2012, in the proceedings

Swm Costruzioni 2 SpA,

Mannocchi Luigino DI

v

Provincia di Fermo,

intervening party:

Torelli Dottori SpA,

THE COURT (Fifth Chamber),

composed of T. von Danwitz, President of the Chamber, A. Rosas, E. Juhász, D. Šváby (Rapporteur) and C. Vajda, Judges, Advocate General: N. Jääskinen,

Registrar: A. Calot Escobar,

having regard to the written procedure,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– Swm Costruzioni 2 SpA and Mannocchi Luigino DI, by C. Famiglini, avvocato, – the Italian Government, by G. Palmieri, acting as Agent, and P. Gentili, avvocato dello Stato,

– the European Commission, by C. Zadra and A. Tokár, acting as Agents,

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 28 February 2013,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 47(2) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114, and Corrigendum, OJ 2004 L 351, p. 44).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between (i) Swm Costruzioni 2 SpA (‘Swm’) and Mannocchi Luigino DI, undertakings which, together, have formed an ad hoc tendering consortium (Raggruppamento Temporaneo di Imprese, ‘the RTI’), and (ii) the Provincia di Fermo concerning the latter’s decision to exclude that RTI from a tendering procedure for the award of a public works contract.

Legal context

3 Recital 32 in the preamble to Directive 2004/18 states as follows:

‘In order to encourage the involvement of small and medium-sized undertakings in the public contracts procurement market, it is advisable to include provisions on subcontracting.’

4 Recital 45 in the preamble to that directive reads as follows:

‘This Directive allows Member States to establish official lists of contractors, suppliers or service providers or a system of certification by public or private bodies, and makes provision for the effects of such registration or such certification in a contract award procedure in another Member State. As regards official lists of approved economic operators, it is important to take into account Court of Justice case-law in cases where an economic operator belonging to a group claims the economic, financial or technical capabilities of other companies in the group in support of its application for registration. In this case, it is for the economic operator to prove that those resources will actually be available to it throughout the period of validity of the registration. For the purposes of that registration, a Member State may therefore determine the level of requirements to be met and in particular, for example where the operator lays claim to the financial standing of another company in the group, it may require that that company be held liable, if necessary jointly and severally.’

5 Article 1(2)(b) and the first subparagraph of Article 1(8) of Directive 2004/18 contain the following definitions:

(b) “Public works contracts” are public contracts having as their object either the execution, or both the design and execution, of works related to one of the activities within the meaning of Annex I or a work, or the realisation, by whatever means, of a work corresponding to the requirements specified by the contracting authority. A “work” means the outcome of building or civil engineering works taken as a whole which is sufficient of itself to fulfil an economic or technical function.

8. The terms “contractor”, “supplier” and “service provider” mean any natural or legal person or public entity or group of such persons and/or bodies which offers on the market, respectively, the execution of works and/or a work, products or services.’

6 Article 4(2) of that directive provides as follows:

‘Groups of economic operators may submit tenders or put themselves forward as candidates. ...’

7 The first paragraph of Article 25 of the directive states as follows:

‘In the contract documents, the contracting authority may ask or may be required by a Member State to ask the tenderer to indicate in his tender any share of the contract he may intend to subcontract to third parties and any proposed subcontractors.’

8 Article 44 of that directive states as follows:

‘1. Contracts shall be awarded ... after the suitability of the economic operators not excluded ... has been checked by contracting authorities in accordance with the criteria of economic and financial standing, of professional and technical knowledge or ability referred to in Articles 47 to 52 ...

2. The contracting authorities may require candidates and tenderers to meet minimum capacity levels in accordance with Articles 47 and 48.

The extent of the information referred to in Articles 47 and 48 and the minimum levels of ability required for a specific contract must be related and proportionate to the subject-matter of the contract.

9 Article 47 of Directive 2004/18, entitled ‘Economic and financial standing’, reads as follows:

‘1. Proof of the economic operator’s economic and financial standing may, as a general rule, be furnished by one or more of the following references:

(c) a statement of the undertaking’s overall turnover and, where appropriate, of turnover in the area covered by the contract for a maximum of the last three financial years available, depending on the date on which the undertaking was set up or the economic operator started trading, as far as the information on these turnovers is available.

2. An economic operator may, where appropriate and for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. It must in that case prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary, for example, by producing an undertaking by those entities to that effect.

3. Under the same conditions, a group of economic operators as referred to in Article 4 may rely on the capacities of participants in the group or of other entities.

10 Article 48 of that directive, entitled ‘Technical and/or professional ability’, states as follows:

‘1. The technical and/or professional abilities of the economic operators shall be assessed and examined in accordance with paragraphs 2 and 3.

2. Evidence of the economic operators’ technical abilities may be furnished by one or more of the following means according to the nature, quantity or importance, and use of the works, supplies or services:

(a) (i) a list of the works carried out over the past five years, accompanied by certificates of satisfactory execution for the most important works. These certificates shall indicate the value, date and site of the works and shall specify whether they were carried out according to the rules of the trade and properly completed. Where appropriate, the competent authority shall submit these certificates to the contracting authority direct;

(b) an indication of the technicians or technical bodies involved, whether or not belonging directly to the economic operator’s undertaking, especially those responsible for quality control and, in the case of public works contracts, those upon whom the contractor can call in order to carry out the work;

(h) a statement of the tools, plant or technical equipment available to the service provider or contractor for carrying out the contract;

...

3. An economic operator may, where appropriate and for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. It must in that case prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary for the execution of the contract, for example, by producing an undertaking by those entities to place the necessary resources at the disposal of the economic operator.

4. Under the same conditions a group of economic operators as referred to Article 4 may rely on the abilities of participants in the group or in other entities.

11 Article 52 of Directive 2004/18, entitled 'Official lists of approved economic operators and certification by bodies established under public or private law', provides in paragraph 1 thereof:

'Member States may introduce either official lists of approved contractors, suppliers or service providers or certification by certification bodies established in public or private law.

Member States shall adapt the conditions for registration on these lists and for the issue of certificates by certification bodies to the provisions of Article 45(1), Article 45(2)(a) to (d) and (g), Article 46, Article 47(1), (4) and (5), Article 48(1), (2), (5) and (6), Article 49 and, where appropriate, Article 50.

Member States shall also adapt them to Article 47(2) and Article 48(3) as regards applications for registration submitted by economic operators belonging to a group and claiming resources made available to them by the other companies in the group. In such case, these operators must prove to the authority establishing the official list that they will have these resources at their disposal throughout the period of validity of the certificate attesting to their being registered in the official list and that throughout the same period these companies continue to fulfil the qualitative selection requirements laid down in the Articles referred to in the second subparagraph on which operators rely for their registration.'

12 In accordance with Decree No 34 of the President of the Republic of 25 January 2000 introducing rules establishing the qualification system for persons who carry out public works in accordance with Article 8 of Law No 109 of 11 February 1994, as subsequently amended (decreto del Presidente della Repubblica n. 34 – Regolamento recante istituzione del sistema di qualificazione per gli esecutori di lavori pubblici, ai sensi dell'articolo 8 della legge 11 febbraio 1994, n. 109, e successive modificazioni, Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 49 of 29 February 2000), which is applicable in the main proceedings, public works contracts the value of which exceeds EUR 150 000 may be carried out only by undertakings in possession of 'SOA' certificates.

13 Those certificates correspond to qualification categories, depending on the nature of the works involved, and to classes, which determine the value of the contracts to which a certificate grants access.

14 Those certificates are issued by certification bodies – società organismi di attestazione – which are entrusted with the task, inter alia, of ensuring that each approved undertaking satisfies a set of general, economic, financial, technical and organisational criteria considered essential for the execution of public works.

15 It is apparent from the documents before the Court that appropriate economic and financial standing is established, inter alia, by works-related turnover equal to or greater than 100% of the amounts required for qualification in the various categories. As regards technical capacity, it is required, inter alia, for each category covered by an application for qualification, first, that works of a value equal to or greater than 90% of the amount of the class applied for have been carried out and, second, that one, two or three contracts the value of which is equal to or greater than 40%, 55% or 65% of that amount, respectively, have been performed.

16 Article 49 of Legislative Decree No 163 of 12 April 2006 establishing the Code on public works contracts, public service contracts and public supply contracts pursuant to Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC (decreto legislativo n. 163 – Codice dei contratti pubblici relativi a lavori, servizi e forniture in attuazione delle direttive 2004/17/CE e 2004/18/CE, Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 100 of 2 May 2006), as amended by Legislative Decree No 152 of 11 September 2008 (Ordinary Supplement to GURI No 231 of 2 October 2008, 'Legislative Decree No 163/2006'), provides as follows:

'1. The tenderer, be it an individual or a member of a consortium or group within the meaning of Article 34, in a specific tendering procedure for a public works, services or supply contract, may fulfil the requirements relating to possession of economic, financial, technical and organisational capacity, or possession of a SOA certificate ..., by relying on the capacity of another entity or the SOA certificate of another entity.

6. For works contracts, the tenderer may rely on the capacities of only one auxiliary undertaking for each qualification category. The invitation to tender may permit reliance on the capacity of more than one auxiliary undertaking having regard to the value of the contract or the special nature of the services to be provided ...'

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

17 The Provincia di Fermo initiated a tendering procedure for a works contract for the modernisation and extension of a road, the estimated value of which exceeds the relevant threshold for the application of Directive 2004/18, as laid down in Article 7 thereof. Under that procedure, tenderers were required to demonstrate their technical and professional ability by presenting an SOA certificate corresponding to the nature and value of the works covered by the contract.

18 The RTI formed by Swm and Mannocchi Luigino DI participated in that procedure through Swm. In order to meet the requirement concerning the relevant class of SOA certificate, Swm relied on the SOA certificates of two third-party undertakings.

19 By decision of 2 August 2011, the RTI was excluded from the tendering procedure on the basis of the general prohibition on reliance on the capacities of more than one entity within the same qualification category laid down by Article 49(6) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006.

20 An action against that decision was brought before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per le Marche (Marche Regional Administrative Court).

21 That court refers to decisions of the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State) on that subject. The Consiglio di Stato has held, on the one hand, that the prohibition is not applicable to undertakings forming an RTI where the RTI is itself a candidate or tenderer. That decision was based on the rationale behind the right to rely on the capacities of third-party entities, namely to promote the broadest possible participation by undertakings in tendering procedures. On the other hand, the Consiglio di Stato has also found that a tenderer may not combine its SOA certificate with that of a third-party entity in order to fall within the class required for a particular contract. That decision was based on the objective of the European Union rules on public procurement, namely that of attaining the maximum level of competitiveness in order to achieve at the same time the most efficient and reliable performance of public contracts.

22 In those circumstances the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per le Marche decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘Must Article 47(2) of Directive [2004/18] be interpreted as precluding, in principle, the [rule] of a Member State, such as [that] set out in Article 49(6) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006, which prohibits, except in special circumstances, [economic operators participating in a tendering procedure for a public works contract] [from relying] on the capacities of more than one auxiliary undertaking ... for each qualification category [with the proviso that] [t]he invitation to tender may permit reliance on the capacities of more than one auxiliary undertaking having regard to the value of the contract or the special nature of the services to be provided ...?’

23 As a preliminary point, it must be noted that the national provision referred to in the question referred for a preliminary ruling applies both to the criteria of economic and financial standing and to the criteria of technical and organisational capacity. Article 47(2) of Directive 2004/18 – the only provision of that directive referred to in the question – concerns only the economic and financial standing of economic operators participating in a tendering procedure, while the text of paragraph 3 of Article 48 of that directive, which relates to the technical and/or professional ability of those operators, is in essence identical to that of Article 47(2).

24 The fact that a national court has, formally speaking, worded a question referred for a preliminary ruling with reference solely to certain provisions of European Union law does not preclude the Court from providing to the national court all the elements of interpretation which may be of assistance in adjudicating on the case pending before it, whether or not that court has referred to them in its questions (see, to that effect, Case C-248/11 Nilaş and Others [2012] ECR, paragraph 31 and the case-law cited).

25 The national court must therefore be regarded as asking, in essence, whether Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as precluding a national provision, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which prohibits, as a general rule, economic operators participating in a tendering procedure for a public works contract from relying on the capacities of more than one undertaking for the same qualification category.

26 Under Article 44(1) of Directive 2004/18, it is for the contracting authorities to check the suitability of candidates or tenderers in accordance with the criteria referred to in Articles 47 to 52 of the directive.

27 In this respect, it must be noted, first, that Article 47(1)(c) provides that the contracting authority may, inter alia, require candidates or tenderers to prove their economic and financial standing by furnishing a statement of the undertaking’s overall turnover and of turnover in the area covered by the contract for a maximum of the last three financial years available. Second, Article 48(2)(a)(i) provides that economic operators may be requested to provide evidence of their technical abilities by furnishing a list of the works carried out over the past five years.

28 Under the first subparagraph of Article 44(2) of Directive 2004/18, a contracting authority may require candidates or tenderers to meet minimum levels of economic and financial standing and technical and professional ability in accordance with Articles 47 and 48 of that directive.

29 For that purpose, the contracting authority must take account of the right conferred on every economic operator by Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 to rely on, for a particular contract, the capacities of other entities, regardless of the nature of the links which it has with them, provided that it proves to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary for the execution of the contract.

30 It should be noted, as the Advocate General observed at point 18 of his Opinion, that the systematic use of the plural in those provisions indicates that they do not prohibit, in principle, candidates or tenderers from relying on the capacities of more than one third-party entity in order to prove that they meet a minimum capacity level. A fortiori, those provisions do not lay down any general prohibition regarding a candidate or tenderer’s reliance on the capacities of one or more third-party entities in addition to its own capacities in order to fulfil the criteria set by a contracting authority.

31 That finding is corroborated by several provisions in Directive 2004/18. Thus, Article 48(2)(b) thereof refers to reliance on technicians or technical bodies, whether or not they belong directly to the undertaking of the economic operator concerned, upon whom the contractor can call in order to carry out the work. Similarly, Article 48(2)(h) of the directive refers to the tools, plant or technical equipment available to the contractor for carrying out the contract, without imposing any limit on the number of entities who will provide them. To the same effect, Article 4(2) of the directive permits groups of economic operators to participate in public procurement procedures without imposing any limit on the combining of capacities, in the same way as Article 25 of the directive provides for the use of subcontractors without imposing any limit in that regard.

32 Finally, the Court has expressly referred to an economic operator's right to use resources belonging to one or more other entities, possibly in addition to its own resources, in order to carry out a contract (see, to that effect, Case C-176/98 Holst Italia [1999] ECR I-8607, paragraphs 26 and 27, and Case C-314/01 Siemens and ARGE Telekom [2004] ECR I-2549, paragraph 43).

33 Therefore, it must be held that Directive 2004/18 permits the combining of the capacities of more than one economic operator for the purpose of satisfying the minimum capacity requirements set by the contracting authority, provided that the candidate or tenderer relying on the capacities of one or more other entities proves to that authority that it will actually have at its disposal the resources of those entities necessary for the execution of the contract.

34 Such an interpretation is consistent with the objective pursued by the directives in this area of attaining the widest possible opening-up of public contracts to competition to the benefit not only of economic operators but also contracting authorities (see, to that effect, Case C-305/08 CoNISMa [2009] ECR I-12129, paragraph 37 and the case-law cited). In addition, as the Advocate General noted at points 33 and 37 of his Opinion, that interpretation also facilitates the involvement of small- and medium-sized undertakings in the contracts procurement market, an aim also pursued by Directive 2004/18, as stated in recital 32 thereof.

35 It is true that there may be works with special requirements necessitating a certain capacity which cannot be obtained by combining the capacities of more than one operator, which, individually, would be inadequate. In such circumstances, the contracting authority would be justified in requiring that the minimum capacity level concerned be achieved by a single economic operator or, where appropriate, by relying on a limited number of economic operators, in accordance with the second subparagraph of Article 44(2) of Directive 2004/18, as long as that requirement is related and proportionate to the subject-matter of the contract at issue.

36 However, since those circumstances constitute an exception, Directive 2004/18 precludes that requirement being made a general rule under national law, which is the effect of a provision such as Article 49(6) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006.

37 The fact that, in the present case, the assessment of the capacity level of an economic operator, as regards the value of the public works contracts which are open to that operator, is broadly predetermined under a national certification system or a system entailing registration on lists is irrelevant in that regard. The right given to Member States by Article 52 of Directive 2004/18 to introduce such a system may be exercised only in a manner that is consistent with the other provisions of that directive, particularly Articles 44(2), 47(2) and 48(3) thereof.

38 In the light of all of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the question referred is that Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18, read in conjunction with Article 44(2) of that directive, must be interpreted as precluding a national provision, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which prohibits, as a general rule, economic operators participating in a tendering procedure for a public works contract from relying on the capacities of more than one undertaking for the same qualification category.

Costs

39 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fifth Chamber) hereby rules:

Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, read in conjunction with Article 44(2) of that directive, must be interpreted as precluding a national provision, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which prohibits, as a general rule, economic operators participating in a tendering procedure for a public works contract from relying on the capacities of more than one undertaking for the same qualification category.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL
delivered on 28 February 2013 (1)

Case C-94/12

Swm Costruzioni 2 SpA
Mannocchi Luigino DI
v
Provincia di Fermo

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale per le Marche (Italy))

(Directive 2004/18/EC – Award of public works contracts – Economic and financial standing of an economic operator – Technical and/or professional ability of an economic operator – Reliance on the capacities of more than one auxiliary undertaking)

I – Introduction

1. Undertakings wishing to participate in a tendering procedure for a public works contract may be required to meet minimum levels relating to economic and financial standing or technical and/or professional ability in accordance with Articles 47 and 48 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts ('Directive 2004/18'). (2) In addition to possessing such capacities itself, an economic operator may fulfil these requirements by reference to the reliance on the capacities of 'other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them'. (3)

2. This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the question whether national legislation which limits to one the number of entities on whose capacity an economic operator wishing to participate in a public works tendering procedure may rely is in line with Directive 2004/18, in particular with Articles 47(2) and 48(3) thereof. Answering this question requires the Court to define the extent of the discretion the Member States have in implementing the provisions codifying the case-law of the Court predating Directive 2004/18.

II – Legal framework

A – European Union law

3. Article 47(2) of Directive 2004/18 titled 'Economic and financial standing' provides that:

'An economic operator may, where appropriate and for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. It must in that case prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary, for example, by producing an undertaking by those entities to that effect.'

4. Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 titled ‘Technical and/or professional ability’ provides that:

‘An economic operator may, where appropriate and for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. It must in that case prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary for the execution of the contract, for example, by producing an undertaking by those entities to place the necessary resources at the disposal of the economic operator.’

5. Article 52(1) of Directive 2004/18 titled ‘Official lists of approved economic operators and certification by bodies established under public or private law’ provides that:

‘Member States may introduce either official lists of approved contractors, suppliers or service providers or certification by certification bodies established in public or private law.

Member States shall adapt the conditions for registration on these lists and for the issue of certificates by certification bodies to the provisions of Article 45(1), Article 45(2)(a) to (d) and (g), Articles 46, Article 47(1), (4) and (5), Article 48(1), (2), (5) and (6), Article 49 and, where appropriate, Article 50.

Member States shall also adapt them to Article 47(2) and Article 48(3) as regards applications for registration submitted by economic operators belonging to a group and claiming resources made available to them by the other companies in the group. In such case, these operators must prove to the authority establishing the official list that they will have these resources at their disposal throughout the period of validity of the certificate attesting to their being registered in the official list and that throughout the same period these companies continue to fulfil the qualitative selection requirements laid down in the Articles referred to in the second subparagraph on which operators rely for their registration.’

B – National law

6. Article 49(6) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 provides, with regard to participation in public tendering procedures, that ‘[f]or works contracts, the tenderer may rely on the capacities of only one auxiliary undertaking for each qualification category. The invitation to tender may permit reliance on the capacity of more than one auxiliary undertaking on account of the value of the contract or the special nature of the services to be provided, subject to the prohibition on the shared use by the tenderer of the individual economic, financial, technical and organisation capacities referred to in Article 40(3)(b), on the basis of which the certificate for that category was issued.’

III – The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred

7. The applicant in the main proceedings, Raggruppamento Temporaneo Imprese (‘RTI’), an ad hoc tendering consortium consisting of Swm Costruzioni 2 SpA (head of the consortium) and Mannocchi Luigino DI, who are also applicants in the main proceedings, participated in the tendering procedure for a public works contract for the modernisation and extension of Strada Provinciale (Provincial Road) No 238 Valdaso.

8. For the purposes of satisfying the certification requirements of the Società Organismo di Attestazione (SOA), the certifying body authorised to verify whether undertakings have the necessary qualifications and fulfil the requirements for participation in public tendering procedures, the main applicant, Swm Costruzioni 2 relied on the capacities of two undertakings of the same qualification category concerning modernisation and extension works.

9. On 2 August 2011, the contracting authority, Provincia di Fermo sent to RTI its decision of the same date excluding RTI from the tendering procedure. The reason for that decision was the breach of the prohibition on reliance on the capacities of more than one undertaking within the same category laid down by Article 49(6) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006.

10. RTI challenged this decision by application lodged on 5 August 2011 before the referring court, the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale per le Marche. RTI’s application was based on the argument that Article 49(6) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 was not compatible with the relevant provisions of Directive 2004/18. The Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale per le Marche decided to stay the proceedings and refer the following question for a preliminary ruling:

‘Must Article 47(2) of Directive 2004/18/EC be interpreted as precluding, in principle, the legislation of a Member State, such as the Italian legislation set out in Article 49(6) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006, which prohibits, except in special circumstances, reliance on the capacities of more than one auxiliary undertaking, and provides that “[f]or works contracts, the tenderer may rely on the capacities of only one auxiliary undertaking for each qualification category. The invitation to tender may permit reliance on the capacities of more than one auxiliary undertaking on account of the value of the contract or the special nature of the services to be provided …”?’

11. Swm Costruzioni 2 SpA and Mannocchi Luigino DI, the Italian Government and the Commission have presented written observations.

IV – The scope of the question referred

12. The Italian Government points out that the main proceedings concern the technical and professional ability of an undertaking, and not its economic and financial capacity, therefore making Article 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 the relevant article. The referring court however has referred solely to Article 47(2) of Directive 2004/18, which concerns the economic and financial capacity of participating undertakings.

13. Here I find it sufficient to refer to settled case-law which states that the order for reference from a national court provides the basis for determining the scope of the question of European Union law to be interpreted, but that the Court is not completely bound by the wording of the question(s) submitted. The Court may have to reformulate the question referred to it in order to provide the referring court with an answer which will be of use to it and enable it to determine the case before it. (4)

14. Articles 47 and 48 of Directive 2004/18 are combined in Article 44(2) of Directive 2004/18 for purposes of allowing contracting authorities to ‘require candidates and tenderers to meet minimum capacity levels’. These two articles follow the same logic, and the same principles of interpretation are valid in the application of both. In Strong Segurança the Court noted en passant that Articles 48(3) and 47(2) of Directive 2004/18 are substantially identical. (5) Both provisions codify the legal principle developed in the Court’s case-law on earlier public procurement directives concerning the criteria for qualitative selection of candidates or tenderers. (6)

15. During the written procedure, the Court asked the parties to submit their views on the relevance to the present case of Article 44(2) of Directive 2004/18, which is the general provision on the verification of the suitability and choice of participants and award of contracts. (7) Only the Commission replied within the given deadline, concluding that an assessment of Article 44(2) was not relevant for the matter at hand.

16. Therefore, in order to provide Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale per le Marche with a useful answer in the main proceedings, I find that the Court’s preliminary ruling should focus on the interpretation of both Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18.

V – Assessment

17. In my view, a literal interpretation of Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 does not support the view that national legislation such as Article 49(6) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 complies with European Union law on public procurement.

18. Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 expressly state that economic operators may rely on the capacities of other entities for the establishment of their economic, financial, technical and professional capacity requirements for a particular public works contract. In other words, those provisions refer to other entities in the plural. It is useful to observe that Articles 47(3) and 48(4) of Directive 2004/18 provide for the same possibility in regard to economic operators belonging to a group.

19. Article 52 of Directive 2004/18 provides for the same possibility in regard to inclusion on official lists of approved economic operators or the granting of certifications to participate in tendering procedures. The wording of Article 52(1) of Directive 2004/18 also indicates, by use of the plural form other companies that the European Union legislator had not intended to impose restrictions on the number of auxiliary undertakings on whose capacity a prospective tenderer could rely.

20. The wording of Articles 47(2), 48(3) and 52 of Directive 2004/18 codify settled case-law of the Court relating to earlier public procurement directives. In Ballast Nedam Groep I, the Court concluded that a holding company which does not itself execute works may not, because its subsidiaries which carry out works are separate legal persons, be precluded on that ground from participation in public works contract procedures if it could establish that it actually has available to it the resources of the subsidiaries necessary for carrying out the contract.

21. In Ballast Nedam Groep II the Court re-stated its position in Ballast Nedam Groep I and defined this further by concluding that when assessing a parent company's technical capacity, public authorities compiling lists of approved contractors are obliged to take into account the technical capacity of companies belonging to the same group.

22. In Holst Italia the Court applied the Ballast case-law to a situation in which the company wishing to participate in a tendering procedure was not the dominant legal person in the group of companies, and confirmed that such a company could rely on the capacities of other companies in the group, regardless of the legal nature of links between them. (8) The Court stated that a tenderer cannot be eliminated from a procedure solely on the ground that it proposes to use resources which are not its own but belong to one or more other entities. (9)

23. This position of the Court that European Union law does not require that, in order to be classified as an economic operator qualifying for tendering, a person wishing to enter into a contract with a contracting authority must be capable of direct performance using his own resources has been confirmed also in subsequent case-law. (10) The Court has emphasised that undertakings wishing to participate in a tendering procedure must prove that they actually have available to them the resources of the other entities necessary for the carrying-out of the contract in question. The onus rests on the tenderer who relies on the resources of others. (11)

24. Both Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18 provide in almost identical terms that 'an economic operator may … rely on the capacities of other entities'. The wording suggests the recognition of a right of economic operators to choose this method of fulfilling the selection criteria, provided that they can prove that they actually have at their disposal the resources of the other entities necessary for executing the contract.

25. Where the capacity of an undertaking to carry out a public works contract has been disputed in a particular case, the evaluation whether adequate proof has been produced is left to national courts. As I have already observed, this principle has been stated in the Court's case-law which now has been codified in Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18. (12)

26. In addition, there is nothing in Article 52 of Directive 2004/18 to suggest that it was intended to limit the scope of Articles 47(2) and 48(3) which relate to cooperation between economic operators in the context of tendering for a particular contract. To the contrary, Article 52(1) requires that the conditions for registration on lists of approved contractors, suppliers or service providers or for certification are adapted to the principle underlying Articles 47(2) and 48(3) as regards applications for registration submitted by economic operators belonging to a group and claiming resources made available to them by the other companies in the group.

27. Registration on an official list or certification in accordance with Article 52 of Directive 2004/18 constitutes a presumption of the suitability of the registered or certified undertakings, but only in relation to the conditions upon which the registration or certification is based. Contracting authorities have discretion to determine the level of financial and economic standing and technical knowledge and ability required in order to participate in a given contract and, if necessary, to demand proof beyond the presumption of registration or certification. (13)

28. Moreover, the Court has stated that Directive 92/50 (14) did not preclude a prohibition or a restriction on the use of subcontracting for the performance of essential parts of the contract precisely in the case where the contracting authority has not been in a position to verify the technical and economic capacities of the subcontractors when examining the tenders and selecting the lowest tenderer. (15)

29. This would suggest that a national provision excluding from tendering procedures economic operators relying on the capacities of more than one other entity would be contrary to the right of economic operators to choose this method of fulfilling the selection criteria and therefore would not be compatible with Directive 2004/18. Indeed, the Court has stated that a tenderer claiming to have at its disposal the technical and economic capacities of third parties on which it intends to rely if the contract is awarded to it may be excluded only if it fails to demonstrate that those capacities are in fact available to it. (16)

30. Therefore, a national provision such as Article 49(6) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 which does not entirely prohibit reliance on the capacities of auxiliary undertakings in order to fulfil selection criteria, but which nevertheless imposes a quantitative restriction not provided in European Union law on that option cannot be compatible with Directive 2004/18.

31. This argument is further supported by analysis of the objectives of Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18. According to the Court, one of the primary objectives of the public procurement rules of the European Union is to attain the widest possible opening-up to competition, and that it is the concern of European Union law to ensure the widest possible participation by tenderers in a call for tenders. (17)

32. The objective of widest possible opening-up to competition is regarded not only from the interest in the free movement of goods and services, but also in regard to the interest of contracting authorities, who will thus have greater choice as to the most advantageous tender. (18) Exclusion of tenderers based on the number of other entities participating in the execution of the contract such as allowing only one auxiliary undertaking per qualitative criteria category does not allow for a case by case evaluation, thus actually reducing the choices of the contracting authority and affecting effective competition.

33. Another objective of the public procurement rules is to open up the public procurement market for all economic operators, regardless of their size. The inclusion of small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) is especially to be encouraged as SMEs are considered to form the backbone of European Union economy. (19) The chances of SMEs to participate in tendering procedures and to be awarded public works contracts are hindered, among other factors, by the size of the contracts. Because of this, the possibility for bidders to participate in groups relying on the capacities of auxiliary undertakings is particularly important in facilitating the access to markets of SMEs. (20)

34. As a final point, I shall address the issue of Member States' discretion in the implementation of Directive 2004/18. The Commission and the Italian Government are of the opinion that a national provision such as Article 49(6) of Legislative Decree No 163/2006 is within the discretion left to Member States in the implementation of the directive.

35. According to the Commission, it is sufficient for the proper implementation of the directive that the possibility to rely on capacity of an auxiliary undertaking in order to fulfil the economic and financial capacity, and technical and/or professional ability levels is not excluded, and that the principles expressed in Directive 2004/18 are applied in order to guarantee effective qualitative selection of tenderers based on transparent, objective and non-discriminatory criteria.

36. I do not dispute the fact that Member States have a relatively wide discretion in the implementation of the public procurement directives. However, this does not extend to issues expressly covered by the European Union legislator, which in my opinion is the case concerning the possibility to rely on third party capacities in the context of tendering for public contracts. As I have pointed out above, both case-law of the Court and Directive 2004/18 expressly permit reliance on capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them.

37. Excluding tenderers relying on the capacities of more than one auxiliary entity per qualitative selection criteria category favours larger undertakings at the expense of ad hoc consortia of SMEs. It is likely to privilege dominant local or regional players in relation to public works which fit their capacities but are too demanding for smaller operators acting alone and too small to interest bigger nationally or internationally operating companies. This cannot be regarded as non-discriminatory.

38. I agree with the Italian Government in that there may be a difference between the situations where an economic operator relies on the economic and financial capacity of another entity and where the reliance concerns technical and/or professional ability. In certain situations the necessary technical or professional ability must be possessed by a single entity. For example, whereas two undertakings with a capacity of 50 000 tonnes of asphalt may together fulfil the required capacity of 100 000 tonnes needed for the renovation of a highway, two enterprises having each the expertise level required for maintenance and repair of clocks in railway stations do not automatically fulfil the ability criteria required for reparation works of ancient clocks in medieval churches.

39. However, the problem relating to the possibilities of agglomerating certain types of technical and/or professional abilities is qualitatively independent from the number of entities on whose abilities an economic operator relies. The fact that economic operators may rely on the capacities of other entities for purposes of qualifying as prospective tenderers, does not do away with the realities of particular tendering procedures. Thus, regardless of whether an economic operator possesses the economic and financial capacity and technical and professional ability by itself or by means of reliance on the capacities of other operators, it will still have to prove that it fulfils the criteria established for the execution of a particular public works contract.

40. Moreover, Article 48(5) of Directive 2004/18 provides specific rules for the evaluation of abilities of economic operators with regard to their skills, efficiency, experience and reliability applicable for certain categories of public contracts. This provision is applicable also to economic operators which rely on the technical or professional abilities of other entities. In addition, as I have stated above, in cases of official lists or national certification, contracting authorities still have discretion to determine the level of financial and economic standing and technical knowledge and ability required in order to participate in a given contract.

VI – Conclusion

41. On the basis of the preceding reasons, I propose that the Court give the following answer to the Tribunale Amministrativo Regionale per le Marche:

Articles 47(2) and 48(3) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts preclude national legislation such as that at issue in the main proceedings which prohibits, except in special circumstances, reliance on the capacities of more than one auxiliary undertaking in order to fulfil the selection criteria concerning the economic and financial standing and/or technical and/or professional ability of an economic operator.

ayant pour objet une demande de décision préjudicielle au titre de l'article 267 TFUE, introduite par le Consiglio di Stato (Italie), par décision du 1er février 2011, parvenue à la Cour le 9 novembre 2011, dans la procédure Consulta Regionale Ordine Ingegneri della Lombardia e.a.

Comune di Pavia,

en présence de:

Università degli Studi di Pavia,

LA COUR (dixième chambre), composée de M. A. Rosas, président de chambre, MM. D. Šváby (rapporteur) et C. Vajda, juges, avocat général: M. N. Wahl,

greffier: M. A. Calot Escobar, vu la décision prise, l'avocat général entendu, de statuer par voie d'ordonnance motivée, conformément à l'article 99 du règlement de procédure de la Cour,

rend la présente

Ordonnance

1 La demande de décision préjudicielle porte sur l'interprétation des articles 1er, paragraphe 2, sous a) et d), 2 et 28 ainsi que de l'annexe II A, catégories 8 et 12, de la directive 2004/18/CE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 31 mars 2004, relative à la coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de travaux, de fournitures et de services (JO L 134, p. 114), telle que modifiée par le règlement (CE) n° 1422/2007 de la Commission, du 4 décembre 2007 (JO L 317, p. 34, ci-après la «directive 2004/18»).

2 Cette demande a été présentée dans le cadre d'un litige opposant la Consulta Regionale Ordine Ingegneri della Lombardia (conseil régional de l'ordre des ingénieurs de Lombardie) e.a. au Comune di Pavia au sujet d'une convention par laquelle ce dernier a confié à l'Università degli Studi di Pavia (université de Pavie, ci-après l'«université») une mission d'étude et de conseil technique et scientifique en vue de l'élaboration des actes constituant le plan d'aménagement du territoire communal 1996.

3 Aux termes du considérant 2 de la directive 2004/18:

4 L'article 1er de cette directive dispose:

2. a) Les 'marchés publics' sont des contrats à titre onéreux conclus par écrit entre un ou plusieurs opérateurs économiques et un ou plusieurs pouvoirs adjudicateurs et ayant pour objet l'exécution de travaux, la fourniture de produits ou la prestation de services au sens de la présente directive.

[...]

d) Les 'marchés publics de services' sont des marchés publics autres que les marchés publics de travaux ou de fournitures portant sur la prestation de services visés à l'annexe II.

8. Les termes 'entrepreneur', 'fournisseur' et 'prestataire de services' désignent toute personne physique ou morale ou entité publique ou groupement de ces personnes et/ou organismes qui offre, respectivement, la réalisation de travaux et/ou d'ouvrages, des produits ou des services sur le marché.

Le[s] terme[s] 'opérateur économique' couvre[nt] à la fois les notions d'entrepreneur, fournisseur et prestataire de services. Il[s sont] utilisé[s] uniquement dans un souci de simplification du texte.

9. Sont considérés comme 'pouvoirs adjudicateurs': l'État, les collectivités territoriales, les organismes de droit public et les associations formées par une ou plusieurs de ces collectivités ou un ou plusieurs de ces organismes de droit public.

5 Aux termes de l'article 2 de ladite directive, «[l]es pouvoirs adjudicateurs traitent les opérateurs économiques sur un pied d'égalité, de manière non discriminatoire et agissent avec transparence».

6 En vertu de l'article 7, sous b), de la directive 2004/18, celle-ci s'applique notamment aux marchés de services passés par des pouvoirs adjudicateurs autres que les autorités gouvernementales centrales reprises à l'annexe IV de cette directive, pour autant qu'il s'agisse de marchés non exclus en vertu des exceptions visées à cet article et que leur valeur estimée hors taxe sur la valeur ajoutée soit égale ou supérieure à 206 000 euros.

7 Conformément à l'article 9, paragraphes 1 et 2, de ladite directive, le calcul de la valeur estimée d'un marché public est fondé sur le montant total payable, hors taxe sur la valeur ajoutée, estimé par le pouvoir adjudicateur au moment de l'envoi de l'avis de marché ou, le cas échéant, au moment où la procédure d'attribution du marché est engagée.

9 L'annexe II A de la directive 2004/18 comporte notamment les catégories de services suivantes:

– catégorie 8, relative aux services de recherche et de développement, à l'exclusion des services de recherche et de développement autres que ceux dont les fruits appartiennent exclusivement au pouvoir adjudicateur et/ou à l'entité adjudicatrice pour son usage dans l'exercice de sa propre activité pour autant que la prestation du service soit entièrement rémunérée par le pouvoir adjudicateur et/ou l'entité adjudicatrice, et

– catégorie 12, relative aux services d'architecture, aux services d'ingénierie, aux services intégrés d'ingénierie, aux services d'aménagement urbain et d'architecture paysagère, aux services connexes de consultations scientifiques et techniques ainsi qu'aux services d'essais et d'analyses techniques.

12 L'article 66, premier alinéa, de ce décret dispose:

Le litige au principal et la question préjudicielle

13 Le 19 août 2009, le Comune di Pavia a publié un «avis de sélection» en vue de la conclusion d'un contrat relatif à une mission d'étude et de conseil technique et scientifique pour la rédaction des actes devant constituer le plan d'aménagement du territoire communal 1996. Cette mission devait consister dans une assistance pluridisciplinaire permettant d'assurer, pour le 31 mars 2010, l'élaboration de toute la documentation et la réalisation de l'ensemble des tâches légalement requises en rapport avec ce plan ainsi que dans la coordination d'un groupe de travail composé des membres concernés du personnel du Comune di Pavia et des consultants mis à disposition par le futur attributaire. La contrepartie pécuniaire était fixée à un montant maximal de 195 000 euros hors taxes, le montant définitif devant être déterminé à l'issue de négociations entre ce Comune et la personne présélectionnée en fonction du programme opérationnel d'étude et de conseil présenté par cette dernière.

14 Cet avis était destiné aux établissements universitaires publics et privés. Ce choix était motivé par la considération selon laquelle, en raison du caractère multidisciplinaire de leur organisation et de leur structure scientifique, ces établissements seraient plus aptes à garantir un niveau d'étude, de conseil et de coordination propre à permettre au Comune di Pavia de donner au futur plan un caractère innovant dans le respect des délais impartis. Par ailleurs, ledit avis qualifiait la mission concernée d'«activité de conseil intellectuel» et précisait qu'elle procédait d'un choix éminemment discrétionnaire, renvoyant à cet égard à la législation nationale en matière de création intellectuelle.

15 La mission concernée a été confiée à l'université.

17 Saisi en degré d'appel, le Consiglio di Stato (Conseil d'État) souligne que les accords conclus entre des administrations publiques sur la base de cette disposition sont une forme de collaboration par laquelle ces administrations coordonnent l'action de leurs appareils administratifs, chacun porteur d'un intérêt public spécifique, en vue d'assurer une gestion des services publics la plus efficace et économe possible. Cette juridiction précise que, en l'état actuel de la jurisprudence nationale, la notion d'intérêt commun est large, correspondant, en substance, à la poursuite de l'intérêt public par les entités participant à l'accord conformément à leurs objectifs institutionnels. Ainsi est-il admis de recourir à ladite disposition lorsqu'une administration publique entend confier à une autre administration publique, à titre onéreux, un service relevant des missions de cette dernière, la nécessité d'un appel d'offre étant écartée au motif que l'administration attributaire n'est pas un opérateur économique et que la contrepartie financière consiste non pas dans une rémunération, mais dans un remboursement des coûts exposés.

18 Le Consiglio di Stato se demande toutefois si la conclusion d'un accord entre administrations publiques n'est pas contraire au principe de la libre concurrence lorsque l'une des administrations concernées est susceptible d'être considérée comme un opérateur économique, cette qualification s'attachant à toute entité publique qui propose des services sur le marché, indépendamment de la poursuite à titre principal d'un but lucratif, de l'existence d'une structure d'entreprise ou d'une présence continue sur le marché. La juridiction de renvoi se réfère, à cet égard, à l'arrêt du 23 décembre 2009, CoNISMa (C-305/08, Rec. p. I-12129). Dans cette optique, dès lors que l'université a la capacité de prendre part à un appel d'offres, les contrats que celle-ci conclut avec des pouvoirs adjudicateurs rentreraient dans le champ d'application des règles de l'Union en matière de marchés publics lorsque ces contrats portent, comme dans l'affaire au principal, sur des prestations d'étude et de conseil technique et scientifique qui ne semblent pas incompatibles avec les services mentionnés dans les catégories 8 et 12 de l'annexe II A de la directive 2004/18.

19 Dans ces conditions, le Consiglio di Stato a décidé de surseoir à statuer et de poser à la Cour la question préjudicielle suivante:

«La [directive 2004/18], et en particulier son article 1er, paragraphe 2, sous a) et d), ses articles 2 et 28 ainsi que son annexe II [A], catégories 8 et 12, s'oppose-t-elle à une réglementation nationale qui autorise la passation d'accords sous forme écrite entre deux pouvoirs adjudicateurs aux fins d'une mission d'étude et de conseil technique et scientifique, tendant à l'élaboration des actes constituant le plan d'aménagement du territoire communal, tels que définis par la réglementation sectorielle nationale et régionale, la contrepartie financière n'étant, par hypothèse, pas véritablement rémunératrice, dès lors que l'administration chargée d'exécuter la mission est susceptible de revêtir la qualité d'opérateur économique?»

Sur la question préjudicielle

21 Il y a lieu de faire application de cette disposition dans la présente affaire.

22 Par sa question, la juridiction de renvoi demande, en substance, si la directive 2004/18 doit être interprétée en ce sens qu'elle s'oppose à une réglementation nationale qui autorise la conclusion, sans appel à la concurrence, d'un contrat par lequel deux entités publiques instituent entre elles une coopération telle que celle en cause au principal.

23 À titre liminaire, il convient d'indiquer, tout d'abord, que, cette question ne portant pas sur les conséquences éventuelles, dans une situation telle que celle en cause au principal, de certaines particularités de celle-ci, telles que la publication d'un avis de sélection ou le fait que cet avis visait exclusivement les établissements universitaires publics et privés, il n'y a pas lieu, pour la Cour, d'aborder ces aspects.

24 Il s'impose de relever, ensuite, que l'application de la directive 2004/18 à un marché public est soumise à la condition que la valeur estimée de celui-ci atteigne le seuil fixé à l'article 7, sous b), de cette directive, en prenant en considération la valeur normale sur le marché des travaux, des fournitures ou des services sur lesquels portent ce marché public. Dans le cas contraire, les règles fondamentales et les principes généraux du traité FUE, en particulier les principes d'égalité de traitement et de non-discrimination en raison de la nationalité ainsi que l'obligation de transparence qui en découle, sont d'application, pour autant que le marché concerné présente un intérêt transfrontalier certain eu égard, notamment, à son importance et au lieu de son exécution (arrêt du 19 décembre 2012, Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce e.a., C-159/11, non encore publié au Recueil, point 23 et jurisprudence citée).

25 Toutefois, la circonstance que le contrat en cause au principal puisse relever, le cas échéant, soit de la directive 2004/18, soit des règles fondamentales du traité FUE et des principes généraux du droit de l'Union n'influence pas la réponse à apporter à la question posée (arrêt Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce e.a., précité, point 24).

26 Cela étant précisé, il importe de relever que, conformément à l'article 1er, paragraphe 2, de la directive 2004/18, un contrat à titre onéreux conclu par écrit entre un opérateur économique et un pouvoir adjudicateur, et ayant pour objet la prestation de services visés à l'annexe II A de cette directive constitue un marché public.

27 À cet égard, premièrement, il est sans incidence, d'une part, que cet opérateur soit lui-même un pouvoir adjudicateur et, d'autre part, que l'entité concernée ne poursuive pas à titre principal une finalité lucrative, qu'elle n'ait pas une structure d'entreprise ou encore qu'elle n'assure pas une présence continue sur le marché (arrêt Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce e.a., précité, point 26).

28 Ainsi, s'agissant d'entités telles que des établissements universitaires publics, la Cour a jugé que de telles entités ont, en principe, la faculté de participer à une procédure d'attribution d'un marché public de services. Toutefois, les États membres peuvent réglementer les activités de ces entités, et notamment autoriser ou ne pas autoriser ces dernières à opérer sur le marché compte tenu de leurs objectifs institutionnels et statutaires. Pour autant, si et dans la mesure où lesdites entités sont habilitées à offrir certains services sur le marché, il ne peut pas leur être interdit de participer à un appel d'offres portant sur les services concernés (arrêt Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce e.a., précité, point 27). Or, en l'occurrence, la juridiction de renvoi a indiqué que l'article 66, premier alinéa, du décret du président de la République n° 382 du 11 juillet 1980 autorise expressément les universités publiques à fournir des prestations de recherche et de conseil à des entités publiques ou privées dans la mesure où cette activité ne porte pas atteinte à leur mission d'enseignement.

29 Deuxièmement, des activités telles que celles faisant l'objet du contrat en cause au principal, nonobstant le fait, mentionné par la juridiction de renvoi, qu'elles sont susceptibles de relever des missions confiées aux universités, en particulier de la recherche scientifique, rentrent, selon ce qui constitue la nature effective de ces activités, soit dans le cadre des services de recherche et de développement visés à l'annexe II A, catégorie 8, de la directive 2004/18, soit dans le cadre des services d'aménagement urbain et des services connexes de consultations scientifiques et techniques visés à la catégorie 12 de cette annexe.

30 Troisièmement, tel qu'il ressort du sens normal et habituel des termes «à titre onéreux», un contrat ne saurait échapper à la notion de marché public du seul fait que sa rémunération reste limitée au remboursement des frais encourus pour fournir le service convenu (arrêt Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce e.a., précité, point 29).

31 Sous réserve des vérifications qui incombent à la juridiction de renvoi, il apparaît que le contrat en cause au principal présente l'ensemble des caractéristiques énoncées aux points 25 à 29 de la présente ordonnance.

35 Il s'agit, en second lieu, des contrats qui instaurent une coopération entre des entités publiques ayant pour objet d'assurer la mise en œuvre d'une mission de service public qui est commune à celles-ci (arrêt Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce e.a., précité, point 34 et jurisprudence citée).

38 À cet égard, il paraît résulter des indications contenues dans la décision de renvoi que ce contrat comporte un ensemble d'aspects matériels dont une partie importante, voire prépondérante, correspond à des activités généralement effectuées par des ingénieurs ou des architectes et qui, bien qu'elles soient basées sur un fondement scientifique, ne s'apparentent cependant pas à la recherche scientifique. Par conséquent, contrairement à ce que la Cour a pu constater au point 37 de l'arrêt Commission/Allemagne, précité, la mission de service public qui fait l'objet de la coopération entre des entités publiques instaurée par ledit contrat ne paraît pas assurer la mise en œuvre d'une mission de service public qui est commune au Comune di Pavia et à l'université.

40 Il convient donc de répondre à la question posée que le droit de l’Union en matière de marchés publics s’oppose à une réglementation nationale qui autorise la conclusion, sans appel à la concurrence, d’un contrat par lequel des entités publiques instituent entre elles une coopération lorsque – ce qu’il appartient à la juridiction de renvoi de vérifier – un tel contrat n’a pas pour objet d’assurer la mise en œuvre d’une mission de service public commune à ces entités, qu’il n’est pas exclusivement régi par des considérations et des exigences propres à la poursuite d’objectifs d’intérêt public ou qu’il est de nature à placer un prestataire privé dans une situation privilégiée par rapport à ses concurrents.

Sur les dépens

41 La procédure revêtant, à l’égard des parties au principal, le caractère d’un incident soulevé devant la juridiction de renvoi, il appartient à celle-ci de statuer sur les dépens. Les frais exposés pour soumettre des observations à la Cour, autres que ceux desdites parties, ne peuvent faire l’objet d’un remboursement.

Par ces motifs, la Cour (dixième chambre) dit pour droit:

Le droit de l’Union en matière de marchés publics s’oppose à une réglementation nationale qui autorise la conclusion, sans appel à la concurrence, d’un contrat par lequel des entités publiques instituent entre elles une coopération lorsque – ce qu’il appartient à la juridiction de renvoi de vérifier – un tel contrat n’a pas pour objet d’assurer la mise en œuvre d’une mission de service public commune à ces entités, qu’il n’est pas exclusivement régi par des considérations et des exigences propres à la poursuite d’objectifs d’intérêt public ou qu’il est de nature à placer un prestataire privé dans une situation privilégiée par rapport à ses concurrents.

12 September 2013 (*)

(Public procurement – Directive 2004/18/EC – Article 1(9), second subparagraph, point (c) – Concept of 'body governed by public law' – Condition relating to the financing of the activity, or to management supervision, or to supervision of the activity by the State, by regional or local authorities or other bodies governed by public law – Association of medical practitioners – Financing provided for by law by means of contributions paid by the members of that association – Amount of the contributions fixed by the assembly of that association – Independence of that association in determining the scope and the rules for the performance of its statutory duties)

In Case C-526/11,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU, from the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf (Germany), made by decision of 5 October 2011, received at the Court on 18 October 2011, in the proceedings

v

Ärztekammer Westfalen-Lippe,

intervening party:

WWF Druck + Medien GmbH,

THE COURT (Fifth Chamber),

composed of T. von Danwitz, President of the Chamber, A. Rosas, E. Juhász, D. Šváby (Rapporteur) and C. Vajda, Judges, having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 8 November 2012,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– IVD GmbH & Co. KG, by J. Eggers, Rechtsanwalt,

– the Ärztekammer Westfalen-Lippe, by S. Gesterkamp and T. Schneider-Lasogga, Rechtsanwälte,

– the Czech Government, by M. Smolek and T. Müller, acting as Agents,

– the European Commission, by M. Noll-Ehlers, A. Tokár and C. Zadra, acting as Agents,

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 30 January 2013,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 1(9), second subparagraph, point (c) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114; 'the Directive').

2 The reference has been made in proceedings between IVD GmbH & Co. KG ('IVD') and the Ärztekammer Westfalen-Lippe (the Medical Association of Westphalia-Lippe, 'the Ärztekammer'), concerning the latter's decision to award a contract to another undertaking following a call for tenders.

Legal context

Union law

3 Under the second and third subparagraphs of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18:

'A "body governed by public law" means any body:

(a) established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character, and

(b) having legal personality, and

(c) financed, for the most part, by the State, regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law; or subject to management supervision by those bodies; or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities, or by other bodies governed by public law.

Non-exhaustive lists of bodies and categories of bodies governed by public law which fulfil the criteria referred to in (a), (b) and (c) of the second subparagraph are set out in Annex III.'

4 With regard to the Federal Republic of Germany, that annex mentions professional associations, in particular, associations representing medical practitioners, among the authorities, establishments and foundations created by Federal, State or local authorities.

German law

5 Under Paragraph 6(1)(1) to (5) of the Law on health professions of the Land of North Rhine-Westphalia (Heilberufsgesetz des Landes Nordrhein-Westfalen, 'the HeilBerG NRW'), the tasks of the Ärztekammer are, in particular:

1. to support the public health and public veterinary services in the performance of their tasks, and especially to draw up proposals for all questions concerning medicine and the health professions;

2. to give opinions at the supervisory authority's request, and also to produce experts' reports and to nominate experts at the competent authorities' request;

3. to guarantee an emergency medical and dental service outside consultation hours, to publicise it and to lay down the rules regulating its organisation;

4. to promote and carry out the continuing professional training of members of the association, in order to help ensure that the knowledge, skills and abilities necessary to the practice of their profession correspond throughout their whole working life to the latest state of practice and science, to make rules concerning continuing education in accordance with [this] law and to issue certificates relating to specialities;

5. to promote and carry out measures concerning the quality of health and veterinary services, in particular to establish certifications, in agreement with the interested parties.'

6 It is apparent from the order for reference and from the file before the Court that that law:

– also entrusts to the Ärztekammer, among others, the tasks of working to maintain the profession at a high level, of protecting the professional interests of its members, of watching over good relations between them, of setting up welfare associations for its members and their families, and of informing the public about its activities and topics related to the profession (Paragraph 6(1)(6) to (8), (10) and (12);

– awards membership of that association to all medical practitioners practising their profession in the Land of North Rhine-Westphalia or having a permanent place of residence there (Paragraph 2);

– in principle, confers the right to vote in the general assembly of that association on all its members (Paragraph 12(1));

– provides for the right for the Ärztekammer to raise contributions from its members in order to perform its tasks (Paragraph 6(4), first sentence);

– provides that the amount of those contributions must be fixed by a regulation adopted by the general assembly of that association (Paragraph 23(1));

– makes the regulation subject to the approval of a supervisory authority (Paragraph 23(2)), that approval being intended only to ensure that the association's budget is balanced; and – provides that the supervisory body is to carry out, ex post facto, a general review in order to establish whether the manner in which the Ärztekammer carries out its tasks is compatible with the legislation (Paragraph 28(1)).

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred 7 The Ärztekammer launched an invitation to tender for the printing and distribution of its newsletter and for the placing of advertising and the sale of subscriptions, a contract notice having been published in the Official Journal of the European Union on 5 November 2010. After two other tenderers had been rejected, the choice was made between IVD and WWF Druck + Meien GmbH, and in the end the latter's tender was accepted.

8 IVD challenged that award by way of a complaint, then by an action before the Vergabekammer, the competent administrative body for hearing and determining disputes concerning public contracts, claiming that the successful tenderer had not submitted certain references required by the Ärztekammer. Its action was dismissed by that body, its claims being declared to be unfounded.

9 Hearing an action against the decision of the Vergabekammer, the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf (Higher Regional Court, Düsseldorf) decided of its own motion to consider whether the Ärztekammer had the status of a contracting authority, a question on which the admissibility of the action brought by IVD depends.

10 The referring court considers that the tasks entrusted to that association by Paragraph 6(1)(1) to (5) of the HeilBerG NRW are tasks in the general interest not of an industrial or commercial character. Furthermore, it is apparent from the file before the Court that that association has legal personality. Therefore, it satisfies the criteria laid down in Article 1(9), second subparagraph, points (a) and (b) of Directive 2004/18.

11 On the other hand, the referring court wonders whether the Ärztekammer's right to raise contributions from its members constitutes indirect State financing satisfying the first condition in Article 1(9), second subparagraph, point (c) of the directive.

12 According to the referring court, it follows from Case C-337/06 Bayerischer Rundfunk and Others [2007] ECR I-11173 and Case C-300/07 Hans & Christophorus Oymanns [2009] ECR I-4779, that such indirect State financing exists when the State either itself fixes the base and the amount of the contributions, or exercises such influence, by way of provisions setting out precisely those services that the legal person concerned must supply and controlling the determination of the amount of contributions, that that legal person has no more than narrow discretion in fixing that amount.

13 The referring court notes that the applicable law does not lay down the amount of contributions collected by the Ärztekammer and does not determine the extent of, or the means of implementing, the tasks assigned to that body in such a way that it may set the amount of contributions only within narrow limits. On the contrary, enjoying broad discretion regarding the performance of its tasks, the association has similar latitude in the determining of its financing needs and, therefore, in setting the amount of contributions due from its members. That court points out too that, although there is a system for approval by the supervisory authority of the regulation fixing that amount, that approval is intended only to ensure that the association's budget is balanced.

14 Having regard to those specific factors, the referring court takes the view that the characteristic features of the Ärztekammer do not match those set out by the Court in the judgments mentioned in paragraph 12 above, and is uncertain whether they are necessary in all cases in order for the condition relating to public financing to be satisfied.

15 In those circumstances, the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'Is a body … (here, a professional association) … "financed, for the most part, by the State" or "subject to management supervision" by the State, within the meaning of point (c) of the second subparagraph of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18/EC:

– if that body is entitled by law to raise contributions from its members but does not fix the amount of those contributions or the scope of the services to be financed by them;

– but the fees regulation requires approval by the State?'

The question referred for a preliminary ruling

16 By its question, the referring court asks, essentially, whether point (c) of the second subparagraph of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that a body, such as a professional association governed by public law, satisfies either the criterion concerning financing for the most part by the public authorities, if that association is financed mainly by contributions paid by its members, the amount of which it is authorised to fix and collect by the law applicable, if that law does not determine the scope of, and the detailed rules governing, the actions undertaken by that body in carrying out its statutory tasks, which those contributions are intended to finance, or the criterion relating to management supervision by the public authorities, if the decision by which that body fixes the amount of those contributions must be approved by a supervisory authority.

17 It must at the outset be observed, as the referring court has done, that the Ärztekammer is mentioned in Annex III to Directive 2004/18, in which the bodies governed by public law referred to in Article 1(9), second subparagraph are identified for each Member State. In Part III of that annex, which concerns the Federal Republic of Germany, Category 1.1, relating to 'Authorities, establishments and foundations governed by public law and created by Federal, State or local authorities' mentions in its second indent, as regards the subcategory 'professional associations', inter alia 'professional associations representing … medical practitioners'.

18 However, as the Advocate General observed in points 20 and 21 of his Opinion, the inclusion of a given body in that annex is only the application of the substantive rule laid down in Article 1(9), second subparagraph of Directive 2004/18, which does not give rise to an irrebuttable presumption that that body is a 'body governed by public law' within the meaning of that provision. Therefore, it is for the judicature of the European Union, when hearing a request reasoned to that effect by the national court, to satisfy itself that the directive is internally consistent by verifying whether the inclusion of a given body in the annex constitutes a correct application of the substantive criteria (see, to that effect, Hans & Christophorus Oymanns, paragraphs 42, 43 and 45).

19 In that connection, in accordance with Article 1(9), second subparagraph of Directive 2004/18, a body is a 'body governed by public law' within the meaning of that provision and is subject, on that basis, to the provisions of that directive when three cumulative conditions are satisfied, namely: that body was established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character (point (a)); it has legal personality (point b) and it is financed, for the most part, by public authorities or it is subject to management supervision by the latter or it has an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the public authorities (point (c)).

20 The three alternative criteria laid down in point (c) of the second subparagraph of Article 1(9) of the directive all reflect close dependence vis-à-vis the public authorities. That dependence is likely to enable the latter to influence the decisions of the body concerned with respect to public contracts, which might lead to considerations other than economic ones guiding those decisions, and, in particular, to the risk that preference might be given to national tenderers or applicants, which would create barriers to the free movement of goods and services that the application of the directives on public procurement specifically seek to prevent (see, as regards similar provisions before Directive 2004/18, Case C-237/99 Commission v France [2001] ECR I-939, paragraphs 39, 41, 42, 44, 48 and the case-law cited).

21 In the light of those objectives, each of those criteria must be interpreted in functional terms (see, as regards similar provisions before Directive 2004/18 Commission v France, paragraph 43 and the case-law cited, and Bayerischer Rundfunk and Others, paragraph 40), that is to say, given an interpretation independent of the formal rules for its use (see, by analogy, Case C-360/96 BFI Holding [1998] ECR I-6821, paragraphs 62 and 63), and each criterion must be understood to create close dependence on the public authorities.

22 First of all, as regards the first criterion laid down in point (c) of the second subparagraph of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18 relating to financing for the most part by the public authorities, the concept of financing refers to a transfer of funds made without specific consideration with the aim of supporting the activities of the body concerned (see, as regards similar provisions before Directive 2004/18, Case C-380/98 University of Cambridge [2000] ECR I-8035, paragraph 21).

23 Since that concept must be interpreted in functional terms, the Court has held that the criterion relating to majority financing by the public authorities includes a method of indirect financing.

24 Such financing may be made by means of a fee provided for and imposed by statute as regards its principle and amount, and which does not constitute consideration for actual use of services provided by the body concerned by the persons liable to pay the fee and in respect of which the detailed rules for collection derive from the powers of a public authority (see, to that effect, Bayerischer Rundfunk and Others, paragraphs 41, 42, 44, 45 and 47 to 49).

25 The fact that, formally, a body itself fixes the amount of contributions which provide for the greater part of its financing does not make it impossible that indirect financing could satisfy that criterion. That is the case when bodies such as statutory sickness insurance funds are financed by contributions paid by or for their members without specific consideration, when membership of such a fund and the payment of those contributions are required by law, and when the amount of those contributions, although formally fixed by the funds themselves, is, on the one hand, laid down by statute, the law determining the services provided by those funds and the associated expenses and prohibiting them from operating on a profit-making basis, and must, on the other, be authorised by the supervisory authority, and when contributions are compulsorily recovered on the basis of the provisions of public law (see, to that effect, Hans & Christophorus Oymanns, paragraphs 53 to 56).

26 It must, however, be held that the situation of a body such as the Ärztekammer cannot be treated like that described in the preceding paragraph of this judgment.

27 Although the tasks of that body are set out in the HeilBerG NRW, it is nevertheless clear from the order for reference that a notable feature of its situation is the considerable degree of autonomy left to it by that law to determine the nature and scope of, and the procedures for, the actions it undertakes in order to perform its tasks and to set the budget necessary to that end and, consequently, the amount of contributions that it will claim from its members. The fact that the regulation fixing that amount must be approved by a supervisory public authority is not decisive when that authority merely ascertains that the budget of the body concerned is balanced, that is to say, that the body is, by means of contributions from its members and from its other resources, sure of enough revenue to cover all the costs relating to its functioning according to the rules that it has itself adopted.

28 Furthermore, as the Advocate General observed, in points 65 and 66 of his Opinion, that independence in relation to the public authorities is further strengthened in the present case by the fact that that regulation is adopted by an assembly constituted by the contributors themselves.

29 Next, as regards the second criterion laid down in point (c) of the second subparagraph of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18, relating to management supervision by the public authorities, it must be recalled that, in principle, a review ex post facto does not satisfy that criterion, for such a review does not enable the public authorities to influence the decisions of the body in question in relation to public contracts (see, to that effect, Case C-373/00 Adolf Truley [2003] ECR I-1931, paragraph 70). That is the case, in principle, of a general review of legality conducted ex post facto by a supervisory authority and, a fortiori, of an action taken by that authority in the form of approval of the body's decision fixing the amount of contributions which provide for the greater part of its financing, which is confined to ascertaining that the body's budget is balanced.

30 It appears therefore that, although the law determines its tasks and the manner in which the greater part of its financing must be organised, and provides that the decision by which it fixes the amount of the contributions payable by its members must be approved by a supervisory authority, a body such as the Ärztekammer has in fact organisational and budgetary independence which precludes its being considered to be in a state closely dependent on the public authorities. Therefore, the means of financing of such a body do not constitute financing for the most part by the public authorities and do not allow management supervision of that body by the public authorities.

31 Having regard to all the foregoing considerations, the answer to the question referred is that, on a proper construction of point (c) of the second subparagraph of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18, a body such as a professional association governed by public law satisfies neither the criterion relating to financing for the most part by the public authorities when it is financed for the most part by contributions paid by its members, in respect of which it is authorised by law to fix and collect the amount, if that law does not determine the scope of, and procedures for, the actions undertaken by that body in the performance of its statutory tasks, which those contributions are intended to finance, nor the criterion relating to management supervision by the public authorities simply because the decision by which that body fixes the amount of those contributions must be approved by a supervisory authority.

Costs

32 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fifth Chamber) hereby rules:

On a proper construction of point (c) of the second subparagraph of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, a body such as a professional association governed by public law satisfies neither the criterion relating to financing for the most part by the public authorities when that body is financed for the most part by contributions paid by its members, in respect of which it is authorised by law to fix and collect the amount, if that law does not determine the scope of, and procedures for, the actions undertaken by that body in the performance of its statutory tasks, which those contributions are intended to finance, nor the criterion relating to management supervision by the public authorities simply because the decision by which that body sets the amount of those contributions must be approved by a supervisory authority.

MENGOZZI
delivered on 30 January 2013 (1)

Case C-526/11

v
Ärztekammer Westfalen-Lippe

(Request for a preliminary ruling from the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf – Vergabesenat (Germany))

(Public procurement – Directive 2004/18/EC – Article 1(9), second subparagraph, point (c) – Concepts of 'body governed by public law' and of financing and supervision by the State – Professional association having a statutory right to raise contributions from its members, but having broad discretion in determining the amount of the contributions)

I – Introduction

1. In this request for a preliminary ruling, the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf – Vergabesenat (the chamber having jurisdiction in public procurement matters of the Higher Regional Court of Düsseldorf) (Germany) asks the Court for an interpretation of second subparagraph, point (c) of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18/EC, (2) concerning the concept of 'body governed by public law'. The referring cout asks, in essence, whether the Ärztekammer Westfalen-Lippe (the association of doctors in Westphalia-Lippe ('the doctors' association')) is a body governed by public law and, consequently, a contracting authority within the meaning of that directive.

II – Legal framework

A – EU law

2. Under the second and third subparagraphs of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18:

'A "body governed by public law" means any body:

(a) established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character;

(b) having legal personality; and

(c) financed, for the most part, by the State, regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law; or subject to management supervision by those bodies; or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities, or by other bodies governed by public law.

Non-exhaustive lists of bodies and categories of bodies governed by public law which fulfil the criteria referred to in (a), (b) and (c) of the second subparagraph are set out in Annex III. …'

3. With regard to the Federal Republic of Germany, that annex refers to professional associations, and in particular professional associations representing medical practitioners, among the authorities created by Federal, State or local authorities (Part III, category 1.1, second indent).

B – German law

4. Paragraph 6(1)(1) to (5) of the Law on health professions of the Land of North Rhein-Westphalia (Heilberufsgesetz des Landes Nordrhein-Westfalen ('the HeilBerG NRW')) lays down in general terms the tasks of those professions, including those of the doctors' association.

5. According to that provision, the tasks of the doctors' association are, inter alia, to support the public health service and public veterinary service, to adopt an opinion at the request of the supervisory authority, to guarantee an emergency medical and dental service outside consultation hours, to publicise it and to issue an emergency service regulation; to promote and carry out the professional training of members and to promote and carry out measures concerning the quality of health and veterinary services.

6. Moreover, it is apparent from the documents before the Court that the HeilBerG NRW grants to the doctors' association, in order for it to fulfil the tasks conferred on it, the right to raise contributions from its members (first sentence of Paragraph 6(4)), provides that the amount of the contributions must be fixed by regulations adopted by the assembly of that association (Paragraph 23(1)) and makes those regulations subject to the approval of a supervisory authority (Paragraph 23(2)), that approval being intended only to ensure that that association has a balanced budget.

III – The main proceedings and the question referred

7. The doctors' association initiated a procedure for the award of a public contract for the printing and distribution of its newsletter and the placement of advertising and the sale of subscriptions, and a contract notice was published in the Official Journal of the European Union on 5 November 2010. After two other tenderers had been rejected, the choice was to be made between IVD GmbH & Co. KG ('IVD') and WWF Druck + Medien GmbH, and the tender of the latter was ultimately successful.

8. IVD challenged that award by means of a complaint and then an application for review before the Vergabekammer (the chamber with jurisdiction at first instance in public procurement matters), claiming that the successful tenderer had not submitted some of the references required by the contracting authority. Its application for review was dismissed by that authority which ruled that it was unfounded.

9. The referring court, that is to say the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf – Vergabesenat, before which the dispute was brought, decided of its own motion to make a reference to the Court on the issue of the doctors' association's status as a contracting authority, an issue on which the admissibility of the application for review brought by IVD depends.

10. That court considers that the tasks entrusted to that association by Paragraph 6(1)(1) to (5) by the HeilBerG NRW are tasks 'in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character'. It also notes that that asssociation has legal personality. Accordingly, the referring court considers that the conditions set out in points (a) and (b) of the second subparagraph of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18 are fulfilled.

11. However, it is unsure whether the right to raise contributions from its members, which is available to the doctors' association, constitutes indirect State financing which fulfils the condition set out in point (c) of the second subparagraph of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18.

12. The referring court notes that the HeilBerG NRW does not determine the amount of the contributions raised by the doctors' association and does not lay down the extent and method of fulfilment of the tasks conferred on it in such a way that that association could set the amount of the contribution only within limited parameters. In fact, since it has broad discretion in fulfilling its tasks, that association has broad discretion in determining its financial requirements and thus in fixing the amount of the contributions. The referring court also points out that, althought there is a system of approval by the supervisory authority, that approval is intended only to ensure that the doctor's association has a balanced budget.

13. Having regard to those specific considerations and to Bayerischer Rundfunk and Others (3) and Hans & Christophorus Oymanns, (4) the referring Court asks whether the characteristics established by the Court in those judgments are necessary in order to fulfil the condition of indirect State financing.

14. In that context, the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf – Vergabesenat decided to stay the proceedings and refer the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'Is a … professional association … within the meaning of Article 1(9) second subparagraph, point (c) of Directive 2004/18/EC … "financed, for the most part, by the State" or is it subject to "management supervision" by the State, if:

– the body has the right by law to raise contributions from its members but does not set the amount of those contributions or the extent of the services to be financed thereby;

– the fees regulations, however, require approval by the State?'

IV – The procedure before the Court

15. Observations were submitted by IVD, the doctors' association, the Czech Government and the the European Commission.

16. The doctors' association and the Commission presented argument at the hearing on 8 November 2012.

V – Legal analysis

A – The scope of the question referred

17. First of all, it should be recalled that Annex III to Directive 2004/18 lists German professional associations representing medical practitioners among the contracting authorities deemed to fulfil the substantive conditions of that directive. (5)

18. Accordingly, that listing includes the doctors' association at issue in the main proceedings.

19. Although the questioin raised by the referring court relates to the interpretation of point (c) of the second subparagraph of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18, it indirectly calls into question the validity of the inclusion of that association in Annex III to that directive.

20. As the Court has already had the opportunity to point out in Hans & Christophorus Oymanns, the inclusion of a body in Annex III to Directive 2004/18 constitutes only a simple or rebuttable presumption that that body is a contracting authority under that directive, so that the European Union judicature must make sure that the European Union measure in question is internally consistent by verifying whether that inclusion constitutes a correct application of the substantive criteria laid down in the second subparagraph of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18. (6) (7)

21. The Court has actually already had the opportunity to point out that Directive 2004/18 contains both substantive rules, such as those in the second subparagraph of Article 1(9) of that directive, which lays down the conditions which a body must fulfil if it is to be regarded as a contracting authority within the meaning of the directive, and measures implementing those substantive rules, such as the inclusion in Annex III to the same directive of a non-exhaustive list of public bodies deemed to fulfil those conditions. (8)

22. As a result, the answer to be given to the question referred will also make it possible to determine whether it was right to include German associations representing doctors, in so far as they include the doctors' association at issue in the main proceedings, in Annex III to Directive 2004/18.

23. Accordingly, it is important to point out, first, that the three criteria laid down by Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18 are cumulative. (9) An entity constitutes a body governed by public law, – subject to the procedures for the award of public contracts, where that entity was point (a);

– established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not being of an industrial or commercial nature; point (b) has legal personality; and

– point (c) is financed, for the most part, by the State, regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law; or is subject to management supervision by those bodies; or has an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities, or by other bodies governed by public law.

24. As is clear from the order for reference, the conditions laid down in points (a) and (b) of the second subparagraph of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18 are fulfilled in the case in the main proceedings. (10)

25. Secondly, it is necessary to take into consideration the three alternative criteria laid down in point (c) of the second subparagraph of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18.

26. In that regard, the referring court seems to have considered that neither the last of those criteria, that is, in essence, the one linked to the appointment by the public authorities of the majority of members of one of the organs of the entity, nor the second, concerning the management supervision of the entity by those public authorities, is satisfied in the present case.

27. It should be noted, however, with regard to the criterion linked to the supervision by the public authorities of the management of the body, that, whilst the wording of the question referred to the Court mentions that criterion, the referring court provided no ground explaining its possible doubts as to its application in the present case.

28. That uncertainty should therefore reasonably lead to the assumption that the referring court seeks to exclude the application of that criterion in the case in the main proceedings. Moreover, as the doctors' association and the Commission pointed out in their respective written observations, in the light of the information provided by the referring court, it appears that the possibility that the management of that association is supervised must be rejected. Indeed, whereas the existence of such supervision must make it possible to influence the decisions in relation to public contracts of the body which is subject thereto, the Court has already held that the criterion of managerial supervision cannot be regarded as being satisfied in the case of mere review. (11) However, in all likelihood, this appears to be the nature of the review of legality, with a right to information, exercised over the doctors' association by the supervisory authority, pursuant to Paragraph 28(1) of the HeilBerG NRW. (12)

29. In the light of those observations, I consider that it is unnecessary further to dwell on the fulfilment of the criterion of managerial supervision by the public authorities of the body at issue in the main proceedings.

30. It is important, however, to verify whether the criterion concerning financing, for the most part, by the public authorities is fulfilled in the present case.

B – The criterion of financing, for the most part, by the public authorities

31. I would recall that the referring court asks whether the criterion of financing, for the most part, by the public authorities, provided for by point (c) of the second subparagraph of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18, is fulfilled if a professional association, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, is financed (for the most part) (13) by a contribution from its members, if it has the right by law to raise those contributions but does not set the amount of those contributions or the extent of the services to be financed thereby.

32. In their respective observations, the doctors' association and the Czech Republic propose that that question should be answered in the negative, whereas the Commission takes the opposite view.

33. As it explained at greater length at the hearing before the Court, the Commission's reasoning is based, in particular, on the argument that mere 'proximity' to the State authorities is sufficient for the purposes of fulfilling the criterion of financing, for the most part, by the public authorities.

34. It is true, and I fully concur, that, with regard, in particular, to the interpretation of that expression, it is appropriate to refer to the aim of the directives in relation to awarding public contracts, and in particular the aim of avoiding both the risk of preference being given to national tenderers or applicants whenever a contract is awarded by the contracting authorities and the possibility that a body financed or controlled by the State, regional or local authorities or other bodies governed by public law may choose to be guided by considerations other than economic ones. (14)

35. Accordingly, the concept of 'contracting authority', including a 'body governed by public law', must be interpreted in functional terms, with the objective of eliminating barriers to the freedom to provide services and goods and opening up markets in the Member States to competition which is undistorted and as wide as possible. (15)

36. The approach advocated by the Commission, based on the objectives pursued by Directive 2004/18, could therefore lead to a flexible or broad interpretation of the link between the public authorities and the body whose financing, and thus its status as a 'contracting authority', is at issue.

37. It is important, however, not to lose sight of the fact that it is also clear from the case-law that each of the alternative criteria set out in point (c) of the second subparagraph of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18 is presented as a variant of 'close dependency' on another contracting authority, the State, regional or local authorities or other bodies governed by public law. (16)

38. An excessively broad interpretation of the first of the three criteria listed by that provision might not only distort the need to demonstrate the existence of close dependency of the body at issue on the public authorities, but would also deprive the other two criteria referred to in that article of effectiveness.

39. Acccordingly, I cannot agree with the disproportionately broad interpretation of the criterion of financing, for the most part, by the public authorities which is advocated by the Commission and which seeks to treat 'close dependency' of the body at issue on the public authorities in the same way as mere 'proximity' to them.

40. I am of the opinion that excluding the excessively broad interpretation advocated by the Commission is particulary justified, since the present case, like Bayerischer Rundfunk and Others and Hans & Christophorus Oymanns, raises the delicate issue of indirect financing by the public authorities and the limits on the application of EU rules on the award of public contracts.

41. Following the finding that point (c) of the second subparagraph of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18 contains no details as to the procedures for delivering the financing in question, the Court, inter alia, held in those two judgments that that provision laid down no requirement that the activity of the bodies in question should be directly financed by the State or by another public body, and accordingly a method of indirect financing is sufficient. (17)

42. Although, in each of those judgments, the Court found that the bodies at issue were actually financed indirectly by the public authorities, the precise and relevant circumstances underlying that finding were the subject of fierce debate in the present case between the doctors' association and the Czech Republic, on the one hand, and the Commission, on the other hand.

43. Those circumstances warrant some attention.

44. In Bayerischer Rundfunk and Others, the Court was asked whether the public broadcasting bodies in Germany were contracting authorities, although their activity was financed, for the most part, by television licence fees for which individuals who possessed a receiver were liable.

45. In that case, the Court pointed out that the television licence fee had its origin in the State Treaty on broadcasting, in other words in a measure of the State, and was not the result of any contractual arrangement entered into by those bodies and the customers. (18) The amount of the fee was determined by formal decision of the Parliaments and Governments of the Länder, adopted on the basis of a report drawn up by an independent commission of experts responsible for examining estimates of the financial requirements declared by those bodies. The Parliaments and Governments could depart from those recommendations only on a limited number of grounds. (19)

46. However, the Court found that, even if the position were that the Parliaments and Governments of the Länder were obliged to follow without qualification those recommendations, it would remain the case that this mechanism for fixing the amount of the fee was established by the State, which has thereby transferred public authority powers to that commission of experts. (20)

47. As regards the procedures for the levying of the fee, the Court noted that it was clear from the State Treaty that the latter was recovered by an association governed by public law which had the task of invoicing and collecting the fee and, on behalf of the public broadcasting bodies, issued notices of liability to the charge. (21) Similarly, if payment was not made on time, notices of arrears were the subject of enforcement by administrative proceedings, through the possibility of having recourse to enforced collection following an application by the broadcasting organisation concerned, with the result that the bodies in question enjoyed the powers of a public authority. (22)

48. The Court concluded that, although the State granted to those bodies the right to collect the fee themselves, the fact that the financing was brought into being by a measure of the State, was guaranteed by the State and was secured by methods of charging and collection which fell within public authority powers satisfied the condition of ‘financing … by the State’ for the purposes of application of the Community rules on the awarding of public contracts. (23)

49. In the second of the judgments cited above, that is to say Hans & Christophorus Oymanns, which, furthermore, again related to the Federal Republic of Germany, the national court in essence asked, inter alia, whether, in view of their method of financing, statutory sickness insurance funds could be regarded as being financed, for the most part, by the State, within the meaning of point (c) of the second subparagraph of Article 1(9) de la Directive 2004/18.

50. The Court based its affirmative response on four considerations.

51. First, it pointed out, that the statutory sickness insurance funds were financed, for the most part, by compulsory contributions from members which were paid without any specific consideration in return, since membership of the funds, and payment of contributions, were both required by law. (24)

52. Secondly, and although, unlike in Bayerischer Rundfunk and Others, the contribution rate was fixed by the funds themselves, the Court endorsed the assessment of the national court that the funds had a very limited discretion in that regard inasmuch as their mission was to provide the benefits laid down in the social security legislation. According to the Court, therefore, since the benefits, and the expenditure connected with them, were imposed by law and the funds performed their functions on a non-profit-making basis, the contribution rate had to be set in such a way that the revenue accrued was no lower and no higher than expenditure. (25)

53. Thirdly, the Court noted that the setting of the contribution rate by the statutory sickness insurance funds required, in any event, the approval of the body which supervised each fund so that the amount of those contributions was to some extent, laid down by law, the other revenue (direct payments by the federal authorities) being, however, unquestionably direct financing by the State. (26)

54. Fourthly and finally, with regard to the the collection and recovery of contributions, the Court pointed out that contributions were collected without any possibility of intervention on the part of the insured person and were also compulsorily recovered on the basis of the provisions of public law. (27)

55. The Court concluded from this that the statutory sickness insurance funds were therefore, albeit essentially in an indirect manner, financed, for the most part, by the public authorities.

56. What can be inferred from those two judgments?

57. In the first place, it is perfectly clear that in order to find that a body is indirectly financed, for the most part, by the public authorities, the Court uses the ‘body of evidence’ method.

58. That evidence may, in my view, be listed as follows: first of all, the resource in question originates with the State and its payment is compulsory; next, its collection from those liable to pay it and the methods for determining it, and, where appropriate, the extent and degree of the control exercised over those methods by the supervisory public authorities, are authoritarian in nature, and; finally, public authority powers are granted to the bodies in question to ensure recovery of that resource.

59. In the second place, however, it remains unclear whether each element of that evidence must be found to exist in a given situation and what is the relative weight which the Court attaches to each element.

60. I consider that the answer to those questions lies in part in the need to find a ‘close dependency’ of the body in question on the public authorities.

61. However, it seems to me that, in the light of the evidence highlighted in point 58 of this Opinion, such a close dependency is absent in the case of the body at issue in the main proceedings.

62. First of all, it is true that it is the HeilBerG NRW, that is to say the law of a German Land, which grants the the doctors’ association the right to collect the contribution in order to ensure the financing of the tasks sets out in Paragraph 6(1) thereof. The imposition of that contribution has, as acknowledged by all the interested parties who submitted observations before the Court, a public origin, in this case at the infra-State level. Moreover, the contribution is paid without any specific consideration therefor.

63. However, as was rightly observed by the Czech Republic, it is important to point out that, unlike Bayerischer Rundfunk and Others and Hans & Christophorus Oymanns, that contribution is collected not from third parties (taxable persons or consumers), but from the members of the body at issue themselves.

64. In that regard, the power granted to the the doctors’ association does not seem very different from the powers vested in all ‘regulated’ professional associations in order to ensure the financing of their duties, which are, inter alia, to safeguard profession rules of conduct and ethics, a high level of expertise and vocational training for their members, and to secure relationships between those members. Moreover, those are also the types of tasks which are referred to in Paragraph 6 of the HeilBerG NRW and which must be financed by the contribution collected by the doctors’ association.

65. Furthermore, and based on similar reasoning, I cannot concur with the Commission’s argument that there is a transfer of public authority powers to the doctors’ association with regard to determining the amount of the contributions. Indeed, by definition, a public authority power is exercised on a person, whether natural or legal, who has no ability to influence the amount of the contribution demanded, like the taxable persons and consumers in Bayerischer Rundfunk and Others and Hans & Christophorus Oymanns.

66. However, it is common ground that, in the main proceedings, the amount of the contributions is decided by the General Assembly of the doctors’ association at which all members designate representatives who participate with a right to vote and that, accordingly, each member can, indirectly at least, influence it. If the Commission’s line of argument were to be followed, it would be tantamount to accepting that the members of the doctors’ association who form part of its assembly enjoy a transfer of public authority powers to be exercised, paradoxically, on themselves. (28)

67. Next, and this point is of course linked to the preceding one, I consider that the discretion available to the doctors’ association concerning the calculation of contributions is, contrary to what the Commission claims, important evidence as regards finding that there is a ‘close dependency’ of that body on the public authorities.

68. Indeed, to the extent that, as the Commission acknowledges, the tasks of the doctors' association are defined in a quite broad and vague manner, the autonomy enjoyed by that body in calculating the amount of the contribution also allows it considerable latitude in assessing the extent and method of fulfilment of the tasks which it will be in a position to finance. (29) Similarly, that entity may choose to favour or develop a particular task based on the amount of contributions that it has decided to set.

69. It also follows from the HeilBerG NRW and from the evidence adduced by the doctors' association at the hearing before the Court that the supervisory authority has no power to intervene in relation to the amount of the contribution determined by the assembly of that association. In fact, the only power that that authority has in that regard lies in the statutory control of the budgetary balance between revenues and expenses for which the doctors' association is responsible.

70. That situation therefore contrasts with that in Hans & Christophorus Oymanns, in which, I would recall, the Court found that there was a 'very limited' discretion on the part of the statutory sickness insurance funds in determining their contributions. That assessment must, in my view, be read in the light of paragraph 17 of that judgment, according to which those funds had to calculate the contributions in such a way as to cover, when combined with other resources, the expenses stipulated by law and to guarantee that the means of operating and statutory reserves were available.

71. However, it follows from the information provided by the referring court that the doctors' association has significant discretion as regards the extent of its expenditure which is determined on the basis of the methods chosen by that association to fulfil its tasks, which, moreover, are themselves laid down by the HeilBerG NRW in a quite broad and vague manner.

72. Moreover, in Hans & Christophorus Oymanns, for the purpose of finding that there was a close dependency of the statutory sickness insurance funds on the public authorities, the Court also pointed out that those funds were financed directly by the State, whereas, in the main proceedings, in no way is provision made for such financing for the benefit of the doctors' association.

73. Furthermore, it seems likely that, in the light of the broad discretion available to the doctors' association, the members of its assembly, that is to say the representatives of the contributors themselves, will be guided by essentially economic considerations in establishing the methods of fulfilling its tasks and, therefore, in determining the amount of contributions which the members of that association are willing to pay. (30)

74. Under those circumstances, it seems to me that such a body will not be led to bear higher financial costs than those imposed on it by purely economic considerations when deciding to have recourse to the market, with the result that it seems inconceivable to me that there could be a link of close dependency on the State, so long as it is the contributors themselves who determine the amount of the contributions which they must pay.

75. Finally, as regards the power of the doctors' association to adopt internal administrative provisions, to determine penalty payments against members who fail to comply with their legal or statutory obligations and to recover those penalty payments, (31) I consider that, once again, that power is not very different from that conferred on professional associations in relation to their members, by virtue of the need to allow them to self-regulate the profession for which they constitute 'the association'.

76. Under those circumstances, I suggest that the Court should answer the question referred to the effect that the fact that a State measure confers on a body such as the doctors' association the right to raise contributions from its members but does not set the amount of those contributions or the extent of the services to be financed thereby is not sufficient to create a link of close dependency on the public authorities within the meaning of point (c) of the second subparagraph of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18.

77. Therefore, the simple presumption of compliance with the substantive requirements laid down by that provision of Directive 2004/18, which stems from the inclusion of the doctors' association at issue in the main proceedings in Annex III to that directive may be regarded as being rebuttable.

VI – Conclusion

78. In the light of all the foregoing reasons, I suggest that the Court answer the question referred by the Oberlandesgericht Düsserdorf – Vergabesenat as follows:

Point (c) of the second subparagraph of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts must be interpreted as meaning that a State measure which confers on a body, such as the Ärztekammer of Westphalia-Lippe at issue in the main proceedings, the right to raise contributions from its members but does not set the amount of those contributions or the extent of the services to be financed thereby is not sufficient to create a link of close dependency on the public authorities, which is necessary to fulfil the criterion of financing, for the most part, by the State, regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law, as laid down in that article.

5 – Moreover, it must be pointed out in that regard that the Federal Republic of Germany is unique among the Member States in listing professional associations, including professional associations representing medical practitioners, under the category of ‘authority’.

6 – See, to that effect, Hans & Christophorus Oymanns, paragraphs 41 to 47. Moreover, as already pointed out by Advocate General Mazák in point 29 of his Opinion in that case, Member States may not unilaterally amend Annex III to Directive 2004/18. It follows from Article 79 of that directive that only the Commission is empowered to amend ‘the lists of bodies and categories of bodies governed by public law in Annex III, when, on the basis of the notifications from the Member States, these prove necessary’.

7 – That examination by the European Union judicature can also be understood in the light of the delimitation of jurisdiction between the national courts and the Court with regard to reviewing the validity of a European Union measure. Although the former may, in principle, be led to assume responsibility for carrying it out, the Court alone has jurisdiction to declare that such an act is invalid (see, to that effect, inter alia, Joined Cases C-143/88 and C-92/89 Zuckerfabrik Süderdithmarschen and Zuckerfabrik Soest [1991] ECR I-415, paragraph 17; Case C-119/05 Lucchini [2007] ECR I-6199, paragraph 53; and Case C-366/10 Air Transport Association of America and Others [2011] ECR I-13755, paragraphs 47 and 48).

10 – In paragraphs 7 to 9 of its observations, the Czech Republic expressed doubts as to whether the condition laid down in point (a) of the second subparagraph of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18 is fulfilled, claiming, in particular, that the activities of the doctors' association are sectoral and therefore do not have general effect. That assessment, however, which is essentially factual in nature, is the responsibility of the referring court, which, as already stated, considers (correctly) that, in the light of the tasks of the doctors' association linked to public health, the condition set out in point (a) is fulfilled.

12 – The Commission points out in that regard that Paragraph 28(1) of the HeilBerG NRW must be read in conjunction with Paragraph 20(1) of the Law on the administrative organisation of the Land of North Rhine-Westphalia, according to which the supervision exercised over the authorities relates to the compliance of the tasks carried out by them with the legislation in force and with Paragraph 121 of the municipal code of the same Land, pursuant to which the supervisory authorities may at any time inquire into the affairs of the authorities.

13 – The fact that the doctors' association is financed 'for the most part' by those contributions was confirmed by that association's representative at the hearing before the Court. According to the case-law (see, to that effect, Bayerischer Rundfunk and Others, paragraph 33 and the case-law cited), that condition is satisfied if more than one half of the income comes from the resource in question.

14– Bayerischer Rundfunk and Others, paragraph 36 and case-law cited.

16 – See, to that effect, in particular, Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others, paragraph 20; Case C-380/98 University of Cambridge [2000] ECR I-8035, paragraph 20; and Bayerischer Rundfunk and Others, paragraph 53.

17 – Bayerischer Rundfunk and Others, paragraphs 34 and 49, and Hans & Christophorus Oymanns, paragraph 51.

18– Bayerischer Rundfunk and Others, paragraph 41.

19– Ibid., paragraph 42.

20– Ibid., paragraph 43.

21– Ibid., paragraph 44.

22– Ibid., paragraph 44.

23– Ibid., paragraphs 47 and 48.

24 – Hans & Christophorus Oymanns, paragraphs 52 and 53.

25– Ibid., paragraph 54.

26– Ibid., paragraph 55.

27– Ibid., paragraph 56.

28 – Unlike the situations giving rise to Bayerischer Rundfunk and Others and Hans & Christophorus Oymanns, the notices of contributions issued by the doctors' association in the present case, which, according to the Commission, are comparable to recovery orders, are addressed to the very members of that association who have determined the amount of the contributions in question and not to third parties who have no influence on setting that amount.

29 – In its observations, the doctors' association set out, using examples, the discretion available to it to carry out its tasks. Thus, with regard to the task of informing its members and the public on the activities of the doctors' association and on topics related to the profession, which forms part of the tasks of associations, the doctors' association established, along with the association of doctors' funds in Westphalia-Lippe, a 'patient advice centre' which has three doctors and three administrative staff. The list in Paragraph 6(1) of the HeilBerG NRW does not specifically provide for the establishment and making available of a patient advice centre. Therefore, the doctors' association has broad discretion as to the method of fulfilment of its tasks.

30 – In addition, the argument of the Commission that the territorial exclusivity enjoyed by the doctors' association should lead to its classification as a contracting authority in order to encourage the opening of the market does not seem relevant to me. Quite apart from the fact that it is not a criterion for the application of Directive 2004/18, the participation of members of the doctors' association in determining its tasks and in establishing the contribution that it collects leads those members and therefore the association itself to take decisions on the basis of principally economic considerations when deciding to have recourse to the market.

31 – Paragraph 58 of the HeilBerG NRW.

ORDONNANCE DE LA COUR (septième chambre)

4 octobre 2012 (*)

LA COUR (septième chambre), composée de M. J. Malenovský, président de chambre, MM. T. von Danwitz (rapporteur) et D. Šváby, juges, avocat général: M. J. Mazák,

greffier: M. A. Calot Escobar, la Cour se proposant de statuer par voie d'ordonnance motivée conformément à l'article 104, paragraphe 3, premier alinéa, de son règlement de procédure, l'avocat général entendu,

rend la présente

Ordonnance

1 La demande de décision préjudicielle porte sur l'interprétation de l'article 6 de la directive 93/37/CEE du Conseil, du 14 juin 1993, portant coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de travaux (JO L 199, p. 54), telle que modifiée par la directive 2001/78/CE de la Commission, du 13 septembre 2001 (JO L 285, p. 1, ci-après la «directive 93/37»).

2 Cette demande a été présentée dans le cadre d'un litige opposant la Vivaio dei Molini Azienda Agricola Porro Savoldi (ci-après «Savoldi»), société constituée sous la forme d'une société simple («società semplice»), à l'Autorità per la vigilanza sui contratti pubblici di lavori, servizi e forniture (ci-après l'«Autorità») au sujet du retrait de l'agrément dont bénéficiait cette société afin de pouvoir participer aux procédures d'appel d'offres.

Le cadre juridique

La réglementation de l'Union

3 L'article 6 de la directive 93/37, qui figurait sous le titre premier de celle-ci, intitulé «Dispositions générales», comportait un paragraphe 6, qui énoncait:

«Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs veillent à ce qu'il n'y ait pas discrimination entre les différents entrepreneurs.»

4 Le titre IV de cette directive, consacré aux «[r]ègles communes de participation», comportait un chapitre 1, intitulé «Dispositions générales», sous lequel figurait l'article 21, qui prévoyait:

5 L'article 24 de ladite directive qui figurait sous le chapitre 2 de ce titre, intitulé «Critères de sélection qualitative», disposait, à son premier alinéa:

«Peut être exclu de la participation au marché tout entrepreneur:

a) qui est en état de faillite, de liquidation, de cessation d'activités, de règlement judiciaire ou de concordat préventif ou dans toute situation analogue résultant d'une procédure de même nature existant dans les législations et réglementations nationales;

b) qui fait l'objet d'une procédure de déclaration de faillite, de règlement judiciaire, de liquidation, de concordat préventif ou de toute autre procédure de même nature existant dans les législations et réglementations nationales;

c) qui a fait l'objet d'une condamnation prononcée par un jugement ayant autorité de chose jugée pour tout délit affectant la moralité professionnelle de l'entrepreneur;

d) qui, en matière professionnelle, a commis une faute grave constatée par tout moyen dont les pouvoirs adjudicateurs pourront justifier;

e) qui n'est pas en règle avec ses obligations relatives au paiement des cotisations de sécurité sociale selon les dispositions légales du pays où il est établi ou celles du pays du pouvoir adjudicateur;

f) qui n'est pas en règle avec ses obligations relatives au paiement de ses impôts et taxes selon les dispositions légales du pays où il est établi ou celles du pays du pouvoir adjudicateur;

g) qui s'est rendu gravement coupable de fausses déclarations en fournissant les renseignements exigibles en application du présent chapitre.»

6 Aux termes de l'article 26 de la directive 93/37, contenu dans ce même chapitre:

«1. La justification de la capacité financière et économique de l'entrepreneur peut être fournie, en règle générale, par l'une ou l'autre ou plusieurs des références suivantes:

a) des déclarations bancaires appropriées;

b) la présentation des bilans ou d'extraits des bilans de l'entreprise dans le cas où la publication des bilans est prescrite par la législation du pays où l'entrepreneur est établi;

c) une déclaration concernant le chiffre d'affaires global et le chiffre d'affaires en travaux de l'entreprise au cours des trois derniers exercices.

2. Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs précisent, dans l'avis ou dans l'invitation à soumissionner, celle ou celles des références qu'ils ont choisies ainsi que les références probantes, autres que celles mentionnées au paragraphe 1 points a), b) et c), qu'ils entendent obtenir.

3. Si, pour une raison justifiée, l'entrepreneur n'est pas en mesure de fournir les références demandées par le pouvoir adjudicateur, il est admis à prouver sa capacité économique et financière par tout autre document considéré comme approprié par le pouvoir adjudicateur.»

La réglementation italienne

7 La loi-cadre n° 109 en matière de travaux publics (Legge quadro n. 109 in materia di lavori pubblici), du 11 février 1994 (supplément ordinaire à la GURI n° 41, du 19 février 1994, ci-après la «loi n° 109/1994»), prévoyait, comme il ressort de l'ordonnance de renvoi, à son article 10, intitulé «Sujets admis à participer aux procédures d'appel d'offres»:

«1. Sans préjudice des limites expressément indiquées, les personnes suivantes sont admises à participer aux procédures d'attribution des marchés publics:

a) les entrepreneurs individuels, y compris les artisans, les sociétés commerciales et les sociétés coopératives;

8 Aux termes de l'article 2082 du code civil, intitulé «Entrepreneur»:

9 L'article 2135 du même code, tel que résultant de l'article 1er du décret-législatif n° 228 du 18 mai 2001, dispose, sous l'intitulé «Entrepreneur agricole»:

10 L'article 2195 du code civil, intitulé «Entrepreneurs soumis à enregistrement», fournit l'indication des catégories d'entrepreneurs considérés comme exerçant des activités commerciales. Il énonce:

«Sont soumis à l'obligation de s'inscrire au registre des entreprises les entrepreneurs qui exercent:

1) une activité industrielle en vue de la production de biens ou de services;

2) une activité intermédiaire dans la circulation des biens;

3) une activité de transport par route, voie fluviale ou maritime ou aérienne;

4) une activité bancaire ou d'assurance;

5) d'autres activités accessoires aux précédentes.

Les dispositions de la loi qui font référence aux activités et aux entreprises commerciales s'appliquent, s'il n'en est pas disposé autrement, à toutes les activités citées dans le présent article et aux entreprises qui les exercent.»

11 L'article 2249 du code civil, intitulé «Types de sociétés», prévoit:

«Les sociétés qui ont pour objet l'exercice d'une activité commerciale doivent être constituées selon l'un des types réglementés aux chapitres III et suivants du présent titre.

Les sociétés qui ont pour objet d'exercer une activité autre sont régies par les dispositions sur la société simple, à moins que les associés n'aient voulu constituer la société selon l'un des autres types régis par les chapitres III et suivants de ce titre.

Cela vaut sans préjudice des dispositions concernant les sociétés coopératives et sans préjudice des dispositions des lois spéciales qui, pour l'exploitation de catégories particulières d'entreprises, imposent de constituer la société selon un type déterminé.»

12 Les articles 2251 à 2290 du code civil régissent la société simple. Selon une interprétation constante du droit interne, la société simple ne peut être constituée que pour exercer des activités non commerciales, c'est-à-dire des activités autres que celles mentionnées à l'article 2195 du code civil, cadre qui correspond traditionnellement à l'exercice des activités agricoles. Ainsi, dans la pratique nationale, la forme de la société simple vise habituellement, et ce même si ce n'est pas à titre exclusif, le cas de l'entrepreneur agricole mentionné à l'article 2135 de ce code.

13 Savoldi est un «entrepreneur agricole» au sens de l'article 2135 du code civil. Elle est constituée sous la forme d'une société simple, conformément aux articles 2251 et suivants du même code.

14 Durant la période pendant laquelle le droit italien prévoyait, aux fins de la participation aux procédures d'appel d'offres pour les marchés publiques de travaux, une inscription sur la liste nationale des constructeurs, en application de la loi n° 57 du 10 février 1962, Savoldi avait obtenu son inscription sur cette liste dans la catégorie S1, ayant pour objet les travaux de «déplacement de terre, démolitions, terrassements, aménagement agraire et forestier, espaces verts publics et décoration urbaine correspondante».

16 Par la communication n° 42/04 du 24 novembre 2004, l'Autorità a interdit aux SOA d'accorder aux sociétés simples l'agrément en vue de participer aux procédures publiques d'appel d'offres.

21 Après avoir écarté les arguments tirés du droit interne, le Consiglio di Stato estime que l'issue du litige qui lui est soumis dépend de l'interprétation qu'il convient de donner à l'article 6, paragraphe 6, de la directive 93/37.

22 À cet égard, il estime que le droit de l'Union s'oppose, en principe, à une disposition telle que l'article 10 de la loi n° 109/1994, qui interdit à une personne juridique ayant la nature d'un «entrepreneur» au sens du droit de l'Union de participer aux procédures d'appel d'offres.

23 En revanche, le Consiglio di Stato se demande, en se référant à l'arrêt du 16 décembre 2008, Michaniki (C-213/07, Rec. p. I-9999), si l'exclusion en cause en l'espèce ne saurait être considérée comme conforme au droit de l'Union au vu de la jurisprudence de la Cour qui reconnaît aux États membres une certaine marge d'appréciation aux fins de l'adoption de mesures destinées à garantir le respect des principes d'égalité de traitement et de transparence.

24 À cet égard, le Consiglio di Stato rappelle que, selon la jurisprudence nationale, l'interdiction faite aux sociétés simples de participer aux procédures publiques d'appel d'offres est considérée comme raisonnable et non discriminatoire, dans la mesure où cette interdiction est justifiée par la nature et le régime particulier de ces sociétés.

25 En effet, selon cette juridiction, la réglementation nationale n'impose pas, tout d'abord, pour la société simple, la possession d'un capital ou d'un patrimoine minimum. Ensuite, face aux créanciers d'une telle société, seuls répondraient des dettes de celle-ci, d'une part, le patrimoine de la société, lequel peut toutefois être d'un montant très réduit et totalement insuffisant pour couvrir toutes les demandes des créanciers, et, d'autre part, sauf convention contraire, les associés qui ont agi au nom et pour le compte de la société. Enfin, le droit italien en matière de faillite exclurait en principe la société simple de la faillite dans la mesure où elle n'exerce pas d'activité commerciale.

26 Le Consiglio di Stato se demande également, en faisant référence à l'arrêt du 23 décembre 2009, CoNISMa (C-305/08, Rec. p. I-12129), si le législateur national peut limiter la capacité juridique de certains opérateurs, comme ceux constitués sous la forme d'une société simple, qui devraient être considérés comme des «entrepreneurs» au sens de la directive 93/37, en ne leur permettant pas de participer à des procédures d'appel d'offres portant sur diverses prestations, au motif que ces prestations seraient incompatibles avec les objectifs institutionnels et statutaires de ces opérateurs.

27 C'est dans ces conditions que le Consiglio di Stato a décidé de surseoir à statuer et de poser à la Cour les questions préjudicielles suivantes:

«1) Le droit communautaire, et notamment l'article 6 de la directive 93/37 […], s'oppose-t-il en principe à une règle nationale, telle que l'article 10, paragraphe 1, sous a), de la loi [n° 109/1994], […], qui réserve aux seules sociétés exerçant des activités commerciales la possibilité de participer aux procédures d'attribution des marchés publics, excluant ainsi certains entrepreneurs, tels que les 'società semplici', n'exerçant pas à titre habituel et de façon prépondérante ce type d'activités; ou l'interdiction en question est-elle raisonnable et non discriminatoire à la lumière de la réglementation particulière et du régime patrimonial spécifique des 'società semplici'?

2) En cas de réponse négative à la première question, le droit communautaire, et notamment l'article 6 de la directive 93/37 […] ainsi que le principe de la liberté des formes juridiques pour les sujets admis à participer aux procédures publiques d'appel d'offres, permet-il au législateur national de limiter la capacité juridique d'un entrepreneur […] en considération de la spécificité caractérisant le régime de ces entrepreneurs en droit national, empêchant celui-ci de participer aux procédures publiques d'appel d'offres, ou une telle limitation constitue-t-elle une violation des principes de proportionnalité et de non-discrimination?»

28 En vertu de l'article 104, paragraphe 3, premier alinéa, de son règlement de procédure, lorsque la réponse à une question posée à titre préjudiciel peut être clairement déduite de la jurisprudence, la Cour peut, après avoir entendu l'avocat général, à tout moment statuer par voie d'ordonnance motivée.

29 Par ses questions, qu'il convient d'examiner ensemble, la juridiction de renvoi demande, en substance, si le droit de l'Union, et notamment l'article 6 de la directive 93/37, s'oppose à une législation nationale telle que celle en cause au principal, qui interdit à une société simple, qui a la qualité d'«entrepreneur» au sens de la directive 93/37, de participer aux procédures d'appel d'offres du seul fait de sa forme juridique.

30 À cet égard, la juridiction de renvoi s'interroge plus précisément sur la question de savoir si une telle exclusion générale de la participation aux procédures d'appel d'offres peut être justifiée au regard des principes d'égalité de traitement et de transparence, ou en raison du fait que la participation aux procédures d'appel d'offres serait à considérer comme étant incompatible avec les objectifs institutionnels et statutaires d'une société simple.

31 Afin de répondre à ces interrogations, il convient de rappeler que la Cour a jugé que l'un des objectifs des règles de l'Union en matière de marchés publics est l'ouverture à la concurrence la plus large possible et qu'il est de l'intérêt du droit de l'Union que soit assurée la participation la plus large possible de soumissionnaires à un appel d'offres. Il importe d'ajouter, à cet égard, que cette ouverture à la concurrence la plus large possible est envisagée non pas uniquement au regard de l'intérêt de l'Union en matière de libre circulation des produits et des services, mais également dans l'intérêt propre du pouvoir adjudicateur impliqué, qui disposera ainsi d'un choix élargi quant à l'offre la plus avantageuse et la mieux adaptée aux besoins de la collectivité publique concernée (arrêt CoNISMa, précité, point 37 et jurisprudence citée).

32 De même, la Cour a jugé que les règles de l'Union s'opposent à toute réglementation nationale qui exclut des candidats ou des soumissionnaires habilités, en vertu de la législation de l'État membre où ils sont établis, à fournir le service en question de l'attribution des marchés publics de services dont la valeur dépasse le seuil d'application des directives, au seul motif que ces candidats ou ces soumissionnaires n'ont pas la forme juridique correspondant à une catégorie déterminée de personnes morales (arrêt CoNISMa, précité, point 39 et jurisprudence citée).

33 Enfin, conformément également à la jurisprudence de la Cour, les règles de l'Union n'exigent pas que la personne qui conclut un contrat avec un pouvoir adjudicateur soit en mesure de réaliser directement la prestation convenue avec ses propres ressources pour pouvoir être qualifiée d'entrepreneur, à savoir d'opérateur économique. Il suffit qu'elle soit à même de faire exécuter la prestation dont il s'agit, en fournissant les garanties nécessaires à cet effet (arrêt CoNISMa, précité, point 41 et jurisprudence citée).

34 Partant, il ressort tant des règles de l'Union que de la jurisprudence de la Cour qu'est admise à soumissionner ou à se porter candidate toute personne ou entité qui, au vu des conditions énoncées dans un avis de marché, se considère apte à assurer l'exécution de ce marché, directement ou en recourant à la sous-traitance, indépendamment de son statut ainsi que de la question de savoir si elle est systématiquement active sur le marché ou si elle n'intervient qu'à titre occasionnel. La capacité effective de cette entité à remplir les conditions fixées par l'avis de marché est appréciée lors d'une phase ultérieure de la procédure (voir arrêt CoNISMa, précité, point 42 et jurisprudence citée).

39 L'article 6, paragraphe 6, de la directive 93/37 précise d'ailleurs que les pouvoirs adjudicateurs veillent à ce qu'il n'y ait pas discrimination entre les différents entrepreneurs (arrêt Michaniki, précité, point 46).

40 Il s'ensuit qu'un État membre est en droit de prévoir, en sus des causes d'exclusion fondées sur des considérations objectives de qualité professionnelle, limitativement énumérées à l'article 24, premier alinéa, de la directive 93/37, des mesures d'exclusion destinées à assurer le respect des principes d'égalité de traitement de l'ensemble des soumissionnaires, ainsi que de transparence, dans le cadre des procédures de passation des marchés publics (arrêt Michaniki, précité, point 47).

42 En effet, chaque État membre est le mieux à même d'identifier, à la lumière de considérations historiques, juridiques, économiques ou sociales qui lui sont propres, les situations propices à l'apparition de comportements susceptibles d'entraîner des entorses au respect de ces principes (arrêt Michaniki, précité, point 56).

43 Toutefois, les objectifs poursuivis en l'occurrence par le droit italien ne peuvent justifier, au titre des principes d'égalité de traitement et de transparence, l'exclusion, par principe, des sociétés simples de la participation aux procédures d'appel d'offres.

44 En effet, aucun élément du dossier ne permet de conclure que certaines caractéristiques des sociétés en cause au principal puissent être de nature à porter atteinte, lors de la procédure de passation des marchés publics, aux principes de transparence et de non-discrimination.

45 À cet égard, il y a lieu de souligner qu'il résulte de la décision de renvoi que les sociétés simples se caractérisent, par rapport aux sociétés commerciales, par l'absence d'un capital minimum, par la responsabilité, en principe, limitée aux associés qui ont agi au nom et pour le compte de la société ainsi que par l'exclusion des procédures de faillite. Or, il ne saurait être retenu que, en raison de ces caractéristiques, la participation des sociétés simples aux procédures de passation des marchés publics pourrait être de nature à porter atteinte aux principes de transparence et de non-discrimination.

47 Selon cette jurisprudence, les États membres peuvent, certes, réglementer les activités des entités, telles que les universités et les instituts de recherche, qui ne poursuivent pas un but lucratif et dont l'objet est orienté principalement vers l'enseignement et la recherche. Ils peuvent, notamment, autoriser ou ne pas autoriser de telles entités à opérer sur le marché en fonction de la circonstance que l'activité en question est compatible ou non avec leurs objectifs institutionnels et statutaires (arrêt CoNISMa, précité, point 48).

«commerciale» à condition qu'elle soit accessoire et complémentaire à l'activité principale, tel que cela ressort dudit article 2135.

50 Dans de telles circonstances, la jurisprudence issue de l'arrêt CoNISMa, précité, ne saurait permettre de déroger, pour des sociétés telles que les sociétés simples, au principe selon lequel aucune forme juridique déterminée ne saurait être imposée aux fins de la participation aux procédures d'appel d'offres.

51 Eu égard à tout ce qui précède, il convient de répondre aux questions posées que le droit de l'Union, et notamment l'article 6 de la directive 93/37, s'oppose à une législation nationale, telle que celle en cause au principal, qui interdit à une société telle qu'une société simple qui a la qualité d'«entrepreneur», au sens de la directive 93/37, de participer aux procédures d'appel d'offres du seul fait de sa forme juridique.

Sur les dépens

52 La procédure revêtant, à l'égard des parties au principal, le caractère d'un incident soulevé devant la juridiction de renvoi, il appartient à celle-ci de statuer sur les dépens. Les frais exposés pour soumettre des observations à la Cour, autres que ceux desdites parties, ne peuvent faire l'objet d'un remboursement.

Par ces motifs, la Cour (septième chambre) dit pour droit:

Le droit de l'Union, et notamment l'article 6 de la directive 93/37/CEE du Conseil, du 14 juin 1993, portant coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de travaux, telle que modifiée par la directive 2001/78/CE de la Commission, du 13 septembre 2001, s'oppose à une législation nationale, telle que celle en cause au principal, qui interdit à une société telle qu'une société simple qui a la qualité d'«entrepreneur», au sens de la directive 93/37, de participer aux procédures d'appel d'offres du seul fait de sa forme juridique.

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– Forposta SA and ABC Direct Contact sp. z o.o., by P. Gruszczyński and A. Starczewska-Galos, radcy prawni, – Poczta Polska SA, by P. Burzyński and H. Kornacki, radcy prawni, – the Polish Government, by M. Szpunar and B. Majczyna and by M. Laszuk and E. Gromnicka, acting as Agents,

– the Italian Government, by G. Palmieri, acting as Agent, assisted by S. Varone, avvocato dello Stato,

– the European Commission, by K. Herrmann and A. Tokár, acting as Agents, having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to proceed to judgment without an Opinion,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This reference for a preliminary ruling relates to the interpretation of point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114), read in conjunction with Articles 53(3) and 54(4) of Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1).

2 This reference has been made in the course of proceedings between, on the one hand, Forposta SA, formerly Praxis sp. z o.o., and ABC Direct Contact sp. z o.o. and, on the other, Poczta Polska SA ('Poczta Polska') concerning a decision of Poczta Polska to exclude Forposta SA and ABC Direct Contact sp. z o.o from the procedure for the award of a contract, for which the Poczta Polska issued a call for tender.

Legal context

European Union law

3 Section 2 of Chapter VII of Directive 2004/18, dealing with the 'Criteria for qualitative selection', contains Article 45, entitled 'Personal situation of the candidate or tenderer'. Paragraph 1 of that article sets out the criteria leading to the automatic exclusion of the candidate or tenderer from a contract, while paragraph 2 of the same article sets out the criteria which may lead to such exclusion. That latter paragraph reads as follows:

'Any economic operator may be excluded from participation in a contract where that economic operator:

(a) is bankrupt or is being wound up, where his affairs are being administered by the court, where he has entered into an arrangement with creditors, where he has suspended business activities or is in any analogous situation arising from a similar procedure under national laws and regulations;

(b) is the subject of proceedings for a declaration of bankruptcy, for an order for compulsory winding up or administration by the court or of an arrangement with creditors or of any other similar proceedings under national laws and regulations;

(c) has been convicted by a judgment which has the force of res judicata in accordance with the legal provisions of the country of any offence concerning his professional conduct;

(d) has been guilty of grave professional misconduct proven by any means which the contracting authorities can demonstrate;

(e) has not fulfilled obligations relating to the payment of social security contributions in accordance with the legal provisions of the country in which he is established or with those of the country of the contracting authority;

(f) has not fulfilled obligations relating to the payment of taxes in accordance with the legal provisions of the country in which he is established or with those of the country of the contracting authority;

(g) is guilty of serious misrepresentation in supplying the information required under this Section or has not supplied such information.

Member States shall specify, in accordance with their national law and having regard for Community law, the implementing conditions for this paragraph.'

4 Section 1 of Chapter VII of Directive 2004/17 is entitled 'Qualification and qualitative selection'. Article 53, which is part of that section, provides, under the heading 'Qualification systems':

‘1. Contracting entities which so wish may establish and operate a system of qualification of economic operators.

Contracting entities which establish or operate a system of qualification shall ensure that economic operators are at all times able to request qualification.

3. The criteria and rules for qualification referred to in paragraph 2 may include the exclusion criteria listed in Article 45 of Directive 2004/18/EC on the terms and conditions set out therein.

Where the contracting entity is a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 2(1)(a), those criteria and rules shall include the exclusion criteria listed in Article 45(1) of Directive 2004/18/EC.

5 Article 54 of Directive 2004/17, which is part of Section 1 and is entitled ‘Criteria for qualitative selection’, states in paragraphs 1 and 4:

‘1. Contracting entities which establish selection criteria in an open procedure shall do so in accordance with objective rules and criteria which are available to interested economic operators.

4. The criteria set out in paragraphs 1 and 2 may include the exclusion criteria listed in Article 45 of Directive 2004/18/EC on the terms and conditions set out therein.

Where the contracting entity is a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 2(1)(a), the criteria and rules referred to in paragraphs 1 and 2 of this Article shall include the exclusion criteria listed in Article 45(1) of Directive 2004/18/EC.’

Polish law

6 The law of 29 January 2004 on public procurement (Dz. U. No 113, item 759, ‘the Law on public procurement’) lays down the principles and procedures for the award of public contracts and specifies the competent authorities. The amending law of 25 February 2011 (Dz. U. No 87, item 484), which came into force on 11 May 2011, inserted subparagraph (1a) under Article 24(1) of the Law on public procurement. That provision, as amended, reads as follows:

‘1. The following shall be excluded from procedures for the award of public contracts:

(1a) economic operators with which the contracting authority concerned annulled, terminated, or renounced a public contract owing to circumstances for which the economic operator is responsible, where the annulment, termination or renouncement occurred in the three-year period before the procedure was initiated and the value of the non-performed part of the contract amounted to at least 5% of the contract’s value;

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

7 Poczta Polska, a company belonging to the Polish Treasury, active in the postal services sector, is a contracting authority within the meaning of Directive 2004/17. Poczta Polska conducted an open procedure for the award of a public contract for ‘the delivery of postal packages, foreign and domestic, priority postal packages, cash-on-delivery items, and postal packages subject to special conditions’. According to the findings of fact in the reference for a preliminary ruling, the value of that contract exceeds the threshold above which European Union (‘EU’) public procurement rules are applicable.

8 Poczta Polska considered that the tenders made by Forposta SA and ABC Direct Contact sp. z o.o. were viewed as the most favourable in relation to certain tender lots and invited them to enter into a contract. That decision was not challenged by any of the participants to the procedure. However, on 21 July 2011, which was the deadline for the conclusion of the contract, Poczta Polska cancelled the tendering procedure on the grounds that the economic operators which had made the selected tenders were subject to compulsory exclusion from the procedure under Article 24(1)(1a) of the Law on public procurement.

9 The two companies concerned appealed that decision to the Krajowa Izba Odwoławcza (the Polish Public Procurement Office), claiming that that national provision was contrary to point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18. Specifically, in their view, the scope of the conditions laid down in that national provision was much broader than the condition laid down in EU law, which provides for only ‘grave professional misconduct’ as a ground for exclusion: such professional misconduct had not been committed in the case in the main proceedings.

10 The referring court observes that, at the time of the adoption of Article 24(1)(1a) of the Law on public procurement, the national legislature stated that it was based on point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18 and that court expresses doubts about whether that national provision conforms with the provision of EU law on which it is based, doubts which it regards as justified in light of the following considerations.

11 In the first place, the ground for exclusion laid down in that provision in Directive 2004/18 is grave professional misconduct, a concept which, in legal terms, refers more to the breach of principles relating to ethics, dignity and professional conscientiousness. Such a breach gives rise to professional liability on the part of the person who committed it through, inter alia, the opening of disciplinary proceedings by the competent professional bodies. Accordingly, it is those bodies or courts which would decide whether there has been grave professional misconduct and not the contracting authority, as provided for in the national provision at issue.

12 In the second place, the concept of circumstances ‘for which that operator is responsible’, reproduced in Article 24(1)(1a), of the Law on public procurement, is significantly broader than the concept of grave misconduct ‘committed by the operator’, set out in point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18, and, therefore, it ought not to be used in provisions which are intended to impose a sanction.

13 In the third place, given that point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18 requires that misconduct be grave, it is doubtful that the non-performance of 5% of a contract’s value could be qualified as grave misconduct. The referring court points out, in this regard, that when the conditions laid down in the national provision at issue in the main proceedings are fulfilled, the contracting authority is obliged to exclude the economic operator concerned and it cannot take into consideration that operator’s individual situation, which could result in a breach of the principle of proportionality.

14 The referring court notes, lastly, that, according to the case-law of the Court of Justice (Case C-213/07 Michaniki [2008] ECR I-9999 and Case C-376/08 Serrantoni and Consorzio stabile edili [2009] ECR I-12169), Directive 2004/18 does not preclude a Member State from providing grounds for exclusion other than those provided in Article 45(2) therein, and which are not based on objective considerations of the professional qualities of economic operators, to the extent that they are proportionate to the objective pursued. However, in accordance with the case-law of the Court (Joined Cases C-21/03 and C-34/03 Fabricom [2005] ECR I-1559 and Joined Cases C-147/06 and C-148/06 SECAP and Santorso [2008] ECR I-3565), EU law precludes national rules which provide for the automatic exclusion of an operator from participation in a procedure for the award of a contract or the automatic rejection of tenders, and the application of measures which are disproportionate to the aim pursued. Not only does the national provision at issue apply automatically but, in addition, it goes beyond what is necessary to attain the aim of protecting the public interest, namely to eliminate contractors that are genuinely unreliable.

15 In the light of those considerations, the Krajowa Izba Odwoławcza decided to stay the proceedings and refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘1. Can Article 45(2), [first subparagraph], point (d) of Directive 2004/18 …, which states that any economic operator may be excluded from participation in a contract where that economic operator ... has been guilty of grave professional misconduct proven by any means which the contracting authorities can demonstrate, in conjunction with Articles 53(3) and 54(4) of Directive 2004/17 …, be interpreted as meaning that it is possible to regard as grave professional misconduct a situation in which the contracting authority concerned annulled, terminated or renounced a public contract with the economic operator concerned owing to circumstances for which that operator is responsible, where the annulment, termination or renouncement occurred in the three-year period before the procedure was initiated and the value of the non-performed part of the contract amounted to at least 5% of the contract’s value?

2 If Question 1 is answered in the negative – if a Member State is able to introduce grounds, other than those listed in Article 45 of Directive 2004/18 …, for excluding economic operators from participation in a procedure for the award of a public contract, which it considers to be essential for the protection of the public interest, the legitimate interests of the contracting authorities and the maintenance of fair competition between economic operators, is it possible to consider as consistent with that directive and the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union a situation involving the exclusion of economic operators with which the contracting authority concerned annulled, terminated or renounced a public contract owing to circumstances for which that economic operator is responsible, where the annulment, termination or renouncement occurred in the three-year period before the procedure was initiated and the value of the non-performed part of the contract amounted to at least 5% of the contract’s value?’

The questions referred for a preliminary ruling

The jurisdiction of the Court

16 Poczta Polska claims that the Krajowa Izba Odwoławcza is not a court or tribunal within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU, given that it exercises both a judicial role and an advisory one.

17 On this point, it must be borne in mind that, according to settled case-law of the Court of Justice, in order to determine whether a body making a reference is a ‘court or tribunal’ within the meaning of Article 267 TFEU, which is a question governed by EU law alone, the Court takes account of a number of factors, such as whether the body is established by law, whether it is permanent, whether its jurisdiction is compulsory, whether its procedure is inter partes, whether it applies rules of law and whether it is independent (see Case C-54/96 Dorsch Consult [1997] ECR I-4961, paragraph 23, and Case C-443/09 Grillo Star [2012] ECR, paragraph 20 and case-law cited).

18 In the present case, it must be noted that, as is apparent from the documents before the Court, the Krajowa Izba Odwoławcza, which is a body established by the Law on public procurement, has been granted exclusive jurisdiction to hear and determine at first instance disputes between economic operators and competent authorities, and whose operation is governed by Articles 172 to 198 of that law, does constitute a court or tribunal, within the meaning of 267 TFEU, in the exercise of its jurisdiction in relation to those provisions, as is the case in the main proceedings. The fact that that body may be invested, by virtue of other provisions, with an advisory role is devoid of consequence in that regard.

Admissibility

19 The Polish Government submits that the reference for a preliminary ruling is inadmissible because it is hypothetical and because it aims, in essence, to determine whether national legislation at issue in the main principles is compatible with the provisions of Directive 2004/18, and not to obtain an interpretation of EU law in order to give guidance to the subject-matter of the dispute, which must be decided on the basis of national law. However, it is not for the Court of Justice, in proceedings for a preliminary ruling, to assess the compatibility of national law with EU law or interpret provisions of national law.

20 In that regard, it should be noted, first of all, that the referring court did not request the Court of Justice to assess the compatibility of the national legislation with EU law or to interpret that legislation. It merely requests the interpretation of EU public procurement rules for the purpose of assessing whether it is necessary to disapply, in the main proceedings, Article 24(1)(1a) of the Law of public procurement. Second, it must be noted that the questions referred are relevant for resolving that dispute, since Poczta Polska cancelled the tendering process of the contract at issue on the grounds that the economic operators which had put forward the tenders chosen were subject to compulsory exclusion from the procedure under that national provision.

21 In those circumstances, the reference for a preliminary ruling is admissible and the questions referred must be answered.

The first question

22 By that question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18 is to be interpreted as precluding national legislation which provides that a situation of grave professional misconduct, which leads to the automatic exclusion of the economic operator at issue from a procedure for the award of a public contract in progress, arises where the contracting authority concerned has annulled, terminated or renounced a previous public contract with that same economic operator owing to circumstances for which that operator is responsible, where the annulment, termination or renouncement occurred in the three-year period before the procedure was initiated and the value of the non-performed part of the contract amounted to at least 5% of the contract's value.

23 In the light of the observations submitted by the Polish Government at the hearing before the Court, according to which a case such as that in the main proceedings, concerning the rationae materiae of Directive 2004/17, should be assessed under that directive alone, it should be pointed out that, according to the findings of the referring court, the national legislature itself indicated that, when it adopted Article 24(1)(1a) of the Law on public procurement, on the basis of which the companies concerned were excluded from the procedure for the award of a contract, it did so on the basis of point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18. Moreover Articles 53(3) and 54(4) of Directive 2004/17 explicitly refer to Article 45 of Directive 2004/18.

24 It is therefore evident that the Republic of Poland made use of the option provided in those provisions of Directive 2004/17 and incorporated, into its domestic legislation, the ground for exclusion provided for in point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18.

25 It must be noted that point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18, unlike the provisions relating to the grounds for exclusion in points (a), (b), (e) and (f) of the same subparagraph, does not refer to national legislation or rules, but that the second subparagraph of Article 45(2) provides that Member States shall specify, in accordance with their national law and having regard for EU law, its implementing conditions.

26 Consequently, the concepts of 'professional' 'grave' 'misconduct', in point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 45(2) can be specified and explained in national law, provided that it has regard for EU law.

27 It must be observed, as the Polish Government rightly pointed out, that the concept of 'professional misconduct' covers all wrongful conduct which has an impact on the professional credibility of the operator at issue and not only the violations of ethical standards in the strict sense of the profession to which that operator belongs, which are established by the disciplinary body of that profession or by a judgment which has the force of res judicata.

28 Indeed, point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18 allows the contracting authorities to prove professional misconduct by any demonstrable means. In addition, unlike point (c) of that subparagraph, a judgment which has the force of res judicata is not required in order to prove professional misconduct, within the meaning of point (d) of that subparagraph.

29 Consequently, the failure of an economic operator to abide by its contractual obligations can, in principle, be considered as professional misconduct.

30 Nevertheless, the concept of ‘grave misconduct’ must be understood as normally referring to conduct by the economic operator at issue which denotes a wrongful intent or negligence of a certain gravity on its part. Accordingly, any incorrect, imprecise or defective performance of a contract or a part thereof could potentially demonstrate the limited professional competence of the economic operator at issue, but does not automatically amount to grave misconduct.

31 In addition, in order to find whether ‘grave misconduct’ exists, a specific and individual assessment of the conduct of the economic operator concerned must, in principle, be carried out.

32 However, the rules at issue in the main proceedings oblige the contracting authority to exclude an economic operator from the procedure for the award of a contract when, owing to circumstances for which the economic operator is responsible, the contracting authority has annulled or terminated a contract with that economic operator in the framework of a previous public contract.

33 In this regard, it is important to note that, given the specific characteristics of national legal systems as regards civil liability, the concept of ‘circumstances for which the economic operator is responsible’ is very broad and could extend to situations beyond conduct which denotes a wrongful intent or negligence of a certain gravity by the economic operator at issue. Yet, the first subparagraph of Article 54(4) of Directive 2004/17 refers to a power to apply the exclusion criteria listed in Article 45 of Directive 2004/18 ‘on the terms and conditions set out therein’, meaning that the concept of ‘grave misconduct’, as referred to in paragraph 25 above, cannot be replaced by the concept of ‘circumstances for which the economic operator concerned is responsible’.

34 Furthermore, the national legislation at issue in the main proceedings itself establishes the parameters that require the contracting authority at issue to exclude an economic operator from a newly undertaken procedure for the award of a contract due to the previous conduct of that operator, without allowing the contracting authority the power to assess, on a case-by-case basis, the gravity of the allegedly wrongful conduct of that operator in the performance of the previous contract.

35 Consequently, it is clear that the national rules at issue in the main proceedings do not merely follow the general framework for applying point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18, but impose on the contracting authorities mandatory requirements and conclusions to be automatically drawn in certain circumstances, thus exceeding the discretion enjoyed by the Member States, pursuant to the second subparagraph of Article 45(2) of that directive, in specifying the implementing conditions for the ground for exclusion set out in point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 45(2) with regard for EU law.

36 In the light of all the foregoing considerations, the answer to the first question is that point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as precluding national legislation which provides that a situation of grave professional misconduct, which leads to the automatic exclusion of the economic operator at issue from a procedure for the award of a public contract in progress, arises where the contracting authority concerned has annulled, terminated or renounced a public contract with that same economic operator owing to circumstances for which that operator is responsible, where the annulment, termination or renouncement occurred in the three-year period before the procedure was initiated and the value of the non-performed part of the contract amounted to at least 5% of the contract’s value.

37 In essence, that question, raised in case the answer to the first question is in the negative, asks whether the principles and rules of EU public procurement law allow, on the grounds of the protection of the public interest, the legitimate interests of the contracting authorities or the maintenance of fair competition between economic operators, national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, requiring the contracting authorities to automatically exclude an economic operator from a procedure for the award of a public contract in a situation such as that referred to in the first question.

38 While it is indeed apparent from Article 54(4) of Directive 2004/17 that the contracting powers can lay down criteria for qualitative selection in addition to the grounds for exclusion set out in Article 45 of Directive 2004/18, the fact remains that, in accordance with settled case-law of the Court, Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18 exhaustively lists the grounds capable of justifying the exclusion of a contractor from participation in a contract for reasons, based on objective factors, that relate to his professional qualities and therefore precludes Member States from adding to the list contained in that provision other grounds for exclusion based on criteria relating to professional qualities (see Joined Cases C-226/04 and C-228/04 La Cascina and Others [2006] ECR I-1347, paragraph 22; Michaniki, paragraph 43; and Case C-74/09 Bâtiments et Ponts Construction and WISAG Produktionsservice, [2010] ECR I-7271, paragraph 43).

39 It is only when the grounds for exclusion concerned do not relate to the professional qualities of economic operators, and, therefore, do not fall within that exhaustive list that it is possible to consider whether those grounds may be permissible under the principles or other rules of EU public procurement law (see, to this effect, Fabricom, paragraphs 25 to 36; Michaniki, paragraphs 44 to 69; and Case C-538/07 Assitur [2009] ECR I-4219, paragraphs 21 to 33).

40 However, in the present case, Article 24(1)(1a) of the Law on public procurement sets out a ground for exclusion relating to the professional quality of the economic operator concerned, as is borne out by the fact, pointed out in paragraphs 10 and 23 above, that the Polish legislature relied on point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18 in support the adoption of that national provision. Such a ground for exclusion, which goes beyond the scope of the exhaustive list in that first subparagraph, as is apparent from the response to the first question, is not, therefore, permissible under the principles or other rules of EU public procurement law.

41 Consequently, the answer to the second question is that the principles or rules of EU public procurement law do not allow, on the grounds of the protection of the public interest, the legitimate interests of the contracting authorities or the maintenance of fair competition between economic operators, national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, requiring the contracting authorities to automatically exclude an economic operator from a procedure for the award of a public contract in a situation such as that referred to in the reply to the first question referred for a preliminary ruling.

The temporal effects of the present judgment

42 The Polish Government asked the Court, at the hearing, to limit the temporal effects of the present judgment in the event that the Court interpreted point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18 as precluding national legislation of the kind at issue in the main proceedings.

43 In support of its application, the Polish Government relies on the alleged lack of clarity of that provision of EU law, not yet interpreted by the Court, as well as the risk of serious economic repercussions at national level that such an interpretation would entail.

44 In this regard, it should be borne in mind that the interpretation which, in the exercise of the jurisdiction conferred on it by Article 267 TFEU, the Court gives to a rule of EU law clarifies and defines the meaning and scope of that rule as it must be or ought to have been understood and applied from the time of its entry into force and it is only quite exceptionally that the Court may, in application of the general principle of legal certainty inherent in the EU legal order, be moved to restrict for any person concerned the opportunity of relying on a provision which it has interpreted with a view to calling into question legal relationships established in good faith (see, inter alia, Joined Cases C-338/11 to C-347/11 Santander Asset Management SGIIC and Others [2012] ECR, paragraphs 58 and 59, and Case C-525/11 Mednis [2012] ECR, paragraphs 41 and 42).

45 More specifically, the Court has taken that step only in quite specific circumstances, where there was a risk of serious economic repercussions owing in particular to the large number of legal relationships entered into in good faith on the basis of rules considered to be validly in force and where it appeared that individuals and national authorities had been led to adopt practices which did not comply with EU law by reason of objective, significant uncertainty regarding the implications of EU provisions, to which the conduct of other Member States or the European Commission may even have contributed (see, inter alia, Santander Asset Management SGIIC and Others, paragraph 60, and Mednis, paragraph 43).

46 The alleged existence of significant objective uncertainty regarding the implications of the relevant provisions of EU law cannot be accepted in the case in the main proceedings. First, the situation of 'grave professional misconduct' within the meaning of point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18 manifestly does not cover the ground for exclusion laid down by Article 24(1)(1a) of the Law on public procurement. Second, it is apparent from the case-law, which was well established at the moment of the adoption of the national provision at issue in the main proceedings, that such a ground for exclusion could not be justified by reference to the principles or other rules of EU public procurement law.

47 As regards the financial consequences which might ensue for a Member State in the context of a reference for a preliminary ruling, they do not in themselves justify limiting the temporal effects of the ruling (Santander Asset Management SGIIC and Others, paragraph 62, and Mednis, paragraph 44).

48 It must be noted that, in any event, the Polish Government has not provided any factual evidence allowing the Court to assess whether there exists, as a result of this judgment, a risk of serious economic repercussions for the Republic of Poland.

49 Accordingly, there is no need to limit the temporal effects of the present judgment.

Costs

50 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Third Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Point (d) of the first subparagraph of Article 45(2) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts must be interpreted as precluding national legislation which provides that a situation of grave professional misconduct, which leads to the automatic exclusion of the economic operator at issue from a procedure for the award of a public contract in progress, arises where the contracting authority concerned has annulled, terminated or renounced a public contract with that same economic operator owing to circumstances for which that operator is responsible, where the annulment, termination or renouncement occurred in the three-year period before the procedure was initiated and the value of the non-performed part of the contract amounted to at least 5% of the contract's value.

2. The principles or rules of European Union public procurement law does not allow, on the grounds of the protection of the public interest, the legitimate interests of the contracting authorities or the maintenance of fair competition between economic operators, national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, requiring the contracting authorities to automatically exclude an economic operator from a procedure for the award of a public contract in a situation such as that referred to in the reply to the first question referred for a preliminary ruling.

13 June 2013 (*)

(Public contracts – Directive 2004/18/EC – Definition of 'public contract' – Article 1(2)(a) – Contract concluded between two local authorities – Transfer by one entity of the responsibility for cleaning certain of its buildings to another entity in return for financial compensation)

In Case C-386/11,

REQUEST for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf (Germany), made by decision of 6 July 2011, received at the Court on 20 July 2011, in the proceedings

Piepenbrock Dienstleistungen GmbH & Co. KG

v

Kreis Düren,

intervening party:

Stadt Düren,

THE COURT (Fifth Chamber),

composed of T. von Danwitz, President of the Chamber, A. Rosas, E. Juhász, D. Šváby (Rapporteur) and C. Vajda, Judges,

Advocate General: V. Trstenjak,

Registrar: M. Aleksejev, Administrator,

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 7 February 2013,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– Piepenbrock Dienstleistungen GmbH & Co. KG, by L. Wionzeck, Rechtsanwalt,

– Kreis Düren, by R. Gruneberg and A. Wilden, Rechtsanwälte,

– the Italian Government, by G. Palmieri, acting as Agent, assisted by W. Ferrante, avvocato dello Stato,

– the Austrian Government, by M. Fruhmann, acting as Agent,

– the European Commission, by A. Tokár, G. Wilms and C. Zadra, acting as Agents, having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to proceed to judgment without an Opinion,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This request for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

2 The request has been made in proceedings between Piepenbrock Dienstleistungen GmbH & Co. KG (‘Piepenbrock’) and Kreis Düren (District of Düren, Germany) concerning a draft contract pursuant to which Kreis Düren is to transfer to Stadt Düren (City of Düren) the responsibility for cleaning buildings situated on the latter’s territory, but belonging to and used by Kreis Düren, in return for financial compensation.

Legal context

3 Recital 2 in the preamble to Directive 2004/18 states:

‘The award of contracts concluded in the Member States on behalf of the State, regional or local authorities and other bodies governed by public law entities, is subject to the respect of the principles of the [EC] Treaty and in particular to the principle of freedom of movement of goods, the principle of freedom of establishment and the principle of freedom to provide services and to the principles deriving therefrom, such as the principle of equal treatment, the principle of non-discrimination, the principle of mutual recognition, the principle of proportionality and the principle of transparency. However, for public contracts above a certain value, it is advisable to draw up provisions of Community coordination of national procedures for the award of such contracts which are based on these principles so as to ensure the effects of them and to guarantee the opening-up of public procurement to competition. ...’

4 Article 1 of Directive 2004/18 provides:

2. (a) “Public contracts” are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services within the meaning of this Directive.

...

(d) “Public service contracts” are public contracts other than public works or supply contracts having as their object the provision of services referred to in Annex II.

...

8. The terms “contractor”, “supplier” and “service provider” mean any natural or legal person or public entity or group of such persons and/or bodies which offers on the market, respectively, the execution of works and/or a work, products or services.

The term “economic operator” shall cover equally the concepts of contractor, supplier and service provider. It is used merely in the interest of simplification.

5 Building-cleaning services are services within the meaning of Directive 2004/18, in accordance with Annex II A, Category 14, thereto.

German law

6 Article 28(2) of the Basic Law for the Federal Republic of Germany (Grundgesetz für die Bundesrepublik Deutschland) provides:

‘Municipalities must be guaranteed the right to regulate all local affairs on their own responsibility, within the limits prescribed by legislation. Within the limits of their functions designated by legislation, associations of municipalities shall also have the right of self-government according to legislation. ...’

7 Paragraph 23 of the Law on work performed jointly by local authorities in the Land of North Rhine-Westphalia (Gesetz über kommunale Gemeinschaftsarbeit des Landes Nordrhein-Westfalen; ‘the GkG NRW’) is worded as follows:

‘1. Local authorities and associations of local authorities may agree that one of their number shall assume competence for individual tasks incumbent on the other participants or undertake to perform such tasks for the other participants.

2. If one participant assumes competence for a task incumbent on the others, the right and obligation to perform the task shall be transferred to that participant. If one of the participants undertakes to perform a task for the others, their rights and obligations as the parties on whom that task is incumbent shall remain unaffected.

3. The agreement may grant the other participants a right of involvement in the fulfilment or performance of the tasks; the same shall apply to the appointment of service personnel.

4. Provision shall be made in the agreement for appropriate compensation, which shall, as a rule, be so calculated as to cover the costs arising from the assumption or performance of tasks.

5. If the period of validity of the agreement is unlimited or exceeds 20 years, the agreement shall specify under what conditions and in what form it may be terminated by a participant.’

8 The order for reference notes that that the GkG NRW thus makes a distinction between ‘mandating’ agreements, pursuant to which one entity undertakes to perform certain tasks on behalf of another entity, and ‘delegating’ agreements, involving a transfer of competence, under which one entity performs a task incumbent on another. It also notes that, according to the national case-law, ‘mandating’ agreements are governed by public procurement law in so far as they involve a pecuniary interest.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

9 Kreis Düren is an association of local authorities which include Stadt Düren. Pursuant to a number of contracts, Piepenbrock carried out the cleaning of buildings owned by Kreis Düren.

10 Kreis Düren drew up a draft public contract with Stadt Düren whereby it would transfer responsibility for the cleaning of its office, administrative and school buildings, located within the territory of Stadt Düren, to the latter, initially for a two-year pilot phase.

11 Article 1 of the draft contract is worded as follows:

‘1. Kreis Düren shall assign the task incumbent on it of cleaning those buildings in its possession which are located in the municipal territory of Düren to Stadt Düren with the effect of discharging its obligations.

2. The task of cleaning shall comprise the cleaning of premises and glass in the office, administrative and school buildings of Kreis Düren.

3. Stadt Düren shall assume sole responsibility for the task described under subparagraphs 1 and 2. The right and obligation to perform this task shall be transferred to Stadt Düren (Paragraph 23(1), first option, and Paragraph 23(2), first sentence, GkG NRW). Stadt Düren shall assume the duties of the Kreis (District) and shall to that extent have sole responsibility.

4. Stadt Düren may avail itself of the services of third parties to perform the tasks assigned to it pursuant to subparagraph 1.’

12 That draft contract provides that Stadt Düren is to receive financial compensation for the costs which it incurs, in accordance with Paragraph 23(4) of the GkG NRW, established on the basis of an hourly rate.

13 It is also apparent from the file to which the Court has had access that that draft contract reserves to Kreis Düren the right unilaterally to terminate the contract in the event of improper implementation on the part of Stadt Düren.

14 Finally, it follows from the order for reference that the cleaning tasks concerned were to be carried out by Dürener Reinigungsgesellschaft mbH, a company owned by Stadt Düren.

15 Piepenbrock brought an action by which it sought an order prohibiting Kreis Düren from entering into that contract without carrying out a public procurement procedure, claiming that the accomplishment of those tasks in return for remuneration constitutes a commercial service that could also be furnished by private service providers. It further argued that the draft contract does not involve a type of in-house award to which public procurement law does not apply, in accordance with the judgment in Case C-107/98 Teckal [1999] ECR I-8121, since the conditions for the application of that exception are not met, while a reference to Case C-480/06 Commission v Germany [2009] ECR I-4747 is not relevant, in the absence of 'horizontal cooperation' between the two public entities concerned.

16 Piepenbrock's action was dismissed at first instance on the ground that the draft contract is a 'delegating' agreement, in accordance with Paragraph 23 of the GkG NRW, which is not subject to public procurement law. Piepenbrock appealed against that decision to the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf (Higher Regional Court, Düsseldorf), claiming that that description of the draft contract as a delegating agreement is meaningless in view of its characteristics.

17 Kreis Düren claims, on the contrary, that such a public-law delegation of tasks constitutes a decision on internal organisational matters, which is not subject to the law on public procurement.

18 The referring court draws attention to that characteristic of the draft contract, raising the question of the effect, as regards the application of the rules on public procurement, of the public-law nature of that contract.

19 It finds, first, that the task concerned does not involve the exercise of official authority, within the meaning of the first paragraph of Article 51 TFEU and Article 62 TFEU, and is therefore not exempt, on that basis, from the provisions of the TFEU relating to the freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services or acts of secondary legislation implementing those freedoms, such as Directive 2004/18.

20 The referring court finds, secondly, that the exception demonstrated in Teckal does not apply to the draft contract at issue in the present proceedings, since Kreis Düren does not exercise over Stadt Düren – or over the company Dürener Reinigungsgesellschaft – a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments.

21 The referring court points out, thirdly, that the context of the case before it differs from the circumstances of the case which gave rise to the judgment in Case C-480/06 Commission v Germany, inasmuch as the draft contract at issue in the present case is characterised by an absence of cooperation between the public entities concerned; one of them is purely and simply delegating one of its tasks to the other, something which is authorised by the GkG NRW.

22 However, the referring court is unsure whether, in the wake of the judgment in Case C-480/06 Commission v Germany, types of contracts between local authorities other than that at issue in that judgment are exempt from public procurement law. Thus, it raises the question of whether a distinction must be made between contracts concerning public service tasks as such, like waste disposal, and contracts which concern only indirectly the performance of those tasks, such as, in the present case, the cleaning of buildings used for the performance of such a task.

23 The referring court is also unsure whether the law on public procurement is generally inapplicable to agreements on cooperation between local authorities, as 'acts of internal administrative organisation'. It points out, in this regard, that the administrative organisation of the Member States is not a matter over which the European Union has any power and, moreover, that the administrative autonomy of the municipalities, and thus the possibility of establishing voluntary cooperation between municipalities, is guaranteed by Article 28(2) of the Basic Law for the Federal Republic of Germany.

24 On the other hand, the referring court observes that the purpose of the draft contract is virtually identical to any contract governed by Directive 2004/18 under which Stadt Düren would be commissioned to provide cleaning services for pecuniary interest. It asks, in that respect, whether the distinction made by the GkG NRW between 'mandating' agreements and 'delegating' agreements – the contract concerned being in the second category – is conclusive, given that, when a contract relates to ancillary activities which do not directly concern the external activity of local authorities, the fact that a transfer of competence takes place by virtue of the contract is a purely technical point, as the choice of either type of contract in fact produces identical effects in economic terms. For that reason, the referring court considers that, in the circumstances of the main proceedings, the use of a 'delegating' agreement might amount to 'contriving to circumvent the rules on public procurement', as referred to in paragraph 48 of the judgment in Case C-480/06 Commission v Germany.

25 In that context, the Oberlandesgericht Düsseldorf decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'Is a "public contract" within the meaning of Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18/EC … to be understood as … meaning a contract between two local authorities whereby one of them assigns strictly limited competence to the other in return for the reimbursement of costs, in particular where the task assigned concerns only ancillary business, not official activities as such?'

The question referred for a preliminary ruling

26 By its question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether a contract such as that at issue in the present case – whereby one public entity assigns to another public entity the task of cleaning certain office, administrative and school buildings, the latter entity being authorised to avail of the services of third parties for the accomplishment of that task, in return for financial compensation intended to correspond to the costs incurred in the performance of the task, while reserving the power to supervise the proper execution of that task – constitutes a public service contract within the meaning of Article 1(2)(d) of Directive 2004/18, and is, as such, subject to the provisions of that directive.

27 In that regard, it must be noted that, by the draft contract at issue in the main proceedings, Kreis Düren reserves to itself such a supervisory power, as that contract provides that Kreis Düren may terminate it unilaterally in the event of improper implementation on the part of Stadt Düren.

28 It should be noted that, in accordance with Article 1(2) of Directive 2004/18, a contract for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between an economic operator and a contracting authority, and having as its object the provision of services referred to in Annex II A to that directive, is a public contract.

29 In that regard, first, it is immaterial, on the one hand, whether that operator is itself a contracting authority and, on the other hand, whether the body concerned is primarily profit-making, whether it is structured as an undertaking or whether it has a continuous presence on the market (judgment of 19 December 2012 in Case C-159/11 Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce and Others [2012] ECR, paragraph 26).

30 Secondly, activities such as those which are the subject of the draft contract are building-cleaning services referred to in Annex II A, Category 14, to Directive 2004/18.

31 Thirdly, a contract must be considered as being 'for pecuniary interest', within the meaning of Article 1(2)(a) of Directive 2004/18 even if the remuneration provided for remains limited to reimbursement of the expenditure incurred to provide the agreed service (see, to that effect, Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce and Others, paragraph 29).

32 Subject to the checks which must be carried out by the referring court, a contract such as that envisaged in the case in the main proceedings does appear to have all the characteristics referred to above, and therefore constitutes, in principle, a public contract.

33 Moreover, such a contract does not appear to be one of the two types of contracts which, although entered into by public entities, do not come within the scope of European Union public procurement law.

34 The first type of contracts are those concluded by a public entity with a person who is legally distinct from that entity where, at the same time, that entity exercises over the person concerned a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and where that person carries out the essential part of its activities with the entity or with entities which control it (see, to that effect, Teckal, paragraph 50, and Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce and Others, paragraph 32).

35 In that respect, it is common ground that none of those conditions is satisfied in the context of a contract such as that envisaged in the case before the referring court. It is clear from the order for reference that, in the context of the main proceedings, first of all, neither entity controls the other. Moreover, the entity which is assigning the execution of a task to another, while it reserves the right to supervise the proper execution of that task, does not exercise over the second entity a control capable of being classified as similar to that which it exercises over its own departments. Lastly, that second entity is not carrying out the essential part of its activities for the first entity.

36 The second type of contracts are those which establish cooperation between public entities with the aim of ensuring that a public task that all of them have to perform is carried out (Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce and Others, paragraph 34).

37 In those circumstances, the European Union rules on public procurement are not applicable in so far as such contracts are concluded exclusively by public entities, without the participation of a private party, no private provider of services is placed in a position of advantage vis-à-vis competitors and implementation of that cooperation is governed solely by considerations and requirements relating to the pursuit of objectives in the public interest (Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce and Others, paragraph 35).

38 All of the above criteria are cumulative, with the result that a contract between public entities can fall outside the scope of European Union public procurement rules by virtue of that exception only if that contract fulfils all of those criteria (see, to that effect, Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce and Others, paragraph 36).

39 However, it follows from the findings of the referring court that the aim of the draft contract at issue in the main proceedings does not appear to be to establish cooperation between the two contracting public entities with a view to carrying out a public task that both of them have to perform.

40 Furthermore, it also follows from those findings that that contract authorises the use of the services of a third party for the accomplishment of that task, with the result that that third party might be placed in a position of advantage vis-à-vis other undertakings active on the same market.

41 In the light of the foregoing, the answer to the question referred is that a contract such as that at issue in the main proceedings – whereby, without establishing cooperation between the contracting public entities with a view to carrying out a public service task that both of them have to perform, one public entity assigns to another the task of cleaning certain office, administrative and school buildings, while reserving the power to supervise the proper execution of that task, in return for financial compensation intended to correspond to the costs incurred in the performance of the task, the second entity being, moreover, authorised to avail of the services of third parties which might be capable of competing on the market for the accomplishment of that task – constitutes a public service contract within the meaning of Article 1(2)(d) of Directive 2004/18.

Costs

42 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fifth Chamber) hereby rules:

A contract such as that at issue in the main proceedings – whereby, without establishing cooperation between the contracting public entities with a view to carrying out a public service task that both of them have to perform, one public entity assigns to another the task of cleaning certain office, administrative and school buildings, while reserving the power to supervise the proper execution of that task, in return for financial compensation intended to correspond to the costs incurred in the performance of the task, the second entity being, moreover, authorised to avail of the services of third parties which might be capable of competing on the market for the accomplishment of that task – constitutes a public service contract within the meaning of Article 1(2)(d) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts.

Judgment

1 This reference for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Articles 44(2) and 47(1)(b), (2) and (5) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

2 The reference has been made by the Fővárosi Ítélőtábla (Budapest Court of Appeal) (Hungary), sitting in an appeal against a decision of the Közbeszerzések Tanácsa Közbeszerzési Döntőbizottság (Public Procurement Arbitration Board of the Public Procurement Council), the administrative arbitration authority. The decision was made in a dispute between Hochtief Construction AG Magyarországi Fióktelepe, now Hochtief Solutions AG Magyarországi Fióktelepe ('Hochtief Hungary'), the Hungarian subsidiary of Hochtief Solutions AG, a company incorporated under German law, and Észak-dunántúli Környezetvédelmi és Vízügyi Igazgatóság (Édukövízig) (North Transdanubia Environmental Protection and Water Management Directorate, 'Édukövízig') regarding a restricted tendering procedure launched by the latter body. In those proceedings, brought by Hochtief Hungary, the arbitration authority is the defendant and Édukövízig is an applicant, together with Hochtief Hungary.

Legal context

Directive 2004/18

3 Directive 2004/18 includes the following recitals:

(2) The award of contracts concluded in the Member States on behalf of the State, regional or local authorities and other bodies governed by public law entities, is subject to the respect of the principles of the Treaty and in particular to the principle of freedom of movement of goods, the principle of freedom of establishment and the principle of freedom to provide services and to the principles deriving therefrom, such as the principle of equal treatment, the principle of non-discrimination, the principle of mutual recognition, the principle of proportionality and the principle of transparency. However, for public contracts above a certain value, it is advisable to draw up provisions of Community coordination of national procedures for the award of such contracts which are based on these principles so as to ensure the effects of them and to guarantee the opening-up of public procurement to competition. These coordinating provisions should therefore be interpreted in accordance with both the aforementioned rules and principles and other rules of the Treaty.

(39) Verification of the suitability of tenderers, in open procedures, and of candidates, in restricted and negotiated procedures with publication of a contract notice and in the competitive dialogue, and the selection thereof, should be carried out in transparent conditions. For this purpose, non-discriminatory criteria should be indicated which the contracting authorities may use when selecting competitors and the means which economic operators may use to prove they have satisfied those criteria. In the same spirit of transparency, the contracting authority should be required, as soon as a contract is put out to competition, to indicate the selection criteria it will use and the level of specific competence it may or may not demand of the economic operators before admitting them to the procurement procedure.

(40) A contracting authority may limit the number of candidates in the restricted and negotiated procedures with publication of a contract notice, and in the competitive dialogue. Such a reduction of candidates should be performed on the basis of objective criteria indicated in the contract notice. ...

4 Under Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, entitled 'Principles of awarding contracts':

'Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way.'

5 Article 44 of the Directive, entitled 'Verification of the suitability and choice of participants and award of contracts', provides:

'1. Contracts shall be awarded on the basis of the criteria laid down in Articles 53 and 55 … after the suitability of the economic operators … has been checked by contracting authorities in accordance with the criteria of economic and financial standing, of professional and technical knowledge or ability referred to in Articles 47 to 52, and, where appropriate, with the non-discriminatory rules and criteria referred to in paragraph 3.

2. The contracting authorities may require candidates and tenderers to meet minimum capacity levels in accordance with Articles 47 and 48.

The extent of the information referred to in Articles 47 and 48 and the minimum levels of ability required for a specific contract must be related and proportionate to the subject-matter of the contract.

These minimum levels shall be indicated in the contract notice.

3. In restricted procedures, negotiated procedures with publication of a contract notice and in the competitive dialogue procedure, contracting authorities may limit the number of suitable candidates they will invite to tender, to negotiate or to conduct a dialogue with, provided a sufficient number of suitable candidates is available. The contracting authorities shall indicate in the contract notice the objective and non-discriminatory criteria or rules they intend to apply …

6 Article 47 of the Directive, entitled 'Economic and financial standing', provides:

'1. Proof of the economic operator's economic and financial standing may, as a general rule, be furnished by one or more of the following references:

(a) appropriate statements from banks or, where appropriate, evidence of relevant professional risk indemnity insurance;

(b) the presentation of balance-sheets or extracts from the balance-sheets, where publication of the balance-sheet is required under the law of the country in which the economic operator is established;

(c) a statement of the undertaking's overall turnover and, where appropriate, of turnover in the area covered by the contract for a maximum of the last three financial years available, depending on the date on which the undertaking was set up or the economic operator started trading, as far as the information on these turnovers is available.

2. An economic operator may, where appropriate and for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. It must in that case prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary, for example, by producing an undertaking by those entities to that effect.

3. Under the same conditions, a group of economic operators as referred to in Article 4 may rely on the capacities of participants in the group or of other entities.

4. Contracting authorities shall specify, in the contract notice or in the invitation to tender, which reference or references mentioned in paragraph 1 they have chosen and which other references must be provided.

5. If, for any valid reason, the economic operator is unable to provide the references requested by the contracting authority, he may prove his economic and financial standing by any other document which the contracting authority considers appropriate.'

Directive 78/660/EEC

7 As is apparent from its first recital, Fourth Council Directive 78/660/EEC of 25 July 1978 based on Article [44(2)(g)] of the Treaty on the annual accounts of certain types of companies (OJ 1978 L 222, p. 11) brought about the harmonisation of national provisions concerning, inter alia, the presentation and content of annual accounts and valuation methods and publication thereof in respect of certain companies with limited liability. Article 1(1) of that directive, which lists the types of companies concerned, includes, as regards the Federal Republic of Germany, the 'Aktiengesellschaft'.

8 However, the harmonisation brought about by that directive is only partial. Thus, it includes the provision, in Article 6, that the Member States may authorise or require adaptation of the layout of the balance sheet and profit and loss account in order to include the appropriation of profit.

German and Hungarian law

9 It is clear from the order for reference that both the German and the Hungarian legislation on the annual accounts of companies provide that the item on the balance sheet relating to profit or loss must take account of the distribution of dividends. However, while the Hungarian legislation authorises that practice only where it does not have the effect of making that item in the balance sheet negative, the German legislation does not provide for any such restriction, at least as regards the transfer of profits from a subsidiary to a parent company.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

10 By notice published in the Official Journal of the European Union of 25 July 2006, Édukövízig launched a restricted procedure for awarding a public contract for transport infrastructure works. According to the file, the estimated value of those works was between HUF 7.2 billion and HUF 7.5 billion or between EUR 23 300 000 and EUR 24 870 000 approximately.

11 As regards the economic and financial standing of the candidates, the awarding authority required the production of a uniform document, drawn up in accordance with the accounting rules, and fixed a minimum level in so far as it required requiring that the profit/loss item in the balance sheet should not have been negative for more than one of the last three completed financial years ('the economic requirement').

12 Hochtief AG is the parent company of the group to which Hochtief Solutions AG, a wholly owned subsidiary, belongs. They are companies incorporated under German law. Hochtief Hungary is the Hungarian subsidiary of Hochtief Solutions AG. According to the order for reference, Hochtief Hungary has, at the very least, the option of relying exclusively on the position of Hochtief Solutions AG as regards the economic requirement.

13 Under a profit transfer agreement, Hochtief Solutions AG must transfer any profit that it makes to its parent company every year, so that the profit recorded in the balance sheet of Hochtief Solutions AG is systematically zero or negative.

14 Hochtief Hungary questioned the lawfulness of the economic requirement on the ground that it was discriminatory and breached certain provisions of the Hungarian law implementing Directive 2004/18.

15 The referring court explained, in that connection, that, under the rules on annual accounts applicable to companies incorporated under German law, or at least to groups of companies incorporated under German law, it is possible for a company to show a positive profit/loss after tax but a negative profit/loss in the balance sheet because of a distribution of dividends or a transfer of profits exceeding the profit after tax, whereas the Hungarian legislation prohibits any distribution of dividends which would result in a negative profit/loss in the balance sheet.

16 Hochtief Hungary challenged the lawfulness of the economic requirement before the Közbeszerzések Tanácsa Közbeszerzési Döntőbizottság. Hochtief Hungary brought an action against the decision of the latter before the court of first instance and subsequently appealed to the referring court.

17 Before the referring court, Hochtief Hungary argued that the economic requirement does not allow a non-discriminatory and objective comparison of the candidates to be made, since the rules on annual accounts of companies as regards the payment of dividends within groups of undertakings may vary from one Member State to another. That, in any event, was the case with regard to Hungary and the Federal Republic of Germany. The economic requirement was indirectly discriminatory because it disadvantaged candidates who were unable to fulfil it, or could do so only with difficulty, because they are subject, in the Member State where they are established, to different legislation from that which is applicable in the Member State of the awarding authority.

18 The referring court finds, first, that it is clear from Articles 44(2) and 47(1)(b) of Directive 2004/18 that a contracting authority may fix a minimum level of economic and financial standing with reference to the balance sheet and, second, that Article 47 takes account of the differences which may exist between national legislations relating to the annual accounts of companies. Therefore, it raises the question of how it is possible to define a minimum level of economic and financial standing which is comparable whatever the place of establishment of a company where that level must be proven by documents which constitute the references mentioned in Article 47(1)(b), but the content of and information provided by which may differ from one Member State to another.

19 Against that background, the Fővárosi Ítélőtábla decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

‘1. Is the requirement that the minimum capacity levels stipulated in Article 44(2) of Directive 2004/18 … be in accordance with Article 47(1)(b) of that Directive to be interpreted in such a way that the contracting authority is entitled to link the minimum capacity levels to a single indicator in an accounting document (balance sheet) that it selects to monitor economic and financial standing?

2. If the answer to the first question is yes, [is] the consistency requirement laid down by Article 44(2) of [that] Directive … fulfilled by data selected for assessment of the minimum capacity levels (profit/loss according to the balance sheet), where such data has different content pursuant to the accounting legislation of individual Member States?

3. Is it sufficient, for the purposes of correcting any discrepancies which doubtless exist between Member States, if the contracting authority ensures that there is an opportunity to employ external resources (Article 47[(2) of Directive 2004/18]), in addition to the documents selected as proof of economic and financial standing, or must the contracting authority, in order to meet the requirement of consistency as regards all the documents selected by it, ensure that that capacity can be demonstrated in another manner (Article 47(5) [of that Directive])?’

Admissibility of the question referred for a preliminary ruling

20 Édukövízig maintains, as a preliminary point, that the reference for a preliminary ruling is inadmissible on two grounds. First, it concerns legal matters which, as they were not discussed during the procedure prior to the proceedings pending before the referring court, have no relevance to the dispute which is actually before that court. Second, the economic requirement does not, it argues, raise any real difficulty since Hochtief Hungary could have either relied on its own balance sheet, which would have allowed it to meet that requirement, or acted on behalf of Hochtief Solutions AG, which, in the light of the profit transfer contract with its parent company, Hochtief AG, should, under the legislation applicable to it, have relied on the economic and financial standing of the latter, which is legally liable, which would also have been sufficient to meet the economic requirement.

21 As regards the first ground of inadmissibility thus raised, it must be observed that it concerns the ambit of the case before the referring court as determined by the application of the national procedural rules, a question whose consideration does not fall within the jurisdiction of this Court.

22 As regards the second ground of inadmissibility, it is based on the alleged consequences of the assessment of factual matters which have to do either with Hungarian law, that is to say, the possibility that Hochtief Hungary could meet the economic requirement itself, or with German company law, that is to say, the possibility that Hochtief Solutions AG could meet that same requirement as a result of the obligation to rely on the economic standing of its parent company, which are matters which it is not for this Court to assess.

23 For the rest, it must be borne in mind that, within the framework of the cooperation between the Court of Justice and national courts and tribunals established by Article 267 TFEU, it is solely for the national court to determine, in the light of the particular circumstances of each case, both the need for a preliminary ruling in order to enable it to deliver judgment and the relevance of the questions which it submits to the Court. The Court can refuse a request submitted by a national court only where it is quite obvious that the ruling sought by that court on the interpretation of European Union law bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose or where the problem is general or hypothetical (see, inter alia, Case C-203/09 Volvo Car Germany [2010] ECR I-10721, paragraph 23 and the case-law cited).

24 As none of those situations arises here, the questions referred by the referring court must be answered.

The questions referred for a preliminary ruling

The first and second questions

25 By its first and second questions, which should be considered together, the referring court essentially asks whether Articles 44(2) and 47(1)(b) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority may fix a minimum level of economic and financial standing with reference to a given item on the balance sheet, even if there may be differences as regards that item between the legislations of the various Member States and, as a result, in the balance sheets of companies, depending on the legislation to which they are subject as regards the preparation of their annual accounts.

26 Under the first subparagraph of Article 44(2) of Directive 2004/18, a contracting authority may require minimum levels of economic and financial standing in accordance with Article 47 of that directive. Article 47(1)(b) provides that a contracting authority may ask candidates and tenderers to provide proof of that standing through the presentation of their balance sheet.

27 However, it must be observed that a minimum level of economic and financial standing cannot be established by reference to the balance sheet in general. It follows that the option provided for in the first subparagraph of Article 44(2) of Directive 2004/18 can be implemented, as regards Article 47(1)(b), only by reference to one or more particular aspects of the balance sheet.

28 As to the choice of those aspects, Article 47 of Directive 2004/18 leaves a fair degree of freedom to the contracting authorities. Unlike Article 48 of the Directive which, as regards technical and professional capacity, establishes a closed system which limits the methods of assessment and verification available to those authorities and, therefore, limits their opportunities to lay down requirements (see, as regards the similar provisions in earlier directives than Directive 2004/18, Case 76/81 Transporoute et travaux [1982] ECR 417, paragraphs 8 to 10 and 15), Article 47(4) expressly authorises contracting authorities to choose the probative references which must be produced by candidates or tenderers to furnish proof of their economic and financial standing. As Article 44(2) of Directive 2004/18 refers to Article 47, the same freedom of choice exists as regards the minimum levels of economic and financial standing.

29 However, that freedom is not unlimited. Under the second subparagraph of Article 44(2) of Directive 2004/18 a minimum capacity level must be related and proportionate to the subject-matter of the contract. It follows that the aspect or aspects of the balance sheet chosen by a contracting authority to establish a minimum level of economic and financial standing must be objectively such as to provide information on such standing of an economic operator and that the threshold thus fixed must be adapted to the size of the contract concerned in that it constitutes objectively a positive indication of the existence of a sufficient economic and financial basis for the performance of that contract, without, however, going beyond what is reasonably necessary for that purpose.

30 As the legislations of the Member States regarding the annual accounts of companies have not been the subject of full harmonisation, it cannot be ruled out that there may be differences between those legislations as regards a particular aspect of the balance sheet by reference to which a contracting authority established a minimum capacity level. However, it must be observed that, as is clear from the wording of Article 47(1)(b) and (c), and (5), Directive 2004/18 contains the idea that, as regards proof of the economic and financial standing of candidates or tenderers, a reference may legitimately be required by a contracting authority even if, objectively, not every candidate or tenderer is able to produce it, if only, in the case of Article 47(1)(b), because of a difference in legislation. Therefore, such a requirement cannot, in itself, be considered to constitute discrimination.

31 It follows that the requirement of a minimum level of economic and financial standing cannot, in principle, be disregarded solely because proof of that level has to be furnished by reference to an aspect of the balance sheet regarding which there may be differences between the laws of the different Member States.

32 Consequently, the answer to the first and second questions referred is that Article 44(2) and Article 47(1)(b) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority may require a minimum level of economic and financial standing by reference to one or more particular aspects of the balance sheet, provided that those aspects are such as to provide information on such standing of an economic operator and that that level is adapted to the size of the contract concerned in that it constitutes objectively a positive indication of the existence of a sufficient economic and financial basis for the performance of that contract, without, however, going beyond what is reasonably necessary for that purpose. The requirement of a minimum level of economic and financial standing cannot, in principle, be disregarded solely because that level relates to an aspect of the balance sheet regarding which there may be differences between the legislations of the different Member States.

The third question

33 By its third question, the referring court essentially asks whether Article 47 of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that, where an economic operator cannot meet a minimum level of economic and financial standing because of a difference between the legislations of the Member States in which it and the contracting authority respectively are established as regards the item in the balance sheet by reference to which that minimum capacity was defined, it is sufficient for that operator to rely on the capacities of another entity, in accordance with Article 47(2), or if it must be authorised to prove its economic and financial standing by any other appropriate document, in accordance with Article 47(5).

34 It must, however, be observed that, as is clear from the order for reference, the divergence of legislation at issue in the case in the main proceedings does not concern the scope of the item of the balance sheet covered by the economic requirement, that is to say the profit/loss recorded in the balance sheet. Both the German and Hungarian legislations provide that that item takes account of the profit or loss of the financial year and the distribution of dividends. However, those legislations differ in that the Hungarian law prohibits the distribution of dividends or the transfer of profits from having the consequence of making that item negative, whereas the German law does not prohibit that, in any event not in the situation of a subsidiary like Hochtief Solutions AG, which is linked to its parent company by a profit transfer agreement.

35 Therefore, that difference in legislation concerns the fact that, unlike the Hungarian law, the German law does not limit the possibility which a parent company has of deciding that the profits of its subsidiary will be transferred to it, even if that transfer has the effect of making the profit/loss in the balance sheet negative for that subsidiary, without, however, requiring such a transfer of profits.

36 Consequently, it must be held that, by its question, the referring court seeks to know whether Article 47 of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that, where an economic operator is unable to meet a minimum level of economic and financial standing such as the economic requirement because of an agreement under which that economic operator systematically transfers its profits to its parent company, it is sufficient for that operator to be able to rely on the capacities of another entity, in accordance with Article 47(2), or whether it must be authorised to prove its economic standing by any other appropriate document, in accordance with Article 47(5), having regard to the fact that such an agreement is authorised without limitation by the legislation of the Member State of establishment of that economic operator, whereas, under the legislation of the Member State of establishment of the contracting authority, it would only be authorised on condition that the transfer of profits does not have the effect of making the profit/loss in the balance sheet negative.

37 It appears that, in such a situation, the fact that a subsidiary is unable to meet a minimum level of economic and financial standing defined by reference to a particular aspect of the balance sheet is, in the final analysis, the result, not of a difference in legislation, but of a decision by its parent company which obliges that subsidiary to transfer all its profits systematically to it.

38 In that situation, that subsidiary has only the option provided for by Article 47(2) of Directive 2004/18, which allows it to rely on the economic and financial standing of another entity by producing the undertaking of that entity to make the necessary resources available to it. Clearly, that option is particularly suited to such a situation, since the parent company may thus itself remedy the fact that it has placed its subsidiary in a position in which it cannot meet the minimum capacity level.

39 The answer to the third question is therefore that Article 47 of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that where an economic operator cannot meet a minimum level of economic and financial standing consisting in a requirement that the profit/loss item in the balance sheet of candidates or tenderers should not be negative for more than one of the last three completed financial years, because of an agreement under which that economic operator systematically transfers its profits to its parent company, that operator has no other option, in order to meet that minimum capacity level, than to rely on the capacities of another entity, in accordance with Article 47(2). It is irrelevant in that regard that the legislation of the Member State of establishment of that economic operator and that of the Member State of establishment of the contracting authority differ in that such an agreement is authorised without limitation by the legislation of the first Member State whereas, under the legislation of the second, it would only be authorised on condition that the transfer of profits does not have the effect of making the profit/loss item in the balance sheet negative.

Costs

40 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Seventh Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Articles 44(2) and 47(1)(b) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts must be interpreted as meaning that a contracting authority may require a minimum level of economic and financial standing by reference to one or more particular aspects of the balance sheet, provided that those aspects are such as to provide information on such standing of an economic operator and that that level is adapted to the size of the contract concerned in that it constitutes objectively a positive indication of the existence of a sufficient economic and financial basis for the performance of that contract, without, however, going beyond what is reasonably necessary for that purpose. The requirement of a minimum level of economic and financial standing cannot, in principle, be disregarded solely because that level relates to an aspect of the balance sheet regarding which there may be differences between the legislations of the different Member States.

2. Article 47 of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that where an economic operator cannot meet a minimum level of economic and financial standing consisting in a requirement that the profit/loss item in the balance sheet of candidates or tenderers should not be negative for more than one of the last three completed financial years, because of an agreement under which that economic operator systematically transfers its profits to its parent company, that operator has no other option, in order to meet that minimum capacity level, than to rely on the capacities of another entity, in accordance with Article 47(2). It is irrelevant in that regard that the legislation of the Member State of establishment of that economic operator and that of the Member State of establishment of the contracting authority differ in that such an agreement is authorised without limitation by the legislation of the first Member State whereas, under the legislation of the second, it would only be authorised on condition that the transfer of profits does not have the effect of making the profit/loss item in the balance sheet negative.

1 These requests for a preliminary ruling concern the interpretation of Articles 21 TFEU, 45 TFEU, 49 TFEU, 56 TFEU and 63 TFEU and Articles 22 and 24 of Directive 2004/38/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 29 April 2004 on the right of citizens of the Union and their family members to move and reside freely within the territory of the Member States amending Regulation (EEC) No 1612/68 and repealing Directives 64/221/EEC, 68/360/EEC, 72/194/EEC, 73/148/EEC, 75/34/EEC, 75/35/EEC, 90/364/EEC, 90/365/EEC and 93/96/EEC (OJ 2004 L 158, p. 77, and corrigenda OJ 2004 L 229, p. 35, and OJ 2005 L 197, p. 34).

2 The requests have been made in two sets of proceedings brought against the Vlaamse Regering (Flemish Government) by, on the one hand, Mr Libert, Mr Van Eycken, Mr Bleeckx, the Syndicat national des propriétaires et copropriétaires ASBL and Mr de Clippele and, on the other, All Projects & Developments NV and 35 other companies concerning provisions which make the transfer of property located in certain communes selected by the Vlaamse Regering (‘the target communes’) subject to a ‘special condition’ that the property may be ‘transferred’, meaning sold, leased for more than nine years or subject to a grant of a right under a long-term lease or a building lease, only to persons who have, in the opinion of a provincial assessment committee, a ‘sufficient connection’ with the communes in question.

3 In addition, in Case C-203/11, the Grondwettelijk Hof (Constitutional Court) asks the Court whether Articles 49 TFEU, 56 TFEU, 63 TFEU, 107 TFEU and 108 TFEU, Directive 2006/123/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 12 December 2006 on services in the internal market (OJ 2006 L 376, p. 36), and Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114), as amended by Regulation (EC) No 596/2009 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 18 June 2009 (OJ 2009 L 188, p. 14) ('Directive 2004/18'), preclude provisions which impose, in certain situations, a 'social obligation' on persons who subdivide areas of land into plots (subdividers) and developers, which entails, in essence, the use of part of their building project for the development of social housing units or the payment of a social contribution, in return for which those operators may benefit from tax incentives and subsidy mechanisms.

Legal context

4 Article 1 of Directive 2004/18 provides:

'(1) For the purposes of this Directive, the definitions set out in paragraphs 2 to 15 shall apply.

(2) (a) "Public contracts" are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services within the meaning of this Directive.

(b) "Public works contracts" are public contracts having as their object either the execution, or both the design and execution, of works related to one of the activities within the meaning of Annex I or a work, or the realisation, by whatever means, of a work corresponding to the requirements specified by the contracting authority. A "work" means the outcome of building or civil engineering works taken as a whole which is sufficient of itself to fulfil an economic or technical function.

5 Under Article 1 of Directive 2004/38:

'This Directive lays down:

(a) the conditions governing the exercise of the right of free movement and residence within the territory of the Member States by [European] Union citizens and their family members;

(b) the right of permanent residence in the territory of the Member States for Union citizens and their family members;

(c) the limits placed on the rights set out in (a) and (b) on grounds of public policy, public security or public health.'

6 Article 3(1) of Directive 2004/38 is worded as follows:

'This Directive shall apply to all Union citizens who move to or reside in a Member State other than that of which they are a national, and to their family members as defined in point 2 of Article 2 who accompany or join them.'

7 Article 22 of Directive 2004/38, which is entitled 'Territorial scope', provides:

'The right of residence and the right of permanent residence shall cover the whole territory of the host Member State. Member States may impose territorial restrictions on the right of residence and the right of permanent residence only where the same restrictions apply to their own nationals.'

8 Article 24 of Directive 2004/38, which is entitled 'Equal treatment', provides in paragraph 1:

‘Subject to such specific provisions as are expressly provided for in the [EC] Treaty and secondary law, all Union citizens residing on the basis of this Directive in the territory of the host Member State shall enjoy equal treatment with the nationals of that Member State within the scope of the Treaty. The benefit of this right shall be extended to family members who are not nationals of a Member State and who have the right of residence or permanent residence.’

9 Commission Decision 2005/842/EC of 28 November 2005 on the application of Article 86(2) [EC] to State aid in the form of public service compensation granted to certain undertakings entrusted with the operation of services of general economic interest (OJ 2005 L 312, p. 67) (‘the SGEI Decision’), provides in Article 1:

‘This Decision sets out the conditions under which State aid in the form of public service compensation granted to certain undertakings entrusted with the operation of services of general economic interest is to be regarded as compatible with the common market and exempt from the requirement of notification laid down in Article 88(3) [EC].’

10 Article 3 of the SGEI Decision, which is entitled ‘Compatibility and exemption from notification’, provides:

‘State aid in the form of public service compensation that meets the conditions laid down in this Decision shall be compatible with the common market and shall be exempt from the obligation of prior notification provided for in Article 88(3) of the Treaty, without prejudice to the application of stricter provisions relating to public service obligations contained in sectoral Community legislation.’

11 Recital 9 in the preamble to Directive 2006/123 is worded as follows:

‘This Directive applies only to requirements which affect the access to, or the exercise of, a service activity. Therefore, it does not apply to requirements, such as road traffic rules, rules concerning the development or use of land, town and country planning, building standards …’

12 Article 2 of Directive 2006/123, which is entitled ‘Scope’, provides:

‘(1) This Directive shall apply to services supplied by providers established in a Member State.

(2) This Directive shall not apply to the following activities:

(a) non-economic services of general interest;

(j) social services relating to social housing, childcare and support of families and persons permanently or temporarily in need which are provided by the State, by providers mandated by the State or by charities recognised as such by the State;

…’

Belgian law

13 Book 4 of the Decree of the Flemish Region of 27 March 2009 on land and real estate policy (Belgisch Staatsblad of 15 May 2009, p. 37408) (‘the Flemish Decree’) on ‘Measures concerning affordable housing’ contains, in Chapter 3 of Title 1, which is entitled ‘Social obligations’, Article 4.1.16 which is worded as follows:

‘(1) Where a land subdivision project or building project is subject to a rule as defined under Chapter 2, Section 2, a social obligation shall be linked by operation of law to the land subdivision authorisation or, as the case may be, the planning permission.

A social obligation … shall require a subdivider or developer to take steps to ensure delivery of a supply of social housing units consistent with the percentage applicable to the land subdivision or building project.

14 Article 4.1.17 in Chapter 3 of the Flemish Decree provides:

‘The subdivider or developer shall have the option of discharging a social obligation in one of the following ways:

1. in kind, in accordance with Articles 4.1.20 to 4.1.24;

2. by the sale to a social housing organisation of the land required for the prescribed supply of social housing, in accordance with Article 4.1.25;

3. by the leasing to a social rental agency of housing developed in the context of a land subdivision or building project, in accordance with Article 4.1.26;

4. by a combination of points 1, 2 and/or 3.’

15 Under Article 4.1.19 of the Flemish Decree:

‘The subdivider or developer may discharge in whole or in part a social obligation through payment of a social contribution to the commune in which the land subdivision project or building project is developed. The social contribution shall be calculated by multiplying the number of social housing units or social lots which are in principle to be developed by EUR 50 000 and by indexing that amount on the basis of the ABEX index, the reference index being that of December 2008. …’

16 Articles 4.1.20 to 4.1.24 of the Flemish Decree provide, for the benefit of private undertakings discharging the ‘social obligation’ in kind, tax incentives and subsidy mechanisms such as the application of a reduced rate of value added tax (VAT) and a reduced rate of stamp duty (Article 4.1.20(3), second subparagraph), a purchase guarantee in respect of the housing developed which no social housing organisation is prepared to purchase (Article 4.1.21) and infrastructure subsidies (Article 4.1.23).

17 Under Article 4.1.22 of the Flemish Decree:

‘Social housing units for purchase and social lots developed on the basis of the social obligation shall be offered in the name and on behalf of the subdivider or developer by a social housing organisation operating in the commune. The offer shall be made in accordance with the conditions established by the Flemish Government on the transfer of immovable property by the Vlaamse Maatschappij voor Sociaal Wonen and the social housing organisations. The subdivider or developer and the social housing organisation shall to that end conclude an administration agreement.

The social housing organisation shall, with regard to the social housing units for purchase and the social lots in question, exercise all the rights defined in or arising under the Flemish Housing Code, as if they had themselves developed the social housing units for purchase and the social lots.’

18 Book 3 of the Flemish Decree also provides for subsidies to be granted irrespective of whether any ‘social obligation’ is discharged. In particular, these are subsidies for ‘activation projects’ (Article 3.1.2 of that decree), a reduction in the tax on natural persons which is obtained on conclusion of renovation agreements (Articles 3.1.3 et seq. of that decree) and a flat-rate reduction of the taxable amount for stamp duty (Article 3.1.10 of that decree).

19 Book 5 of the Flemish Decree, which is entitled ‘Living in your own region’, provides in Article 5.2.1:

‘(1) A specific requirement shall apply to the transfer of land and buildings constructed thereon in regions which satisfy the two conditions referred to below:

1. the land and buildings constructed thereon are within a “residential extension area” laid down by the Royal Decree of 28 December 1972 on the presentation and implementation of draft plans and sector plans, as at the date of entry into force of this decree;

2. the land and buildings constructed thereon are, when the private transfer instrument is signed, located in the target communes which appear on the most recent list published in the Belgisch Staatsblad, as prescribed in Article 5.1.1, it being understood that the private transfer instrument shall be regarded for the application of this provision as having being signed six months before attribution of a fixed date, if more than six months have elapsed between the date of signature and the date of attribution of a fixed date.

The special transfer condition means that the land and buildings constructed thereon may be transferred only to persons who have, in the opinion of a provincial assessment committee, a sufficient connection with the commune. “Transfer” shall mean sale, leasing for more than nine years, or grant of a right under a long-term lease or a building lease.

The special transfer condition shall expire, definitively and without any right of renewal, twenty years after the date of attribution of a fixed date to the initial transfer subject to the condition.

(2) For the purposes of [Article 5.2.1, second subparagraph], a person shall have a sufficient connection with the commune if he satisfies one or more of the following conditions:

1. he has been continuously resident in the commune or in a neighbouring commune for at least six years, provided that that commune is also included on the list prescribed in Article 5.1.1;

2. on the date of transfer, he carries out activities in the commune, provided that those activities occupy on average at least half a working week;

3. he has established a professional, family, social or economic connection to the commune as a result of a significant circumstance of long duration.

20 For the purposes of the application of those provisions, the ‘target communes’, in accordance with Article 5.1.1 of the Flemish Decree, are the communes in which the average price of land is highest per square metre and in which internal or external migration is highest. Under the Order of the Flemish Government of 19 June 2009 establishing a list of communes for the purposes of Article 5.1.1(1) of the Decree of 27 March 2009 on land and real estate policy (Belgisch Staatsblad of 22 September 2009, p. 63341) that there are 69 target communes.

21 Lastly, under Article 5.2.3 of the Flemish Decree, the provincial assessment committee and third parties who are adversely affected may apply for annulment of a transfer which has taken place in disregard of the special condition.

The actions in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

22 In Case C-197/11, Mr Libert, Mr Van Eycken and Mr Bleeckx, who are resident in Belgium, the Syndicat national des propriétaires et copropriétaires ASBL and Mr de Clippele, notary, applied to the Cour constitutionnelle (Constitutional Court) for annulment of the provisions of Book 5 of the Flemish Decree on the ground that they restrict the right to purchase or sell property in the target communes.

23 In its order for reference, the Constitutional Court states in that connection that the contested provisions limit the opportunities for people who are not considered to have a ‘sufficient connection’ with the target communes, within the meaning of Article 5.2.1(2) of the Flemish Decree, to acquire land or buildings thereon, to take out a lease of more than nine years or to acquire rights to a long lease or building lease, in those communes. Moreover, the contested provisions may have the effect of deterring citizens of the Union who own or rent a property in those communes from leaving them to reside in another Member State or pursue a professional activity there since after a certain period of residence outside those communes, they would no longer have a ‘sufficient connection’ to them.

24 In that regard, the Constitutional Court considers that, according to the travaux préparatoires of the Flemish Decree, its purpose is to respond to the housing needs of the local population in certain Flemish communes where the high land prices lead to ‘gentrification’, whereby less affluent population groups are excluded from the property market due to the arrival of ‘financially stronger’ population groups from other communes. The Constitutional Court is therefore uncertain, first, whether such an objective can be regarded as being in the ‘public interest’ in the light of the Court’s case-law and thus as justifying the restrictive measures adopted by the Flemish Government and, second, whether those measures are necessary and proportionate to attain such an objective.

25 In those circumstances, the Constitutional Court decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

‘Are Articles 21 TFEU, 45 TFEU, 49 TFEU, 56 TFEU and 63 TFEU and Articles 22 and 24 of Directive 2004/38 … to be interpreted as precluding the scheme established by Book 5 of the [Flemish] Decree which, in certain communes referred to as “target communes”, makes the transfer of land and buildings thereon conditional upon the purchaser or the lessee demonstrating a sufficient connection with those communes for the purposes of Article [5.2.1(2)] of the Decree?’

26 The dispute in the main proceedings concerns an application for annulment of several provisions of the Flemish Decree brought before the Constitutional Court by All Projects & Developments NV and 35 other companies governed by Belgian law and professionally active in the property sector in the Flemish Region.

27 Those companies claim that the social obligation imposed on them pursuant to Book 4 of the Flemish Decree is contrary to European Union (‘EU’) law, in particular the freedom of establishment, the freedom to provide services and the free movement of capital, and Directives 2006/123 and 2004/18, and that the tax incentives and subsidy mechanisms, provided for in Book 4, from which they benefit in return for discharging the social obligation, may constitute unlawful State aid which could be subject to a recovery order as they were not notified to the European Commission.

28 Moreover, those companies claim that the ‘special condition’ relating to the transfer of property, provided for in Book 5 of the Flemish Decree, constitutes an obstacle to the exercise of rights under EU law and fundamental freedoms under the FEU Treaty given that, as a result of the application of that condition, there has been a reduction in the number of potential buyers for the lots and housing units developed by those companies in the target communes.

29 In that context, having doubts as to the interpretation of the relevant provisions of EU law, the Constitutional Court decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

‘1. Should Articles 107 [TFEU] and 108 [TFEU], whether or not read in conjunction with [the SGEI Decision], be interpreted as requiring that the measures contained in Articles 3.1.3, 3.1.10, 4.1.20(3)(2), 4.1.21 and 4.1.23 of the [Flemish Decree] should be notified to the European Commission before the adoption or entry into force of those provisions?

2. Should a scheme which by operation of law imposes on private actors whose land subdivision or building projects are of a certain minimum size, a “social obligation” amounting to a percentage of a minimum of 10% and a maximum of 20% of that land subdivision or that building project, which can be performed in kind or by the payment of a sum of [EUR] 50 000 for each social lot or dwelling not realised, be appraised against the freedom of establishment, against the freedom to provide services or against the free movement of capital, or should it be classified as a complex scheme which should be appraised against each of those freedoms?

3. Having regard to Article 2(2)(a) and (j) thereof, is Directive 2006/123 … applicable to a compulsory contribution by private actors to the delivery of social houses and apartments, which is imposed by operation of law as a "social obligation" linked to every building or land subdivision authorisation sought in respect of a project of a minimum size as determined by law, where the social housing units delivered are bought at predetermined capped prices by social housing companies to be rented out to a broad category of individuals, or, by substitution, are sold by the social housing company to individuals belonging to the same category?

4. If the third question referred is answered in the affirmative, should the concept of "requirement to be evaluated" in Article 15 of Directive 2006/123 … be interpreted as meaning that it covers an obligation on private actors to contribute, in addition to, or as part of their usual activity, to the construction of social housing, and to transfer the units developed at capped prices to semi-public authorities, or through substitution of the latter, even though those private actors then have no right of initiative in the social housing market?

5 If the third question referred is answered in the affirmative, should the national court apply a penalty, and if so, what penalty, to:

(a) the finding that a new requirement, subjected to evaluation in accordance with Article 15 of Directive 2006/123 …, was not specifically evaluated in accordance with Article 15(6) of that directive;

(b) the finding that no notification of that new requirement was given in accordance with Article 15(7) of that directive?

6. If the third question referred is answered in the affirmative, should the concept of "prohibited requirement" in Article 14 of Directive 2006/123 … be interpreted as precluding a national scheme, in the cases described in that article, not only if it makes access to a service activity or the exercise of it subject to compliance with a requirement, but also if that scheme merely provides that non-compliance with that requirement will cause the financial compensation for the performance of a service prescribed by law to lapse, and that the financial guarantee supplied in regard to the performance of the service will not be reimbursed?

7. If the third question referred is answered in the affirmative, should the concept of "competing operators" in Article 14(6) of Directive 2006/123 … be interpreted as meaning that it is also applicable to a public institution whose mandates can partially interfere with those of the service providers, if it takes the decisions referred to in Article 14(6) of that directive and it is also obliged, as the final step in a cascade system, to buy the social housing units developed by a service provider in the performance of the 'social obligation' imposed on him?

8. (a) If the third question referred is answered in the affirmative, should the concept "authorisation scheme" in Article 4(6) of Directive 2006/123 … be interpreted to mean that it is applicable to certificates issued by a public institution after the initial building or land subdivision authorisation has already been given, and which are necessary in order to qualify for certain of the compensations for the performance of a "social obligation" which was linked by law to the original authorisation and which are also necessary in order to claim the reimbursement of the financial guarantee imposed on the service provider in favour of the public institution?

(b) If the third question referred is answered in the affirmative, should the concept of "authorisation scheme" in Article 4(6) of Directive 2006/123 … be interpreted to mean that it is applicable to an agreement which a private actor concludes with a public institution pursuant to a legal rule in the context of the substitution of the public institution in respect of the sale of a social housing unit developed by the private actor in the performance, in kind, of a "social obligation" which is linked by law to a building or land subdivision authorisation, taking account of the fact that the conclusion of that agreement is a condition for the executability of the authorisation?

9. Should Articles 49 [TFEU] and 56 [TFEU] be interpreted as precluding a scheme whereby, when a building or land subdivision authorisation is granted in respect of a project of a certain minimum size, it is linked by operation of law to a "social obligation" entailing the delivery of social housing units, amounting to a certain percentage of the project, which are subsequently to be sold at capped prices to a public institution, or with substitution by it?

10. Should Article 63 [TFEU] be interpreted as precluding a scheme whereby, when a building or land subdivision authorisation is granted in respect of a project of a certain minimum size, it is linked by operation of law to a "social obligation" entailing the development of social housing units, amounting to a certain percentage of the project, which are subsequently to be sold at capped prices to a public institution, or with substitution by it?

11. Should the concept of "public works contracts" in Article 1(2)(b) of Directive 2004/18 … be interpreted to mean that it is applicable to a scheme whereby, when a building or land subdivision authorisation is granted in respect of a project of a certain minimum size, it is linked by operation of law to a "social obligation" entailing the development of social housing units, amounting to a certain percentage of the project, which are subsequently to be sold at capped prices to a public institution, or with substitution by it?

12. Should Articles 21 [TFEU], 45 [TFEU], 49 [TFEU], 56 [TFEU] and 63 [TFEU] and Articles 22 and 24 of Directive 2004/38 … be interpreted as precluding the scheme introduced by Book 5 of the [Flemish Decree], namely the scheme whereby in certain so-called "target communes" the transfer of land and any buildings constructed thereon is made subject to the buyer or the tenant being able to demonstrate a sufficient connection with those communes within the meaning of Article 5.2.1(2) of that decree?'

30 By order of the President of the Court of 7 June 2011, Cases C-197/11 and C-203/11 were joined for the purposes of the written and oral procedure and the judgment.

Consideration of the questions referred

The question in Case C-197/11 and the twelfth question in Case C-203/11

31 By those questions, which it is appropriate to examine together, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Articles 21 TFEU, 45 TFEU, 49 TFEU, 56 TFEU and 63 TFEU and Articles 22 and 24 of Directive 2004/38 preclude legislation, such as Book 5 of the Flemish Decree, which makes the transfer of immovable property in the target communes subject to verification, by a provincial assessment committee, that there exists a 'sufficient connection' between the prospective buyer or tenant and those communes.

Preliminary observations

32 It must be noted at the outset that the Flemish Government claims that it is not necessary to answer those questions because, in its view, they concern only a purely internal situation quite unconnected to EU law. The actions in the main proceedings, which concern either Belgian nationals resident in Belgium or undertakings established under Belgian law, are confined within one single Member State so that the provisions of EU law relied upon are not applicable.

33 In that regard, it is settled case-law that the Treaty rules governing freedom of movement for persons and the measures adopted to implement them cannot be applied to activities which have no factor linking them with any of the situations governed by EU law and which are confined in all relevant respects within a single Member State (see Case C-212/06 Government of the French Community and Walloon Government [2008] ECR I-1683, paragraph 33, and Case C-434/09 McCarthy [2011] ECR I-3375, paragraph 45).

34 It is common ground that the applicants in the main proceedings are Belgian nationals and that all aspects of the main proceedings are confined within one Member State. However, it is by no means inconceivable that individuals or undertakings established in Member States other than the Kingdom of Belgium have been or are interested in purchasing or leasing immovable property located in the target communes and are thus affected by the provisions of the Flemish Decree in question (see, to that effect, Case C-470/11 Garkalns [2012] ECR, paragraph 21 and the case-law cited).

35 Moreover, as the Advocate General has noted in point 23 of his Opinion, the referring court has made a request for a preliminary ruling to the Court specifically in proceedings for the annulment of those provisions, which apply not only to Belgian nationals but also to nationals of other Member States. Consequently, the decision of the referring court that will be adopted pursuant to the present judgment will also have effects on the nationals of other Member States.

36 In those circumstances, it is necessary for the Court to rule on those two questions.

The existence of a restriction of the fundamental freedoms guaranteed by the FEU Treaty

37 In that regard, it is necessary to establish whether, and to what extent, Articles 21 TFEU, 45 TFEU, 49 TFEU, 56 TFEU and 63 TFEU and Articles 22 and 24 of Directive 2004/38 preclude legislation such as that at issue in the main proceedings.

38 It should be borne in mind, first, that Article 21 TFEU and, in their respective areas, Articles 45 TFEU and 49 TFEU, and Articles 22 and 24 of Directive 2004/38, prohibit national measures which preclude or deter a national of a Member State from leaving his country of origin in order to exercise his right to freedom of movement within the European Union. Such measures, even if they apply without regard to the nationality of the individuals concerned, constitute restrictions on the fundamental freedoms guaranteed by those articles (see, to that effect, Case C-152/05 Commission v Germany [2008] ECR I-39, paragraphs 21 and 22; Case C-253/09 Commission v Hungary [2011] ECR I-12391, paragraphs 46, 47 and 86; and Case C-46/12 L.N. [2013] ECR, paragraph 28).

39 In the present case, as the Constitutional Court has stated in its orders for reference, the provisions of Book 5 of the Flemish Decree prevent persons without a ‘sufficient connection’ with a target commune, within the meaning of Article 5.2.1(2) of that decree, from purchasing land or buildings thereon, or from taking out a lease of more than nine years or from acquiring rights to a long lease or building lease.

40 In addition, those provisions deter Union citizens who own or rent a property in the target communes from leaving them to reside in another Member State or pursue a professional activity there. If they have not stayed in the commune for a certain period of time, those citizens will not necessarily have a ‘sufficient connection’ any more with the commune in question, as is required by Article 5.2.1(2) of the Flemish Decree for the purpose of exercising the rights referred to in the previous paragraph.

41 It follows that the provisions of Book 5 of the Flemish Decree undoubtedly constitute restrictions on the fundamental freedoms guaranteed by Articles 21 TFEU, 45 TFEU and 49 TFEU and Articles 22 and 24 of Directive 2004/38.

42 Next, as regards the freedom to provide services under Article 56 TFEU, the provisions of the Flemish Decree at issue may also hinder the business activities of undertakings active in the property sector, as regards both undertakings established in Belgium which offer their services to, inter alia, non-residents and undertakings established in other Member States.

43 By application of those provisions, immovable property located in a target commune cannot be sold or leased to just any Union citizen, but only to those demonstrating a ‘sufficient connection’ with the commune in question, which clearly restricts the freedom to provide services of the property undertakings in question.

44 Lastly, with regard to the free movement of capital, it should be borne in mind that the measures prohibited by Article 63(1) TFEU, as restrictions on the movement of capital, include those which are likely to discourage residents of one Member State from making investments in immovable property in other Member States (see Case C-567/07 Woningstichting Sint Servatius [2009] ECR I-9021, paragraph 21).

45 That is the case, in particular, of national measures which make investments in immovable property conditional upon a prior authorisation procedure and thus restrict, by their very purpose, the free movement of capital (see Woningstichting Sint Servatius, paragraph 22 and the case-law cited).

46 In the cases in the main proceedings, it is common ground that Book 5 of the Flemish Decree provides for such a prior authorisation procedure to verify the existence of a 'sufficient connection' between the prospective buyer or tenant of immovable property and the target commune in question.

47 It must thus be held that the obligation to submit to such a procedure is likely to discourage non-residents from making investments in immovable property in one of the target communes in the Flemish Region and that, therefore, such an obligation constitutes a restriction of the free movement of capital under Article 63 TFEU.

48 In those circumstances, the Court finds that the provisions of Book 5 of the Flemish Decree clearly constitute a restriction of the fundamental freedoms guaranteed by Articles 21 TFEU, 45 TFEU, 49 TFEU, 56 TFEU and 63 TFEU and Articles 22 and 24 of Directive 2004/38.

Justification of the measures established by the Flemish Decree

49 It should be borne in mind that, according to well-established case-law, national measures which are liable to hinder or make less attractive the exercise of fundamental freedoms guaranteed by the FEU Treaty may nevertheless be allowed provided that they pursue an objective in the public interest, are appropriate for attaining that objective and do not go beyond what is necessary to attain the objective pursued (see, inter alia, Woningstichting Sint Servatius, paragraph 25, and Commission v Hungary, paragraph 69).

50 In that regard, the Vlaamse Regering claims that the condition for the existence of a 'sufficient connection' between the prospective buyer or tenant and the commune in question is justified inter alia by the purpose of responding to the housing needs of the less affluent local population, in particular socially weak individuals and young families as well as single persons not yet in position to build up sufficient capital to purchase or rent immovable property in the target communes. That section of the local population is effectively excluded from the property market owing to the arrival of financially stronger population groups from other communes who can afford the high land and building costs in the target communes.

51 The objective of the regime set out in Book 5 of the Flemish Decree, as a regional planning measure, is thus to guarantee sufficient housing for the low-income or otherwise disadvantaged sections of the local population.

52 In that regard, it must be noted that such requirements relating to social housing policy in a Member State can constitute overriding reasons in the public interest and therefore justify restrictions such as those established by the Flemish Decree (see Woningstichting Sint Servatius, paragraphs 29 and 30, and Case C-400/08 Commission v Spain [2011] ECR I-1915, paragraph 74).

53 However, it is also important to establish whether the existence of a 'sufficient connection' with the target commune in question constitutes a necessary and appropriate measure to attain the objective put forward by the Vlaamse Regering, as referred to in paragraphs 50 and 51 above.

54 In that regard, it is relevant that Article 5.2.1(2) of the Flemish Decree sets out three conditions, any one of which is to be met and compliance with which must be verified as a matter of course by the provincial assessment committee in order to establish whether the requirement for a 'sufficient connection' between the prospective buyer or tenant and the target commune is satisfied. The first condition is the requirement that a person to whom the immovable property is to be transferred has been resident in the target commune or a neighbouring commune for at least six consecutive years prior to the transfer. In accordance with the second condition, the prospective buyer or tenant must, at the date of the transfer, carry out activities in the commune in question which occupy on average at least half a working week. The third condition requires the prospective buyer or tenant to have a professional, family, social or economic connection with the commune in question as a result of a significant circumstance of long duration.

55 However, as the Advocate General has noted in point 37 of his Opinion, none of those conditions directly reflects the socio-economic aspects relating to the objective put forward by the Vlaamse Regering of protecting exclusively the less affluent local population on the property market. Such conditions may be met not only by the less affluent local population but also by other persons with sufficient resources who, consequently, have no specific need for social protection on the property market. Those conditions thus go beyond what is necessary to attain the objective pursued.

56 In addition, it should be noted that less restrictive measures other than those set out in the Flemish Decree could meet the objective pursued without necessarily resulting in a de facto prohibition on purchasing or leasing by any prospective buyer or tenant who does not fulfil the aforementioned conditions. Provision could, for example, be made for subsidies for purchase or other subsidy mechanisms specifically designed to assist less affluent persons, in particular those who are able to prove that they have a low income, to purchase or rent immovable property in the target communes.

57 Lastly, it should be recalled, so far as concerns the third condition referred to in paragraph 54 above, requiring that the prospective buyer or tenant has a professional, family, social or economic connection with the commune in question as a result of a significant circumstance of long duration, that a prior administrative authorisation procedure cannot render legitimate discretionary conduct on the part of the national authorities which is liable to negate the effectiveness of provisions of EU law, in particular those relating to a fundamental freedom. Thus, if such a procedure is to be justified even though it derogates from a fundamental freedom, it must be based on objective, non-discriminatory criteria known in advance, in such a way as adequately to circumscribe the exercise of the national authorities' discretion (see, inter alia, Woningstichting Sint Servatius, paragraph 35 and the case-law cited).

58 However, in the light of the vague nature of that condition and in the absence of any specification of the situations in which it would be deemed to have been met in individual cases, the provisions of Article 5.2.1 of the Flemish Decree do not comply with such requirements.

59 Consequently, a prior administrative authorisation procedure, such as that at issue in the cases in the main proceedings, cannot be considered to be based on conditions capable of adequately circumscribing the exercise of the provincial assessment committee's discretion and such a procedure cannot therefore justify a derogation from a fundamental freedom guaranteed by EU law.

60 In the light of all the foregoing considerations, the answer to the question in Case C-197/11 and the twelfth question in Case C-203/11 is that Articles 21 TFEU, 45 TFEU, 49 TFEU, 56 TFEU and 63 TFEU and Articles 22 and 24 of Directive 2004/38 preclude legislation, such as Book 5 of the Flemish Decree, which makes the transfer of immovable property in the target communes subject to verification, by a provincial assessment committee, that there exists a 'sufficient connection' between the prospective buyer or tenant and those communes.

The second, ninth and tenth questions in Case C-203/11

61 By these questions, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Articles 49 TFEU, 56 TFEU and 63 TFEU preclude legislation such as Book 4 of the Flemish Decree, according to which a 'social obligation' is imposed on some economic operators when a building or land subdivision authorisation is granted.

62 In order to reply to these questions, it should be observed as a preliminary point that, while that legislation may be within the ambit of the three fundamental freedoms alluded to by the referring court, the fact remains, as the Advocate General has noted in point 68 of his Opinion, that the restriction of the freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services is, in the case in the main proceedings, an inevitable consequence of the restriction of the free movement of capital and, therefore, does not justify an independent examination of that legislation in the light of Articles 49 TFEU and 56 TFEU (see, to that effect, Case C-182/08 Glaxo Wellcome [2009] ECR I-8591, paragraph 51 and the case-law cited).

63 It follows that the scheme established by Book 4 of the Flemish Decree must be examined exclusively in the light of the free movement of capital.

64 In accordance with settled case-law, the measures prohibited by Article 63(1) TFEU include those which are likely to discourage residents of one Member State from making investments in immovable property in other Member States. That is the case, in particular, of national measures which make investments in immovable property conditional upon a prior authorisation procedure and thus restrict, by their very purpose, the free movement of capital (see Woningstichting Sint Servatius, paragraphs 21 and 22).

65 In the case in the main proceedings, it is common ground that, under Book 4 of the Flemish Decree, some subdividers or developers are required, for the grant of a building or land subdivision authorisation, to follow a procedure under which they must discharge a social obligation entailing the use of part of their building project for the development of social housing units or the payment of a financial contribution to the commune in which that project is developed.

66 In those circumstances, it must be concluded that, as stated by the referring court in its order for reference, since the investors in question cannot freely use the land for the purposes for which they wished to acquire it, the scheme established by Book 4 of the Flemish Decree constitutes a restriction of the free movement of capital.

67 However, it must be noted that, in accordance with the case-law referred to in paragraph 52 above, the obligation imposed on those economic operators to discharge the social obligation provided for by that decree, in so far as its purpose is to guarantee sufficient housing for the low-income or otherwise disadvantaged sections of the local population, may be justified by requirements relating to social housing policy in a Member State as an overriding reason in the public interest.

68 It is however for the referring court to assess, in the light of the circumstances of the case before it, whether such an obligation satisfies the principle of proportionality, that is to say, whether it is necessary and appropriate to attain the objective pursued.

69 In the light of all the foregoing considerations, the answer to the second, ninth and tenth questions in Case C-203/11 is that Article 63 TFEU must be interpreted as not precluding legislation such as Book 4 of the Flemish Decree, according to which a ‘social obligation’ is imposed on some economic operators when a building or land subdivision authorisation is granted, in so far as the referring court finds that that legislation is necessary and appropriate to attain the objective of guaranteeing sufficient housing for the low-income or otherwise disadvantaged sections of the local population.

The first question in Case C-203/11

70 By this question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether, in the light of Articles 107 TFEU and 108 TFEU, read in conjunction with the SGEI Decision, the tax incentives and subsidy mechanisms provided for in the Flemish Decree must be classified as State aid subject to the obligation to notify the Commission.

71 Some of the measures in question are designed specifically to compensate for the social obligation to which subdividers and developers are subject and consist in: (i) a reduced rate of VAT on the sale of housing and reduced stamp duty for the purchase of building land (Article 4.1.20(3), second subparagraph, of the Flemish Decree); (ii) a purchase guarantee in respect of the housing developed (Article 4.1.21 of that decree); and (iii) infrastructure subsidies (Article 4.1.23 of that decree).

72 Other measures aim to ‘reactivate’ the use of land and buildings and consist in a tax reduction applicable to natural persons who conclude a renovation agreement (Article 3.1.3 et seq. of the Flemish Decree) and reduction of the tax base for stamp duty (Article 3.1.10 of that decree). As the Constitutional Court has pointed out in its order for reference, while it is true that the beneficiary of those measures is a natural person, the fact remains that undertakings active in the property renovation sector nevertheless derive an advantage indirectly.

73 In order to answer the first question in Case C-203/11, it is necessary to provide the referring court with guidance on interpretation in order to enable it to determine whether the measures described in paragraphs 71 and 72 above may be classified as State aid in accordance with Article 107(1) TFEU (Case C-140/09 Fallimento Traghetti del Mediterraneo [2010] ECR I-5243, paragraphs 23 and 24).

74 It is settled case-law that classification as State aid requires all the conditions set out in Article 107(1) TFEU to be fulfilled. First, there must be intervention by the State or through State resources. Second, the intervention must be liable to affect trade between Member States. Third, it must confer an advantage on the recipient. Fourth, it must distort or threaten to distort competition (Fallimento Traghetti del Mediterrane, paragraph 31 and the case-law cited, and Case C-417/10 3M Italia [2012] ECR, paragraph 37).

75 In the case in the main proceedings, while the referring court considers that the measures established by the Flemish Decree fulfil the first and fourth conditions referred to in paragraph 74 above, it has doubts as to the second condition relating to the impact of the measures on trade between Member States and concerning the third condition relating to the selective nature of those measures.

76 So far as concerns the second condition, it should be borne in mind that for the purpose of categorising a national measure as State aid, it is necessary, not to establish that the aid has a real effect on trade between Member States and that competition is actually being distorted, but only to examine whether that aid is liable to affect such trade and distort competition (Case C-148/04 Unicredito Italiano [2005] ECR I-11137, paragraph 54, and Case C-222/04 Cassa di Risparmio di Firenze and Others [2006] ECR I-289, paragraph 140).

77 In particular, when aid granted by a Member State strengthens the position of an undertaking compared with other undertakings competing in intra-Community trade, the latter must be regarded as affected by that aid (see, inter alia, Unicredito Italiano, paragraph 56 and the case-law cited, and Cassa di Risparmio di Firenze and Others, paragraph 141).

78 In that regard, it is not necessary that the beneficiary undertaking itself be involved in intra-Community trade. Where a Member State grants aid to an undertaking, internal activity may be maintained or increased as a result, so that the opportunities for undertakings established in other Member States to penetrate the market in that Member State are thereby reduced. Furthermore, the strengthening of an undertaking which, until then, was not involved in intra-Community trade may place that undertaking in a position which enables it to penetrate the market of another Member State (Unicredito Italiano, paragraph 58, and Cassa di Risparmio di Firenze and Others, paragraph 143).

79 In Case C-203/11, it cannot be ruled out that the measures established by the Flemish Decree strengthen the position of beneficiary undertakings compared with other undertakings competing in intra-Community trade. In addition, the advantage, in terms of competitiveness, conferred by the subsidies granted to the operators concerned may make it more difficult for undertakings established in other Member States to penetrate the Belgian market and indeed may make it easier for the Belgian undertakings in question to penetrate other markets.

80 It should also be borne in mind that the Court has previously held that a national measure by which the public authorities grant certain undertakings a tax exemption which, although it does not involve a transfer of State resources, places those to whom it applies in a more favourable financial position than other taxpayers constitutes State aid within the meaning of Article 107(1) TFEU (see Joined Cases C-393/04 and C-41/05 Air Liquide Industries Belgium [2006] ECR I-5293, paragraph 30 and the case-law cited).

81 It should however be noted that, in accordance with recital 8 in the preamble to, and Article 2 of, Commission Regulation (EC) No 1998/2006 of 15 December 2006 on the application of Articles [87 EC and 88 EC] to de minimis aid (OJ 2007 L 139, p. 5), aid not exceeding a ceiling of EUR 200 000 over any period of three years is deemed not to affect trade between Member States and not to distort or threaten to distort competition. Such measures are excluded from the concept of State aid and are thus exempt from the notification requirement of Article 108(3) TFEU.

82 In the case in the main proceedings, it is for the referring court to determine, in the light of the foregoing guidance on interpretation and by reference to all the relevant circumstances of the case, whether trade between Member States is liable to be affected by the measures established by the Flemish Decree and whether Regulation No 1998/2006 applies to the present case.

83 So far as concerns the third condition referred to in paragraph 74 above, relating to the beneficial nature of the measures in question, it must be observed that measures which, whatever their form, are likely directly or indirectly to favour certain undertakings or are to be regarded as an economic advantage which the recipient undertaking would not have obtained under normal market conditions are regarded as aid (see, inter alia, Case C-451/03 Servizi Ausiliari Dottori Commercialisti [2006] ECR I-2941, paragraph 59).

84 By contrast, where a State measure must be regarded as compensation for the services provided by the recipient undertakings in order to discharge public service obligations, so that those undertakings do not enjoy a real financial advantage and the measure thus does not have the effect of putting them in a more favourable competitive position than the undertakings competing with them, such a measure is not caught by Article 107(1) TFEU (Case C-280/00 Altmark Trans and Regierungspräsidium Magdeburg [2003] ECR I-7747, paragraph 87).

85 However, for such compensation to escape classification as State aid in a particular case, a number of conditions must be satisfied (Altmark Trans and Regierungspräsidium Magdeburg, paragraph 88).

86 As the Advocate General has noted in point 50 of his Opinion, before analysing those conditions, it should be noted that the case-law cited in paragraph 85 above may be applied only in relation to the measures established by Book 4 of the Flemish Decree, referred to in paragraph 71 above, which alone are intended to compensate for the social obligation to which the subdividers and developers are subject.

87 As regards the conditions that must be satisfied for the measures in question to escape classification as State aid, it should be borne in mind that, first, the undertaking receiving such compensation must actually have public service obligations to discharge, and the obligations must be clearly defined (Altmark Trans and Regierungspräsidium Magdeburg, paragraph 89).

88 In that regard, on account in particular of the wide discretion enjoyed by the Member States, it is not inconceivable that the social obligation may be regarded as a ‘public service’. In that context, the fact, alluded to by the referring court, that the social obligation does not directly benefit individuals – the applicants for social housing – but rather the social housing companies, is irrelevant with regard to the classification of the service in question.

89 Second, the parameters on the basis of which the compensation is calculated must be established in advance in an objective and transparent manner, to avoid it conferring an economic advantage which may favour the recipient undertaking over competing undertakings (Altmark Trans and Regierungspräsidium Magdeburg, paragraph 90).

90 In that regard, as the Advocate General has noted in point 53 of his Opinion, it appears that while the provisions of the Flemish Decree make it possible to identify the beneficiaries of the measures established by that decree, they do not however make it possible to identify, in a sufficiently objective and transparent manner, the parameters on the basis of which such compensation is calculated.

91 Third, the compensation paid cannot exceed what is necessary to cover all or part of the costs incurred in the discharge of public service obligations, taking into account the relevant receipts and a reasonable profit for discharging those obligations (Altmark Trans and Regierungspräsidium Magdeburg, paragraph 92).

92 Fourth, the compensation must be determined on the basis of an analysis of the costs which a typical undertaking, well run and adequately provided with the requisite means so as to be able to meet the necessary public service requirements, would have incurred in discharging those obligations, taking into account the relevant receipts and a reasonable profit for discharging the obligations (Altmark Trans and Regierungspräsidium Magdeburg, paragraph 93).

93 The examination of the two latter conditions requires an appraisal of the facts in the main proceedings.

94 However, even if the Court had before it the information necessary to enable it to make such an appraisal, which is not the case here, it must be recalled that the Court has no jurisdiction to give a ruling on the facts in an individual case or to apply the rules of EU law which it has interpreted to national measures or situations, since those questions are matters for the exclusive jurisdiction of the national court (see Servizi Ausiliari Dottori Commercialisti, paragraph 69 and the case-law cited).

95 The Constitutional Court must therefore assess, in the light of the guidance on interpretation set out above, whether the measures at issue in the case in the main proceedings should be classified as State aid within the meaning of Article 107(1) TFEU.

96 If the referring court were to conclude that the measures compensating for the social obligation to which subdividers and developers are subject should be classified as State aid, it also asks the Court whether those measures may be exempt, pursuant to the SGEI Decision, from the obligation to notify the Commission under Article 108(3) TFEU.

97 In that regard, it should be borne in mind that, in accordance with Article 2(1)(b) of the SGEI Decision, that decision applies to inter alia State aid in the form of public service compensation granted to social housing undertakings carrying out activities qualified as services of economic interest by the Member State concerned.

98 As stated in recital 7 to the SGEI Decision, Member States have a wide margin of discretion with regard to the definition of services that could be classified as being services of general economic interest.

99 Article 3 of the SGEI Decision states that State aid in the form of public service compensation granted to undertakings responsible for the operation of such services of general economic interest is compatible with the common market and exempt from the obligation of prior notification provided that it meets the conditions laid down in Articles 4 to 6 of that decision.

100 As the Advocate General has noted in point 61 of his Opinion, those conditions are based on the conditions set out in Altmark Trans and Regierungspräsidium Magdeburg, in particular the first three conditions, on compliance with which the Court does not have jurisdiction to rule in the present judgment, as stated in paragraph 94 above.

101 Consequently, in order to establish whether the exception to the requirement for notification of the Commission, as provided for in the SGEI Decision, is applicable in circumstances such as those in the main proceedings, the referring court must verify whether those conditions are met with regard to the measures established by Book 4 of the Flemish Decree, referred to in paragraph 71 above.

102 The answer to the first question in Case C-203/11 is therefore that the tax incentives and subsidy mechanisms provided for in the Flemish Decree are liable to be classified as State aid within the meaning of Article 107(1) TFEU. It is for the referring court to determine whether the conditions relating to the existence of State aid are met and, if so, to ascertain whether, as regards the measures established in Book 4 of the Flemish Decree whereby compensation is provided for the social obligation to which subdividers and developers are subject, the SGEI Decision is nevertheless applicable to such measures.

The third to eighth questions in Case C-203/11

103 By these questions, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Directive 2006/123 is applicable in circumstances such as those in the main proceedings and, if so, it asks the Court to interpret several provisions of that directive.

104 In order to reply to these questions, it should be noted that, as stated in recital 9 to Directive 2006/123, that directive does not apply to, inter alia, ‘requirements, such as … rules concerning the development or use of land, town and country planning, building standards …’.

105 In addition, under Article 2(2)(j) of Directive 2006/123, that directive does not apply to services relating to social housing or to persons permanently or temporarily in need which are provided by the State or by providers mandated by the State.

106 As stated in paragraphs 50 and 51 above, the objectives of the Flemish Decree relate to land planning and social housing.

107 In those circumstances, the Court finds that Directive 2006/123 is not applicable to legislation such as the Flemish Decree and that, consequently, there is no need to answer the third to eighth questions referred in Case C-203/11.

The eleventh question in Case C-203/11

108 By this question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether the development of social housing units which are subsequently to be sold at capped prices to a public social housing institution, or with substitution of that institution for the service provider which developed those units, is covered by the concept of 'public works contract' contained in Article 1(2)(b) of Directive 2004/18.

109 In order to answer that question, it should be borne in mind that, in accordance with Article 1(2)(b) of Directive 2004/18, read in conjunction with Article 1(2)(a) thereof, public works contracts result where four criteria are fulfilled, that is to say, they are contracts for pecuniary interest, concluded in writing, between an economic operator and a contracting authority, which must have as their object either the execution, or both the design and execution, of works related to one of the activities within the meaning of Annex I to that directive or a work, or the realisation, by whatever means, of a work corresponding to the requirements specified by the contracting authority.

110 As the Court does not have sufficient information to allow it to verify whether those criteria are met in the case in the main proceedings, it will thus confine itself in this judgment to providing the referring court with some elements which may be of use to it in carrying out that assessment.

111 So far as concerns, in particular, the existence of a contract concluded in writing, it follows from the order for reference that the Constitutional Court is uncertain as to whether that criterion has been met in the present case, inasmuch as the social obligation entailing the development of social housing units is imposed in the absence of an agreement concluded between the housing authorities and the economic operator concerned. According to the order for reference, the social obligation is imposed directly on subdividers and developers by the Flemish Decree and is applicable to them merely because they own the land in relation to which they have applied for the grant of a building or land subdivision authorisation.

112 In that regard, it should be borne in mind that, in order to establish that some kind of contractual relationship existed between an entity which could be regarded as a contracting authority and a subdivider or developer, the case-law of the Court requires, as the Advocate General has noted in point 86 of his Opinion, a development agreement to be concluded between the housing authorities and the economic operator in question for the purpose of determining the work to be undertaken by the economic operator and the terms and conditions relating thereto.

113 Where such an agreement has been concluded, the fact that the development of social housing units is a requirement imposed directly by national legislation and that the party contracting with the authorities is necessarily the owner of the building land in question does not preclude the existence of a contractual relationship between the authorities and the developer in question (see, to that effect, Case C-399/98 Ordine degli Architetti and Others [2001] ECR I-5409, paragraphs 69 and 71).

114 However, although it is true that Article 4.1.22, first subparagraph, of the Flemish Decree expressly requires an administration agreement to be concluded between the subdivider or developer and the social housing organisation, it is apparent from the order for reference that that agreement does not, in principle, regulate the relationship between the contracting authority and the economic operator concerned. In addition, such an agreement does not appear to concern the development of social housing units, but only the next stage which entails placing them on the market.

115 It is therefore for the referring court to determine, in the light of all the applicable legislation and the relevant circumstances of the case in the main proceedings, whether the development of social housing units at issue in the main proceedings is within the framework of a contractual relationship between a contracting authority and an economic operator and whether the criteria referred to in paragraph 109 above have been met.

116 In that context, it is also important to note that, on the one hand, the application of Directive 2004/18 to public works contracts is nevertheless subject to the condition that the estimated value of the contract reaches the threshold set out in Article 7(c) of that directive and that, on the other, there are, as is apparent from the settled case-law of the Court, two types of contracts entered into by a public entity that do not fall within the scope of EU public procurement law.

117 The first type of contracts are those concluded by a public entity with a person who is legally distinct from that entity where, at the same time, that entity exercises over the person concerned a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and where that person carries out the essential part of its activities with the entity or entities which control it (see Case C-159/11 Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce and Others [2012] ECR, paragraph 32 and the case-law cited).

118 The second type of contracts are those which establish cooperation between public entities with the aim of ensuring that a public task that they all have to perform is carried out. In those circumstances, the EU rules on public procurement are not applicable in so far as, in addition, such contracts are concluded exclusively by public entities, without the participation of a private party, no private provider of services is placed in a position of advantage vis-à-vis competitors and implementation of that cooperation is governed solely by considerations and requirements relating to the pursuit of objectives in the public interest (see Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce and Others, paragraphs 34 and 35).

119 In the light of all the foregoing considerations, the answer to the eleventh question in Case C-203/11 is that the development of social housing units which are subsequently to be sold at capped prices to a public social housing institution, or with substitution of that institution for the service provider which developed those units, is covered by the concept of ‘public works contract’ contained in Article 1(2)(b) of Directive 2004/18 where the criteria set out in that provision have been met, a matter which falls to be determined by the referring court.

Costs

120 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (First Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Articles 21 TFEU, 45 TFEU, 49 TFEU, 56 TFEU and 63 TFEU and Articles 22 and 24 of Directive 2004/38/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 29 April 2004 on the right of citizens of the Union and their family members to move and reside freely within the territory of the Member States amending Regulation (EEC) No 1612/68 and repealing Directives 64/221/EEC, 68/360/EEC, 72/194/EEC, 73/148/EEC, 75/34/EEC, 75/35/EEC, 90/364/EEC, 90/365/EEC and 93/96/EEC preclude legislation, such as Book 5 of the Decree of the Flemish Region of 27 March 2009 on land and real estate policy, which makes the transfer of immovable property in the target communes designated by the Vlaamse Regering subject to verification, by a provincial assessment committee, that there exists a ‘sufficient connection’ between the prospective buyer or tenant and those communes.

2. Article 63 TFEU must be interpreted as not precluding legislation such as Book 4 of the Decree of the Flemish Region, according to which a ‘social obligation’ is imposed on some economic operators when a building or land subdivision authorisation is granted, in so far as the referring court finds that that legislation is necessary and appropriate to attain the objective of guaranteeing sufficient housing for the low-income or otherwise disadvantaged sections of the local population.

3. The tax incentives and subsidy mechanisms provided for in the Flemish Decree are liable to be classified as State aid within the meaning of Article 107(1) TFEU. It is for the referring court to determine whether the conditions relating to the existence of State aid are met and, if so, to ascertain whether, as regards the measures established in Book 4 of the Flemish Decree whereby compensation is provided for the social obligation to which subdividers and developers are subject, Commission Decision 2005/842/EC of 28 November 2005 on the application of Article 86(2) [EC] to State aid in the form of public service compensation granted to certain undertakings entrusted with the operation of services of general economic interest is nevertheless applicable to such measures.

4. The development of social housing units which are subsequently to be sold at capped prices to a public social housing institution, or with substitution of that institution for the service provider which developed those units, is covered by the concept of 'public works contract' contained in Article 1(2)(b) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, as amended by Regulation (EC) No 596/2009 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 18 June 2009, where the criteria set out in that provision have been met, a matter which falls to be determined by the referring court.

I – Introduction

1. In the present cases, the Court has been called upon to rule on the interpretation of several articles of primary law and several provisions of secondary law of the European Union. The articles of primary law in question are Articles 21 TFEU, 45 TFEU, 49 TFEU, 56 TFEU, 63 TFEU, 107 TFEU and 108 TFEU. The provisions of secondary law concerning which the questions have been referred are Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, (2) Directive 2004/38/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 29 April 2004 on the right of citizens of the Union and their family members to move and reside freely within the territory of the Member States amending Regulation (EEC) No 1612/68 and repealing Directives 64/221/EEC, 68/360/EEC, 72/194/EEC, 73/148/EEC, 75/34/EEC, 75/35/EEC, 90/364/EEC, 90/365/EEC and 93/96/EEC, (3) Directive 2006/123/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 12 December 2006 on services in the internal market, (4) and Commission Decision 2005/842/EC of 28 November 2005 on the application of Article 86(2) of the EC Treaty to State aid in the form of public service compensation granted to certain undertakings entrusted with the operation of services of general economic interest. (5)

2. The Court's answer should assist the Cour constitutionnelle/Grondwettelijk Hof (Constitutional Court, Belgium), which referred the questions for a preliminary ruling, in deciding on the actions for annulment of several provisions of the Decree of the Flemish Region of 27 March 2009 on land and real estate policy ('the land and real estate decree').

3. The applicants in the main proceedings in Case C-197/11 draw attention to the provisions of the land and real estate decree which link the transfer of land and of buildings constructed thereon in certain Flemish communes to the condition that there exists a sufficient connection between the prospective buyer or tenant and the relevant commune, which would limit the possibility of freely disposing of the immovable property.

4. The applicants in the main proceedings in Case C-203/11 consider that the ground for annulment of the land and real estate decree lies not only in the condition as to the existence of a sufficient connection between the prospective buyer or tenant and the relevant commune, but also in the social obligation to which persons dividing areas of land into plots (subdividers) and developers are subject and in the tax incentives and subsidy mechanisms which partially compensate for that social obligation.

II – Legal context

A – European Union law

1. Directive 2004/18

5. Article 1 of Directive 2004/18, entitled ‘Definitions’, provides:

‘1. For the purposes of this Directive, the definitions set out in paragraphs 2 to 15 shall apply.

2. (a) “Public contracts” are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services within the meaning of this Directive.

(b) “Public works contracts” are public contracts having as their object either the execution, or both the design and execution, of works related to one of the activities within the meaning of Annex I or a work, or the realisation, by whatever means, of a work corresponding to the requirements specified by the contracting authority. A “work” means the outcome of building or civil engineering works taken as a whole which is sufficient of itself to fulfil an economic or technical function.

2. Directive 2004/38

6. Article 22 of Directive 2004/38, entitled ‘Territorial scope’, is worded as follows:

‘The right of residence and the right of permanent residence shall cover the whole territory of the host Member State. Member States may impose territorial restrictions on the right of residence and the right of permanent residence only where the same restrictions apply to their own nationals.’

7. Article 24 of that directive, entitled ‘Equal treatment’, provides in paragraph 1:

‘Subject to such specific provisions as are expressly provided for in the Treaty and secondary law, all Union citizens residing on the basis of this Directive in the territory of the host Member State shall enjoy equal treatment with the nationals of that Member State within the scope of the Treaty. The benefit of this right shall be extended to family members who are not nationals of a Member State and who have the right of residence or permanent residence.’

3. Decision 2005/842

8. Article 1 of Decision 2005/842, entitled ‘Subject-matter’, provides:

‘This Decision sets out the conditions under which State aid in the form of public service compensation granted to certain undertakings entrusted with the operation of services of general economic interest is to be regarded as compatible with the common market and exempt from the requirement of notification laid down in Article 88(3) of the Treaty.’

9. Article 2 of that decision, entitled ‘Scope’, provides in paragraph 1:

‘This Decision applies to State aid in the form of public service compensation granted to undertakings in connection with services of general economic interest as referred to in Article 86(2) of the Treaty which falls within one of the following categories:

(b) public service compensation granted to hospitals and social housing undertakings carrying out activities qualified as services of general economic interest by the Member State concerned;

10. Under Article 3 of Decision 2005/842, entitled ‘Compatibility and exemption from notification’:

‘State aid in the form of public service compensation that meets the conditions laid down in this Decision shall be compatible with the common market and shall be exempt from the obligation of prior notification provided for in Article 88(3) of the Treaty, without prejudice to the application of stricter provisions relating to public service obligations contained in sectoral Community legislation.’

B – Belgian law

11. Book 4 of the land and real estate decree, on ‘Measures concerning affordable housing’, contains, in Chapter 3, entitled ‘Social obligations’, Article 4.1.16, according to which:

‘(1) Where a land subdivision project or building project is subject to a rule as defined under Chapter 2, Section 2, a social obligation is linked by operation of law to a land subdivision authorisation or, as the case may be, the planning permission.

A social obligation … shall require a subdivider or developer to take steps to ensure delivery of a supply of social housing units consistent with the percentage applicable to the land subdivision or building project.’

12. Article 4.1.17 of the land and real estate decree provides that:

‘The subdivider or developer shall have the option of discharging a social obligation in one of the following ways:

1. in kind, in accordance with Articles 4.1.20 to 4.1.24;

2. by the sale to a social housing organisation of the land required for the prescribed supply of social housing, in accordance with Article 4.1.25;

3. by the leasing to a social rental agency of housing developed in the context of a land subdivision or building project, in accordance with Article 4.1.26;

4. by a combination of points 1, 2 and/or 3.’

13. Under Article 4.1.19 of the land and real estate decree:

‘The subdivider or developer may discharge in whole or in part a social obligation through payment of a social contribution to the commune in which the land subdivision project or building project is developed. The social contribution shall be calculated by multiplying the number of social housing units or social lots which are in principle to be developed by EUR 50 000 and by indexing that amount on the basis of the ABEX index, the reference index being that of December 2008.

14. The land and real estate decree lays down, for the benefit of private undertakings discharging the ‘social obligation’ in kind, the following tax incentives and subsidy mechanisms: the application of a reduced rate of value added tax and of a reduced rate of stamp duty (Article 4.1.20(3), second subparagraph; infrastructure subsidies (Article 4.1.23), and a purchase guarantee for the housing built (Article 4.1.21).

15. Moreover, Book 3 of the land and real estate decree, entitled, ‘Activation of land and buildings’, provides for subsidies granted irrespective of whether any ‘social obligation’ is discharged. In particular, these are subsidies for ‘activation projects’ (Article 3.1.2 of that decree), a reduction in the tax on natural persons obtained on conclusion of renovation agreements (Article 3.1.3 et seq. of that decree) and a flat-rate reduction of the taxable amount for stamp duty (Article 3.1.10 of that decree).

16. Article 5.1.1 of the land and real estate decree, which forms part of Book 5 of the decree, entitled ‘Living in your own region’, provides:

‘The Flemish Government shall draw up every three years and for the first time during the calendar month in which this Decree enters into force a list of the communes which satisfy the two conditions set out below on the basis of the most recent statistics:

1. the commune is among the 40 per cent of Flemish communes in which the average price of land is highest per square metre;

2. the commune is among:

(a) either the 25 per cent of Flemish communes having the highest level of internal migration; or

(b) the 10 per cent of Flemish communes having the highest level of external migration.

The list, referred to in the first paragraph, shall be published in the Moniteur Belge/Belgisch Staatsblad.

17. Article 5.2.1 of the land and real estate decree, which also forms part of Book 5, provides:

‘(1) A specific requirement applies to the transfer of land and buildings constructed thereon in regions which satisfy the two conditions referred to below:

1. the land and buildings constructed thereon are within a “residential extension area” laid down by the Royal Decree of 28 December 1972 on the presentation and implementation of draft plans and sector plans, as at the date of entry into force of this Decree;

2. the land and buildings constructed thereon are, when the private transfer instrument is signed, located in the target communes which appear on the most recent list published in the Moniteur belge/Belgisch Staatsblad, as prescribed in Article 5.1.1, it being understood that the private transfer instrument shall be regarded for the application of this provision as having being signed six months before the attribution of a fixed date, if more than six months have elapsed between the date of signature and the date of attribution of a fixed date.

The special transfer condition means that the land and buildings erected thereon may be transferred only to persons who have, in the opinion of a provincial assessment committee, a sufficient connection with the commune. “Transfer” shall mean sale, leasing for more than nine years, or grant of a right under a long-term lease or a building lease.

The special transfer condition shall expire, definitively and without any right of renewal, twenty years after the date of attribution of a fixed date to the initial transfer subject to the condition.

(2) For the purposes of [Article 5.2.1(1), second subparagraph] a person shall have a sufficient connection with the commune if he satisfies one or more of the following conditions:

1. he has been continuously resident in the commune or in a neighbouring commune for at least six years, provided that that commune is also included on the list prescribed in Article 5.1.1;

2. on the date of transfer, he carries out activities in the commune, provided that those activities occupy on average at least half a working week;

3. he has established a professional, family, social or economic connection to the commune as a result of a significant circumstance of long duration.

18. Under Article 5.1.1 of the land and real estate decree, an order of the Flemish Government of 19 June 2009 drew up the list of 69 communes to which the special condition governing the transfer of ownership for the purposes of Article 5.2.1 of the land and real estate decree applies (‘the target communes’).

III – Questions referred

19. The single question in Case C-197/11 is worded as follows:

‘Are Articles 21 TFEU, 45 TFEU, 49 TFEU, 56 TFEU and 63 TFEU and Articles 22 and 24 of Directive 2004/38 … to be interpreted as precluding the scheme established by Book 5 of the [land and real estate decree] … entitled “Living in your own region”, which, in certain communes referred to as “target communes”, makes the transfer of land and buildings thereon conditional upon the purchaser or the lessee demonstrating a sufficient connection with those communes for the purposes of Article 5.2.1(2) of the decree?’

20. The questions in Case C-203/11 are worded as follows:

‘(1) Should Articles 107 [TFEU] and 108 [TFEU], whether or not read in conjunction with … Decision 2005/842 …, be interpreted as requiring that the measures contained in Articles 3.1.3, 3.1.10, 4.1.20(3)[, second subparagraph], 4.1.21 and 4.1.23 of the [land and real estate decree] should be notified to the European Commission before the adoption or entry into force of those provisions?

(2) Should a scheme which by operation of law imposes on private actors whose land subdivision or building projects are of a certain minimum size a “social obligation” amounting to a percentage of a minimum of 10% and a maximum of 20% of that land subdivision or that building project, which can be performed in kind or by the payment of a sum of [EUR] 50 000 for each social lot or dwelling not realised, be appraised against the freedom of establishment, against the freedom to provide services or against the free movement of capital, or should it be classified as a complex scheme which should be appraised against each of those freedoms?

(3) Having regard to Article 2(2)(a) and (j) thereof, is Directive 2006/123 … applicable to a compulsory contribution by private actors to the delivery of social houses and apartments, which is imposed by operation of law as a “social obligation” linked to every building or land subdivision authorisation sought in respect of a project of a minimum size as determined by law, where the social housing units delivered are bought at predetermined capped prices by social housing companies to be rented out to a broad category of individuals, or, by substitution, are sold by the social housing company to individuals belonging to the same category?

(4) If the third question referred is answered in the affirmative, should the concept of “requirement to be evaluated” in Article 15 of Directive 2006/123 … be interpreted as meaning that it covers an obligation on private actors to contribute, in addition to, or as part of their usual activity, to the construction of social housing, and to transfer the units developed at capped prices to semi-public authorities, or through substitution of the latter, even though those private actors then have no right of initiative in the social housing market?

(5) If the third question referred is answered in the affirmative, should the national court apply a penalty, and if so, what penalty, to:

(a) the finding that a new requirement, subjected to evaluation in accordance with Article 15 of Directive 2006/123 …, was not specifically evaluated in accordance with Article 15(6) of that directive;

(b) the finding that no notification of that new requirement was given in accordance with Article 15(7) of that directive?

(6) If the third question referred is answered in the affirmative, should the concept of "prohibited requirement" in Article 14 of Directive 2006/123 … be interpreted as precluding a national scheme, in the cases described in that article, not only if it makes access to a service activity or the exercise of it subject to compliance with a requirement, but also if that scheme merely provides that non-compliance with that requirement will cause the financial compensation for the performance of a service prescribed by law to lapse, and that the financial guarantee supplied in regard to the performance of the service will not be reimbursed?

(7) If the third question referred is answered in the affirmative, should the concept of "competing operators" in Article 14(6) of Directive 2006/123 … be interpreted as meaning that it is also applicable to a public institution whose mandates can partially interfere with those of the service providers, if it takes the decisions referred to in Article 14(6) of that directive and it is also obliged, as the final step in a cascade system, to buy the social housing units developed by a service provider in the performance of the "social obligation" imposed on him?

(8) (a) If the third question referred is answered in the affirmative, should the concept "authorisation scheme" in Article 4(6) of Directive 2006/123 … be interpreted to mean that it is applicable to certificates issued by a public institution after the initial building or land subdivision authorisation has already been given, and which are necessary in order to qualify for certain of the compensations for the performance of a "social obligation" which was linked by law to the original authorisation and which are also necessary in order to claim the reimbursement of the financial guarantee imposed on the service provider in favour of the public institution?

(b) If the third question referred is answered in the affirmative, should the concept of "authorisation scheme" in Article 4(6) of Directive 2006/123 … be interpreted to mean that it is applicable to an agreement which a private actor concludes with a public institution pursuant to a legal rule in the context of the substitution of the public institution in respect of the sale of a social housing unit developed by the private actor in the performance, in kind, of a "social obligation" which is linked by law to a building or land subdivision authorisation, taking account of the fact that the conclusion of that agreement is a condition for the executability of the authorisation?

(9) Should Articles 49 [TFEU] and 56 [TFEU] be interpreted as precluding a scheme whereby, when a building or land subdivision authorisation is granted in respect of a project of a certain minimum size, it is linked by operation of law to a "social obligation" entailing the delivery of social housing units, amounting to a certain percentage of the project, which are subsequently to be sold at capped prices to a public institution, or with substitution by it?

(10) Should Article 63 [TFEU] be interpreted as precluding a scheme whereby, when a building or land subdivision authorisation is granted in respect of a project of a certain minimum size, it is linked by operation of law to a "social obligation" entailing the development of social housing units, amounting to a certain percentage of the project, which are subsequently to be sold at capped prices to a public institution, or with substitution by it?

(11) Should the concept of "public works contracts" in Article 1(2)(b) of Directive 2004/18 … be interpreted to mean that it is applicable to a scheme whereby, when a building or land subdivision authorisation is granted in respect of a project of a certain minimum size, it is linked by operation of law to a "social obligation" entailing the development of social housing units, amounting to a certain percentage of the project, which are subsequently to be sold at capped prices to a public institution, or with substitution by it?

(12) Should Articles 21 [TFEU], 45 [TFEU], 49 [TFEU], 56 [TFEU] and 63 [TFEU] and Articles 22 and 24 of Directive 2004/38 … be interpreted as precluding the scheme introduced by Book 5 of the [land and real estate decree], entitled "Living in your own region"), namely the scheme whereby in certain so-called "target communes" the transfer of land and any buildings constructed thereon is made subject to the buyer or the tenant being able to demonstrate a sufficient connection with those communes within the meaning of Article 5.2.1(2) of that decree?'

IV – Assessment

A – The single question in Case C-197/11 and the twelfth question in Case C-203/11

21. The single question in Case C-197/11 is identical to the twelfth question in Case C-203/11 and is concerned with whether the provisions of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union which prohibit restrictions on fundamental freedoms and Articles 22 and 24 of Directive 2004/38 preclude legislation of a Member State which makes the transfer of immovable property, in the target communes, that is to say, in the communes in which the average price of land is highest per square metre and in which internal or external migration is highest, subject to the condition that there exists a sufficient connection between the prospective buyer or tenant and the relevant commune.

22. With regard to this question, the Flemish Government draws attention to the fact that the disputes before the referring court are concerned with a purely internal situation, since all the applicants in the main proceedings are either established or resident in Belgium.

23. In that regard, it should be recognised that the disputes in the main proceedings contain no cross-border elements. Nevertheless, it must not be forgotten that the questions referred were raised in the specific proceedings before the referring court. That is to say, proceedings for the annulment of a legislative measure of national law which applies both to Belgian nationals and to those of other Member States. It is clear that the decision of the referring court in such a procedure will have erga omnes effects, including on nationals of other Member States.

24. The applicants in the main proceedings rely on European Union (EU) law and the Court is not in a position to assess whether the referring court, in proceedings for annulment, is able to review the legislative measure of national law at issue not only in relation to national law but also in relation to EU law. In the present cases, I am of the view that the Court should have trust in the referring court inasmuch as the question referred is necessary for the referring court to be able to deliver judgment (6) and, therefore, give the requested interpretation of the Treaty provisions on the fundamental freedoms of the internal market. (7)

25. The referring court regards the condition as to the existence of a sufficient connection with the target commune as a restriction on fundamental freedoms.

26. I concur with that view. Within the meaning of the case-law, access to housing and to other immovable property is a condition for the exercise of the fundamental freedoms. (8) The condition as to a sufficient connection with the target commune means, in reality, a prohibition imposed on certain persons, that is to say, those who do not satisfy that condition, on buying or leasing for more than nine years land and the buildings constructed thereon. There is no doubt that that condition is such as to deter citizens of the Union from exercising their fundamental freedoms enshrined in the Treaty.

27. I am of the view that the fact that the condition as to the existence of a sufficient connection with the target commune applies solely in a number of communes, which is presently 69, and that its application is limited to certain parts of those communes, is irrelevant to the issue of whether or not that condition represents a restriction on fundamental freedoms. The limited scope of the condition as to the existence of a sufficient connection with the target commune may be taken into consideration in the context of assessing the justification of that restriction on fundamental freedoms.

28. According to well-established case-law, national measures which are liable to hinder or make less attractive the exercise of fundamental freedoms guaranteed by the Treaty may nevertheless be allowed provided that they pursue an objective in the public interest, are appropriate for attaining that objective and do not go beyond what is necessary to attain the objective pursued. (9)

29. Accordingly, it is appropriate to examine, on the one hand, whether the land and real estate decree introducing the condition as to the existence of a sufficient connection with the target commune pursues an objective in the public interest and, on the other hand, whether the condition as to the existence of a sufficient connection with the target commune is appropriate for attaining the objective identified and whether that measure goes beyond what is necessary to attain the objective pursued.

30. As regards the objective pursued by the land and real estate decree, the referring court, on the basis of the travaux préparatoires relating to the land and real estate decree, refers to the objective of meeting the accommodation requirements of the endogenous population. It raises itself a question as to whether that objective can be regarded as an overriding reason in the public interest with a view to justifying a restriction on fundamental freedoms.

31. With a view to understanding better the objective of the land and real estate decree, the referring court cites its travaux préparatoires, which explain that 'the high land prices in some Flemish communes leads to gentrification. That finding means that less affluent population groups are excluded from the market due to the arrival of financially stronger population groups from other communes. The less affluent population groups are not only socially weak individuals but often also young families or single persons who have many expenses, but are not yet in a position to build up sufficient capital'.

32. The Flemish Government states that the national rules at issue are intended primarily to encourage housing for the endogenous population in residential extension areas, which the legislature passing the decree deemed necessary in order to guarantee the right to adequate housing and, by extension, social cohesion, by promoting regional planning and by not allowing the social and economic fabric to unravel.

33. If the land and real estate decree actually had the aim of encouraging residency by the less affluent endogenous population in the target communes, I am of the opinion that such an objective could be regarded as a social objective linked to regional planning policy. The Court has already ruled that such an objective constitutes an overriding reason in the public interest. (10)

34. However, it must be borne in mind that there are also other opinions on the objective pursued by the land and real estate decree. To that effect, the Government of the French Community argues that the actual objective of the decree is not to limit the effects of gentrification but rather to preserve the Flemish nature of the population of the target communes. It is clear that such an objective cannot be regarded as an overriding reason in the public interest. In that regard, I would like to point out that it is for the referring court to determine the precise objective of the land and real estate decree.

35. I will now examine whether the condition as to the existence of a sufficient connection with the target commune is appropriate for attaining the objective of meeting the accommodation requirements of the less affluent endogenous population and whether that measure goes beyond what is necessary to attain that objective.

36. Article 5.2.1(2) of the land and real estate decree sets out three conditions at least one of which must be met if the requirement for a sufficient connection with the target commune is to be met. The first condition is the requirement that a person to whom the immovable property is to be transferred has been resident in the target commune for at least six years before the transfer. In accordance with the second condition, the prospective buyer or tenant should, at the date of the transfer, carry out activities in the commune concerned. The third condition requires the prospective buyer or tenant to have a professional, family, social or economic connection with the commune in question as a result of a significant circumstance of long duration. It is the provincial evaluation committee which evaluates whether the prospective buyer or tenant of the immovable property meets one or more of the conditions set out.

37. It is noteworthy that none of those conditions reflects socio-economic aspects related to the objective of protecting the less affluent endogenous population on the property market. The conditions in question favour not only the less affluent endogenous population but also a section of the endogenous population which would have sufficient means and, therefore, would have no need of protection on the property market.

38. As I have already stated, the requirement as to a sufficient connection with the target commune means, in reality, prohibiting some people, that is to say, those who do not fulfil that condition, from buying or renting for more than nine years land and the buildings constructed thereon. I concur with the view put forward by the representative of the applicants in the main proceedings in Case C-197/11 in its written observations, that is to say, that other measures could meet the objective pursued by the land and real estate decree without necessarily resulting in a prohibition on purchasing or leasing by other persons. There could be, for example, subsidies for purchase, price regulation in target communes or measures adopted by the authorities to assist the protected endogenous population.

39. It follows from the foregoing that the condition as to the existence of a sufficient connection between the prospective buyer or tenant of the immovable property and the target commune, which provides (i) that the prospective buyer or tenant must reside in the target commune for at least six years before the transfer, or (ii) that the prospective buyer or tenant must carry out activities in the commune, or (iii) that the prospective buyer or tenant must have a professional, family, social or economic connection as a result of a significant circumstance of long duration, does not constitute a measure which is appropriate for attaining the objective of meeting the property needs of the less affluent endogenous population. Even assuming that the condition as to the existence of a sufficient connection on the part of the prospective buyer or tenant of the immovable property might be appropriate for attaining the objective pursued by the land and real estate decree, that measure goes beyond what is necessary to attain the objective pursued.

40. As regards Articles 22 and 24 of Directive 2004/38, which aim to facilitate the exercise of the primary and individual right to move and reside freely within the territory of the Member States conferred directly on Union citizens by the Treaty and which aim in particular to strengthen that right, (11) I have doubts as to the need to examine the national legislation at issue in the light of those provisions, given that they contain no new specific reasons justifying a restriction on the right to move and reside freely within the territory of the Member States. As regards Article 24 of Directive 2004/38, it is a specific expression of the general prohibition on discrimination provided for in Article 18 TFEU.

41. With regard to Article 22 of Directive 2004/38, that article defines the territorial scope of the right to move and reside freely within the territory of the Member States. In that regard, certain doubts may be raised concerning the second sentence of that article, in accordance with which ‘Member States may impose territorial restrictions on the right of residence and the right of permanent residence only where the same restrictions apply to their own nationals’. However, it cannot be inferred from that that territorial limitations are in general allowed provided that they apply also to nationals of the host Member State and that, accordingly, that provision introduces a new ground justifying a restriction on the right conferred on citizens of the Union by the Treaty. Indeed, as the Commission rightly claimed, the second sentence of Article 22 of Directive 2004/38 contains a supplementary condition which a restriction on the right of residence and the right of permanent residence must satisfy in order that it may be justified on grounds of public policy, public security or public health within the meaning of Article 27 of Directive 2004/38.

42. In view of the foregoing observations, I propose that the Court should answer that Articles 21 TFEU, 45 TFEU, 56 TFEU and 63 TFEU must be interpreted as meaning that they preclude national rules which make, in some communes, the transfer of land and buildings constructed thereon subject to the buyer or the tenant being able to demonstrate a sufficient connection with those communes where the existence of that connection is evaluated by reference to the following alternative conditions:

– the requirement that a person to whom the immovable property is to be transferred has been resident in the relevant commune for at least six years before the transfer;

– the requirement that the prospective buyer or tenant carries out, at the date of the transfer, activities in the commune; and

– the existence of a professional, family, social or economic connection as a result of a significant circumstance of long duration.

B – The first question in Case C-203/11

43. This question relates to the tax incentives and subsidy mechanisms provided for by the land and real estate decree. The measures at issue can be divided into two groups having separate aims. The measures forming part of the first group aim to reactivate the use of certain lands and buildings. They are the tax reduction granted to a lender who concludes a renewal agreement, referred to in Article 3.1.3 of the land and property decree, and the reduction of the tax base for stamp duty, referred to in Article 3.1.10 of the land and property decree. (12) The measures forming part of the second group compensate for the social obligation to which subdividers and developers are subject. That group includes the reduced rate of value added tax on the sale of housing and the reduced stamp duty for the purchase of building land, referred to in the second subparagraph of Article 4.1.20(3) of the land and real estate decree, the infrastructure subsidies referred to in Article 4.1.23 of the land and real estate decree and the purchase guarantee by a social housing organisation of the social housing units developed, referred to in Article 4.1.21 of the land and real estate decree.

44. The referring court seeks to ascertain whether the measures at issue should be classified as State aid within the meaning of Article 107 TFEU and when, if so, they should be notified to the Commission or whether, in some circumstances, those measures are exempt from the requirement to notify State aid under Decision 2005/842.

1. Classification of the measures

45. As regards the classification of the measures at issue as State aid, the referring court rightly refers to the case-law of the Court which determines that State aid exists where the following conditions are fulfilled. First, there must be intervention by the State or through State resources. Secondly, the intervention must be liable to affect trade between Member States. Thirdly, it must confer an advantage on the recipient. Fourthly, it must distort or threaten to distort competition. (13)

46. It follows from the reasoning of the order for reference that the referring court has doubts concerning the second condition relating to the effect on intra-Community trade and concerning the third condition relating to the advantageous nature of the measures at issue.

47. Regarding the effect of the measures at issue on intra-Community trade, I should like to point out that it is for the referring court to assess, taking into consideration a number of matters of law or of fact relevant to the case in question, whether the specific measures are liable to affect intra-Community trade. I consider that the existing case-law provides a sufficient basis to enable the referring court to do so. (14)

48. For the purposes of that case-law, the referring court must examine whether the measures at issue strengthen the position of the recipient undertakings compared with other undertakings competing in intra-Community trade. (15) However, the recipient undertakings need not themselves be involved in intra-Community trade. Where a Member State grants aid to an undertaking, internal activity may be maintained or increased as a result, so that the opportunities for undertakings established in other Member States to penetrate the market in that Member State are thereby reduced. (16) Even aid of a relatively small amount may also be liable to affect trade between Member States, in particular where there is strong competition in the sector in question. (17) Finally, it must not be forgotten that it is not necessary to establish that the measures at issue have a real effect on intra-Community trade or that competition is actually being distorted, but only to examine whether those measures are liable to affect such trade and distort competition. (18)

49. With regard to the advantageous nature of the measures at issue, I understand that part of the question referred as seeking, in essence, to obtain clarification of the case-law (19) within the meaning of which, where a State measure must be regarded as compensation for the services provided by the recipient undertakings in order to discharge public service obligations, so that those undertakings do not enjoy a real financial advantage and the measure thus does not have the effect of putting them in a more favourable competitive position than competing undertakings, such a measure is not State aid within the meaning of EU law. (20) However, for particular measures to escape classification as State aid, four conditions, known as the 'Altmark conditions', must be satisfied.

50. Before analysing those conditions, it should be noted that the case-law cited can be applied only in relation to the measures compensating for the social obligation to which the subdividers and developers are subject. The Flemish Government has itself stated in its written observations that the social obligation imposed on subdividers and developers also constitutes a fair price which they must pay for the right to act under the authorisation and for the significant economic benefits resulting therefrom.

51. According to the first Altmark condition, the recipient undertaking must actually have public service obligations to discharge, and the obligations must be clearly defined. (21) It follows that it is necessary to consider whether the social obligation to which subdividers and developers are subject may be regarded as a public service obligation.

52. As the Flemish Government explained in its written observations, the social obligation is imposed on developers and subdividers in the context of a policy seeking to provide more equal access to social housing for groups of modest means and for socially disadvantaged groups, by means of a territorial allocation based on actual needs and not depending exclusively on the voluntary initiative and goodwill of operators. From that point of view, nothing prevents the social obligation defined by the land and real estate decree from being regarded as a public service obligation. The fact that that social obligation does not directly benefit individuals, the applicants for social housing, but the social housing companies (which are the embodiment of the public authorities) is irrelevant in that regard. As the German Government pointed out in its written observations, for it to be possible to make something available, the material basis must be created. The social housing companies are therefore involved only as administrative and technical intermediaries.

53. According to the second Altmark condition, the parameters on the basis of which the compensation is calculated must be established in advance in an objective and transparent manner. (22) That condition seems to be problematic in particular in relation to the infrastructure subsidies and the social housing purchase guarantee. Even if the national rules cited by the referring court make it possible to identify the beneficiaries of those measures, they do not, however, make it possible to identify the parameters on the basis of which such compensation is calculated. Nevertheless, the Flemish Government in its written observations describes the method for calculating such compensation. It is therefore for the referring court to determine whether the parameters used to calculate the compensation referred to by the Flemish Government satisfy the second Altmark condition.

54. According to the third Altmark condition, the compensation cannot exceed what is necessary to cover all or part of the costs incurred in the discharge of public service obligations. (23) It seems in this case that the measures compensating for the social obligation are not calculated by reference to the actual cost of discharging that obligation. For that reason, I consider that it is possible that the final cost of the combination of different measures compensating for the social obligation exceeds the amount of the costs related to discharging that obligation.

55. According to the fourth Altmark condition, where the undertaking which is to discharge public service obligations, in a specific case, is not chosen pursuant to a public procurement procedure which would allow for the selection of the tenderer capable of providing those services at the least cost to the community, the level of compensation needed must be determined on the basis of an analysis of the costs which a typical undertaking, well run and adequately provided with means of transport so as to be able to meet the necessary public service requirements, would have incurred in discharging those obligations, taking into account the relevant receipts and a reasonable profit for discharging the obligations. (24) In this case, it is clear that the beneficiaries of the measures compensating for the social obligation have not been selected pursuant to a public procurement procedure. However, it does not appear from the documents before the Court that an analysis required under the fourth condition has been carried out or that the measures at issue were determined on the basis of the expenses which would be incurred by a typical and properly administered undertaking in discharging the social obligation.

2. Moment at which State aid is notified to the Commission

56. Article 108(3) TFEU requires that the Commission is to be informed, in sufficient time to enable it to submit its comments, of any plans to grant or alter aid. If it considers that any such plan is not compatible with the internal market having regard to Article 107 TFEU, it must without delay initiate the procedure provided for in Article 108(2) TFEU. The Member State concerned must not put its proposed measures into effect until that procedure has resulted in a final decision.

57. According to the Court’s case-law, the obligation to notify new State aid is one of the fundamental features of the system of control put in place by the Treaty in the field of State aid. Under that system, Member States are under an obligation, first, to notify to the Commission each measure intended to grant new aid or alter aid for the purposes of Article 107(1) TFEU and, secondly, in accordance with Article 108(3) TFEU, not to implement such a measure until the Commission has taken a final decision on the measure. (25) The purpose served by the provision introduced by Article 108(3) TFEU is not a mere obligation to notify but an obligation of prior notification which, as such, necessarily implies the suspensory effect required by the final sentence of Article 108(3). (26)

58. In that regard, the referring court seeks to ascertain whether it is Article 4.1.23 of the land and real estate decree, providing for the infrastructure subsidies, or rather the implementing order of the Flemish Government, defining the conditions under which such subsidies may be granted, which should have been notified to the Commission, inasmuch as the infrastructure subsidies might be classified as State aid.

59. I consider that the answer is quite clear. The measure in question was already provided for by the land and real estate decree, even if the details were specified by the implementing order. For that reason, with a view to fulfilling one of the obligations under Article 108(3) TFEU, the draft land and real estate decree should have been notified to the Commission.

3. Exemption from the obligation to notify new State aid to the Commission

60. The referring court seeks to ascertain whether the measures compensating for the social obligation to which subdividers and developers are subject, assuming that such measures must be classified as State aid, may be exempt from the obligation to notify the Commission for the purposes of Decision 2005/842.

61. Article 3 of Decision 2005/842 declares State aid in the form of public service compensation that meets the conditions laid down by Articles 4 to 6 of that decision compatible with the common market and exempt from the obligation to notify. I am of the same opinion as the referring court, which considers that those conditions seem to be based on the first three Altmark conditions.

62. As has already been argued, it is my view that the third Altmark condition, in particular, is not satisfied in this case. That condition, to the effect that the compensation cannot exceed what is necessary to cover the costs incurred in the discharge of the public service obligations, is also contained in Article 5 of Decision 2005/842. It follows that, as the measures compensating for the social obligation must be classified as State aid, since they do not satisfy the third Altmark condition, they are even less able to benefit from the exemption from the obligation to notify the Commission within the meaning of Decision 2005/842.

63. In view of the foregoing observations, I propose that the Court should answer that Articles 107 TFEU and 108 TFEU, read in conjunction with Decision 2005/842, must be interpreted as meaning that they require that the measures contained in Articles 3.1.3, 3.1.10, 4.1.20(3), second subparagraph, 4.1.21 and 4.1.23 of the land and real estate decree be notified to the Commission prior to the adoption of those provisions provided that it is established that those measures are liable to affect trade between Member States and that they do not satisfy the Altmark conditions.

C – The second, ninth and tenth questions in Case C-203/11

64. This series of questions relates to a social obligation which, in accordance with Article 4.1.16 of the land and real estate decree, requires subdividers and developers to take steps to ensure that a supply of social housing units is delivered.

65. It seems that the referring court has no doubt as to the classification of a social obligation as a non-discriminatory restriction on fundamental freedoms. Its doubts concern the issue of determining, first, in the light of which fundamental freedom that social obligation must be reviewed and, secondly, whether a social obligation as a restriction on fundamental freedoms may be justified by an overriding reason in the public interest.

66. As a preliminary point, it should be noted that, as with regard to the single question in Case C-197/11 and with regard to the second question in Case C-203/11, the Flemish Government draws attention to the fact that the disputes before the referring court are concerned with a purely internal situation. In that regard, I refer to my previous considerations. (27)

67. As for the freedom in the light of which the scheme governing a social obligation should be reviewed, it is true that it is possible to identify the influence of a social obligation both on the freedom of establishment and on the freedom to provide services, as well as on the free movement of capital.

68. However, I share the Commission's view that, in the case of a social obligation, the free movement of capital prevails, since the restriction on the freedom of establishment and on the freedom to provide services is merely an inevitable consequence of the restriction on the free movement of capital.

69. The national rules provide that the social obligation may be discharged either in kind, that is to say, by delivering a social housing unit, or by the sale of land to a social housing organisation, or by renting the housing units delivered to a social rental agency or, lastly, through the payment of a social contribution. It should be recognised, as stated by the referring court, that such rules are likely to deter nationals of a Member State from investing in another Member State in the immovable property sector given the fact that they cannot freely use the land for the purposes for which they wished to acquire it. According to settled case-law, capital movements include investments in immovable property on the territory of a Member State by non-residents. In other words, the right to acquire, use or dispose of immovable property on the territory of another Member State generates capital movements when it is exercised. (28)

70. Even if a social obligation constitutes a restriction on the free movement of capital, it may be justified by an overriding reason in the public interest, provided that it is suitable for securing the attainment of the objective which it pursues and does not go beyond what is necessary for that purpose. (29)

71. Therefore, it is necessary to determine the objective of the rules at issue and to determine whether that objective can be regarded as an overriding reason in the public interest.

72. According to the Flemish Government, the rules imposing a social obligation on subdividers and developers address a real problem, more precisely a critical shortage of affordable housing. Accordingly, it seems that the social obligation is related to public housing policy in a Member State and to the financing of that policy, which the Court has already recognised as an overriding reason in the public interest. (30) However, it is for the referring court to establish the precise objective of the rules at issue.

73. It is also for the referring court to determine whether a social obligation satisfies the principle of proportionality, in other words, whether it is suitable for securing an increase in the supply of social housing and whether or not the established objective could be pursued by less restrictive measures with regard to the free movement of capital.

74. For the purposes of that assessment, the statistics from the Flemish authorities cited at the hearing by the representative of the applicants in the main proceedings in Case C-203/11 could be helpful. It follows from those statistics that the land and real estate decree introducing the social obligation for subdividers and developers actually has a rather negative impact on the social housing sector.

75. In view of the foregoing observations, I propose that the Court should answer that Article 63 TFEU must be interpreted as precluding a scheme whereby, when a building or land subdivision authorisation is granted in respect of a project of a certain minimum size, it is linked by operation of law to a 'social obligation' entailing the development of social housing units, amounting to a certain percentage of the project, which are subsequently to be sold at capped prices to a public institution, or with substitution by it, provided that it is established that that scheme does not satisfy the principle of proportionality.

D – The third, fourth, fifth, sixth, seventh and eighth questions in Case C-203/11

76. By this series of questions, the referring court seeks an interpretation of certain provisions of Directive 2006/123.

77. However, according to recital 9 in the preamble to Directive 2006/123, that directive applies neither to rules concerning the development or use of land nor to rules concerning town and country planning. Moreover Article 2(2)(j) of Directive 2006/123 expressly states that the directive is not to apply to social services relating to social housing.

78. I consider that the land and real estate decree amounts to rules concerning the development or use of land and rules concerning town and country planning.

79. For that reason, there is, to my mind, no need to answer the questions relating to Directive 2006/123.

E – The eleventh question in Case C-203/11

80. By this question, the referring court asks the Court to interpret the concept of 'public works contract' contained in Article 1(2)(b) of Directive 2004/18. More specifically, it seeks to ascertain whether a public works contract exists in the case of rules which make the granting of a building or land subdivision authorisation subject to a social obligation entailing the development of social housing units which are subsequently to be sold at capped prices to a public institution, or with substitution by it.

81. The land and real estate decree regards a social obligation as a condition for the granting of a building or land subdivision authorisation. Even though Article 4.1.17 of that decree sets out several options for discharging that obligation, the eleventh question is concerned solely with performance of the social obligation in kind, that is to say, performance in the form of the development of social housing units.

82. It should be recalled that the definition of a public works contract is a matter of EU law. (31) For the purposes of Article 1(2)(a) and (b) of Directive 2004/18, four characteristics are required for it to be possible to speak of a public works contract. First, it must be established that there is a contract concluded in writing. Secondly, it must be a contract for pecuniary interest. Thirdly, the parties to a contract must be one or more economic operators, on the one hand, and one or more contracting authorities, on the other hand. Fourthly, the object of a contract must be either the execution, or both the design and execution, of works related to one of the activities within the meaning of Annex I to the directive or a work, or the realisation, by whatever means, of a work corresponding to the requirements specified by the contracting authority.

83. I consider that, in the present case, the first of the above characteristics, namely the existence of a contract concluded in writing, is problematic, since the social obligation is imposed on subdividers and developers by the land and real estate decree. As the referring court noted, the national rules provide for an administration agreement concluded between the developer or subdivider and the social housing company. However, it states at the same time that that administration agreement is concerned solely with placing the social housing units already developed on the market and not with their development.

84. Even though it is for the referring court to ascertain whether, in this case, there was a contract concluded in writing, I am able to cite some elements arising from the case-law of the Court which may be of assistance.

85. First of all, I should like to draw attention to the judgment in Ordine degli Architetti and Others. (32) In it, the Court ruled that the fact that the public authorities are not free to choose the contractor cannot in itself justify non-application of Directive 2004/18, since that would ultimately preclude from Community competition the execution of works to which the directive would otherwise apply. (33) authorisation. However, it must not be forgotten that in the case giving rise to Ordine degli Architetti and Others, the Court emphasised the fact that a development agreement must always be concluded between the municipal authorities and the economic operator. In the present case, I understand the national rules as not providing for the conclusion of a contract with a view to discharging a social obligation. It is for the referring court to examine whether that is actually the case.

86. In the present case, the situation is similar, since the social obligation entailing the development of social housing units is linked by operation of law to a subdivision authorisation or a planning

87. I consider that it is relevant to refer to another finding set out in Ordine degli Architetti and Others. The Court stated therein that 'the basic aim of the Directive … is to open up public works contracts to competition. Exposure to Community competition in accordance with the procedures provided for by the Directive ensures that the public authorities cannot indulge in favouritism. (34)' In that regard, I entertain some doubts as to the issue of how the social obligation could favour subdividers and developers. The application in the main proceedings in Case C-203/11 shows that even the economic operators to which the social obligation applies consider that that obligation is detrimental to their situation. Similarly, the referring court itself has stated in the order for reference that a social obligation performed in kind always entails a loss for subdividers and developers.

88. The second judgment, to which I would also like to draw attention, is Asociación Profesional de Empresas de Reparto y Manipulado de Correspondencia. (35) The Court ruled in that judgment that, with a view to holding that there is no contract within the meaning of the rules relating to public procurement, the referring court should consider whether the economic operator is able to negotiate with the contracting authority the actual content of the services it has to provide and the tariffs to be applied to those services and whether, as regards non-reserved services, that operator can free itself from obligations arising under the cooperation agreement, by giving notice as provided for in that agreement. (36)

89. As in Ordine degli Architetti and Others and, in my view, unlike the present case, in Asociación Profesional de Empresas de Reparto y Manipulado de Correspondencia some type of contract was concluded between the public authorities and the private operator. More precisely, it was a cooperation agreement. The question arises whether such an agreement is actually a contract within the meaning of the rules on public procurement, since an economic operator has no opportunity to refuse to conclude such an agreement.

90. It follows from Asociación Profesional de Empresas de Reparto y Manipulado de Correspondencia that if the referring court were to conclude, in this case, that some kind of contractual relationship existed between an entity which could be regarded as a contracting authority and a subdivider or developer in relation to the social obligation, the referring court should examine whether or not the contractual freedom of a subdivider or developer has been restricted in that it was not able to negotiate the actual content of the services it has to provide and the tariffs to be applied to those services.

91. Based on the way in which the national rules at issue may be construed, I consider that it is primarily the ability to negotiate the price to be applied for the works carried out that is limited. In this case, the price of the works carried out is the sales price of a social housing unit to a social housing company. That price is capped by the national rules and does not therefore represent the market price.

92. Having regard to the foregoing, I am of the opinion that the answer to the eleventh question should be that the concept of 'public contract' in Article 1(2)(b) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that it is applicable to a scheme whereby, when a building or land subdivision authorisation is granted in respect of a project of a certain minimum size, it is linked by operation of law to a social obligation entailing the development of social housing units which are subsequently to be sold at capped prices to a public institution, or with substitution by it, provided that, first, those rules provide for the existence of a contract concluded between a contracting authority and an economic operator and that, secondly, an economic operator has a real opportunity to negotiate with the contracting authority the content of that contract and the price to be applied to the works carried out.

V – Conclusion

93. In the light of the foregoing considerations, I propose that the Court should give the following answers to the questions referred by the Cour constitutionnelle:

(1) Articles 21 TFEU, 45 TFEU, 56 TFEU and 63 TFEU must be interpreted as meaning that they preclude national rules which make, in some communes, the transfer of land and buildings constructed thereon subject to the buyer or the tenant being able to demonstrate a sufficient connection with those communes where the existence of that connection is evaluated by reference to the following alternative conditions:

– the requirement that a person to whom the immovable property is to be transferred has been resident in the relevant commune for at least six years before the transfer;

– the requirement that the prospective buyer or tenant carries out, at the date of the transfer, activities in the commune; and

– the existence of a professional, family, social or economic connection as a result of a significant circumstance of long duration.

(2) Articles 107 TFEU and 108 TFEU, read in conjunction with Commission Decision 2005/842/EC of 28 November 2005 on the application of Article 86(2) of the EC Treaty to State aid in the form of public service compensation granted to certain undertakings entrusted with the operation of services of general economic interest, must be interpreted as meaning that they require that the measures contained in Articles 3.1.3, 3.1.10, 4.1.20(3), second subparagraph, 4.1.21 and 4.1.23 of the Decree of the Flemish Region of 27 March 2009 on land and real estate policy be notified to the European Commission prior to the adoption of those provisions provided that it is established that those measures are liable to affect trade between Member States and that they do not satisfy the conditions set out in Case C-280/00 Altmark Trans and Regierungspräsidium Magdeburg [2003] ECR I-7747.

(3) Article 63 TFEU must be interpreted as precluding a scheme whereby, when a building or land subdivision authorisation is granted in respect of a project of a certain minimum size, it is linked by operation of law to a ‘social obligation’ entailing the development of social housing units, amounting to a certain percentage of the project, which are subsequently to be sold at capped prices to a public institution, or with substitution by it, provided that it is established that that scheme does not satisfy the principle of proportionality.

(4) The concept of ‘public contract’ in Article 1(2)(b) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts must be interpreted as meaning that it is applicable to a scheme whereby, when a building or land subdivision authorisation is granted in respect of a project of a certain minimum size, it is linked by operation of law to a social obligation entailing the development of social housing units which are subsequently to be sold at capped prices to a public institution, or with substitution by it, provided that, first, those rules provide for the existence of a contract concluded between a contracting authority and an economic operator and that, secondly, an economic operator has a real opportunity to negotiate with the contracting authority the content of that contract and the price to be applied to the works carried out.

19 – Nevertheless, I am obliged to point out in that regard that the referring court does not request an interpretation of the provisions of EU law, but rather the application to a specific case of the interpretation already given. This is evidenced by the detailed analysis of the relevant case-law contained in the order for reference. However, the Court has no jurisdiction either to give a ruling on the facts in an individual case or to apply to national measures or situations the rules of EU law which it has interpreted, since those questions are matters for the exclusive jurisdiction of the national court (Fallimento Traghetti del Mediterraneo, cited in footnote 13, paragraph 22).

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 2 May 2012,

Judgment

1 This reference for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 1(2)(a) and (d), Article 2 and Article 28 of, and of Categories 8 and 12 in Annex II A to, Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ L 134, p. 114), as amended by Commission Regulation (EC) No 1422/2007 of 4 December 2007 (OJ 2007 L 317, p. 34; 'Directive 2004/18').

2 The reference has been made in proceedings between the Azienda Sanitaria Locale di Lecce (Local Health Authority of Lecce; 'ASL') and the Università del Salento (University of Salento; 'the University'), on the one hand, and the Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce (Order of Architects of the Province of Lecce) and others, on the other hand, concerning the consultancy contract concluded between the ASL and the University ('the consultancy contract') and relating to the study and the evaluation of the seismic vulnerability of hospital structures in the province of Lecce.

Legal context

3 Pursuant to recital 2 in the preamble to Directive 2004/18:

'The award of contracts concluded in the Member States on behalf of the State, regional or local authorities and other entities governed by public law is subject to the respect of the principles of the Treaty and in particular to the principle of freedom of movement of goods, the principle of freedom of establishment and the principle of freedom to provide services and to the principles deriving therefrom, such as the principle of equal treatment, the principle of non-discrimination, the principle of mutual recognition, the principle of proportionality and the principle of transparency. However, for public contracts above a certain value, it is advisable to draw up provisions of Community coordination of national procedures for the award of such contracts which are based on these principles so as to ensure the effects of them and to guarantee the opening-up of public procurement to competition …'

4 Article 1 of Directive 2004/18 provides:

(2) (a) "Public contracts" are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services within the meaning of this Directive.

...

(d) "Public service contracts" are public contracts other than public works or supply contracts having as their object the provision of services referred to in Annex II.

...

(8) The terms "contractor", "supplier" and "service provider" mean any natural or legal person or public entity or group of such persons and/or entities which offers on the market, respectively, the execution of works and/or a work, products or services.

The term “economic operator” shall cover equally the concepts of contractor, supplier and service provider. It is used merely in the interest of simplification.

(9) “Contracting authorities” means the State, regional or local authorities, entities governed by public law, associations formed by one or several of such authorities or one or several of such entities governed by public law.

5 Under Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, ‘[c]ontracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way’.

6 Pursuant to Article 7(b) of Directive 2004/18, the directive applies inter alia to public service contracts awarded by contracting authorities other than the central governmental authorities listed in Annex IV to that directive, in so far as they are contracts which are not excluded in accordance with the exceptions referred to in that article and their value exclusive of value-added tax (VAT) is equal to or greater than EUR 206 000.

7 According to Article 9(1) and (2) of that directive, the calculation of the estimated value of a public contract is based on the total amount payable, net of VAT, as estimated by the contracting authority at the moment at which the contract notice is sent or, as the case may be, at the moment at which the contract awarding procedure commences.

8 Article 20 of Directive 2004/18 provides that contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex II A thereto are to be awarded in accordance with Articles 23 to 55 of the directive, and Article 28 of the directive states that ‘[i]n awarding their public contracts, contracting authorities are to apply the national procedures adjusted for the purposes of th[at] Directive’.

9 Annex II A to Directive 2004/18 contains inter alia the following categories of services:

– Category 8, concerning research and development services, except research and development services other than those where the benefits accrue exclusively to the contracting authority for its use in the conduct of its own affairs on condition that the service provided is wholly remunerated by the contracting authority;

– Category 12, concerning architectural services, engineering services and integrated engineering services, urban planning and landscape engineering services, related scientific and technical consulting services and technical testing and analysis services.

National law

10 Under Article 15(1) of Law No 241 of 7 August 1990 introducing new rules governing administrative procedure and relating to the right of access to administrative documents (nuove norme in materia di procedimento amministrativo e di diritto di accesso ai documenti amministrativi, GURI No 192 of 18 August 1990, p. 7), ‘public administrative authorities may at any time enter into agreements among themselves with a view to laying down rules governing cooperation in activities of common interest’.

11 Article 66 of the Decree of the President of the Republic No 382 of 11 July 1980 on the reorganisation of University education, concerning training and organisational and teaching methodology reforms (riordinamento della docenza universitaria, relativa fascia di formazione nonché sperimentazione organizzativa e didattica, standard supplement to GURI No 209 of 31 July 1980), provides:

‘Provided that the performance of their academic function of dissemination of knowledge is not thereby impaired, universities may carry out research and consultancy activities under contracts and agreements with public and private entities. The carrying out of those contracts and agreements shall, as a rule, be entrusted to [university] departments or, where such departments are not in place, to institutes or university clinics, or to individual full-time teachers.

The proceeds from the performance of the contracts and agreements referred to in the preceding paragraph shall be allocated in accordance with rules approved by the university's governing council on the basis of rules … laid down by the Ministry of Education.

The teaching and non-teaching staff cooperating in the provision of those services may be rewarded up to an annual sum not exceeding 30% of total remuneration. In each case, the sum so paid to staff may not exceed 50% of the overall proceeds from those services.

The rules referred to in the second paragraph shall determine the amount to be allocated for general expenditure incurred by the university and the criteria for the allocation to the staff of the sum referred to in the third paragraph. The remainder of the revenue shall be allocated to the purchase of teaching and research materials and to operating costs of departments, institutes or clinics which have carried out such contracts or agreements.

The expenditure incurred by the university in carrying out those services shall in any case be deducted beforehand from the proceeds of each service as allocated in accordance with the rules set out in the second paragraph.

The proceeds derived from the activities referred to in the preceding paragraph shall constitute revenue in the budget of the university.'

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred for a preliminary ruling

12 By decision of 7 October 2009, the Director-General of the ASL approved the specification for the university to carry out a study and evaluation of the seismic vulnerability of hospital structures in the Province of Lecce, in the light of the recent national legislation in relation to the safety of structures, in particular, of strategic buildings (hereafter, respectively, 'the specification' and 'the study').

13 In accordance with the specification, that study contains, in respect of each building concerned, the three following parts:

– identification of the structural typology of the materials used for construction and the methods of calculation adopted; brief verification of the state of affairs in the light of the project documentation made available;

– verification of the soundness of the structure; brief analysis of the overall seismic resistance of the building; where appropriate, on-site analysis of structural elements or subsystems that are significant for the purposes of identifying overall seismic resistance; and

– compilation of the results referred to in the previous indent, and drafting of technical data sheets on structural diagnosis; in particular: reports on the structural typology observed, on the materials and on the state of conservation of the structure, with particular reference to the aspects having a major effect on structural reactions in relation to the seismic risk of the site of the works; drawing up of technical data sheets for the classification of the seismic vulnerability of the hospitals; technical reports on the structural elements or subsystems identified as critical in relation to the verification of seismic vulnerability; preliminary suggestions and a brief description of works which may be needed to bring the buildings up to standard or to improve them, with regard to their seismic resistance, with particular reference to the advantages and limitations, in technical and economic terms, of the various possible technologies.

14 The consultancy contract of 22 October 2009 relating to the study project stipulates inter alia as follows:

– the maximum duration of that contract is laid down as sixteen months;

– the study project is to be entrusted to the technical constructions group, which may enlist the aid of highly qualified external collaborators;

– that project is to be carried out in the framework of close cooperation between the working groups set up by the ASL and by the University, in order to obtain the objectives set out in the third part of that project;

– academic responsibility is to be assigned to two persons appointed, respectively, by each party;

– ownership of all results produced by the experimental work is to lie with the ASL, which however undertakes to make express mention of the University Department in the event of publication of the results in a technical or academic context; the University has the right to use those results for publications or academic communications with ASL's approval;

– ASL is to pay the University an amount of EUR 200 000 exclusive of VAT for all the services, payable in four instalments. In the event, however, of early termination of the contract, the University is entitled to an amount dependent on the volume of work performed which corresponds to the expenditure incurred and the costs relating to the legal obligations assumed in the context of the implementation of the study project.

15 According to the file submitted to the Court, that sum of EUR 200 000 can be broken down as follows:

– acquisition and use of technical equipment: EUR 20 000;

– costs of staff missions: EUR 10 000;

– staff costs: EUR 144 000;

– general expenditure: EUR 26 000.

16 It is also apparent that the staff costs of EUR 143 999.58, rounded up to EUR 144 000, correspond to the following estimates:

– activation of three research grants of one year's duration: EUR 57 037.98;

– cost of an associate professor for 180 hours in 2009 (hourly cost of EUR 45.81) and for 641 hours in 2010 (hourly cost of EUR 48.93): EUR 39 609.93;

– cost of a senior researcher for 170 hours in 2009 (hourly cost EUR 25.91) and for 573 hours in 2010 (hourly cost EUR 32.23 euros): EUR 22 936.95;

– cost of a non-senior researcher for 170 hours in 2009 (hourly cost EUR 20.50) and for 584 hours in 2010 (hourly cost EUR 26.48): EUR 18 949.32;

– cost of a laboratory technician for 70 hours in 2009 (hourly cost EUR 20.48) and for 190 hours in 2010 (hourly cost EUR 21.22): EUR 5 465.40.

17 Various orders and professional associations and undertakings appealed against the decision approving the specification and against any preparatory measures related to or resulting from them before the Tribunale amministrativo regionale per la Puglia, sede di Lecce (Regional Administrative Court of Puglia, seat at Lecce), alleging inter alia the infringement of national and European Union public procurement legislation. By its judgment, that court upheld those appeals, considering that the study project constituted a contract for the provision of engineering services within the meaning of the Italian legislation.

18 In the appeals brought by them against that judgment, the ASL and the University argue in essence that, in accordance with Italian law, the consultancy contract constitutes a cooperation agreement between public administrations in respect of activities of general interest. The participation for pecuniary interest – but for remuneration limited to the costs incurred – of the University in such a contract falls under its institutional activities. There is in addition reliance on the fact that the study project is conferred on research bodies and the fact that it relates to research to be conducted by means of experiments and analyses to be carried out outside any standardised methodology or procedure codified or established in academic literature. The lawfulness of such cooperation agreements between public authorities under European Union law results from the case-law of the Court.

19 The referring court explains that the agreements between public authorities provided for in Article 15 of Law No 241 of 7 August 1990 aim to coordinate the action of various administrative bodies each of which pursues a particular public interest, and constitute a form of cooperation the function of which is to make management of public services as effective and economical as possible. Such an agreement may be concluded where a public institution intends to confer, in return for a pecuniary interest, the provision of a service on another public body and where that service falls within the tasks of the authority, in accordance with the institutional objectives of the entities which are parties to the agreement.

20 The Consiglio di Stato nevertheless raises the question whether the conclusion of an agreement between public authorities is not contrary to the principle of free competition where one of the authorities concerned can be regarded as an economic operator, a classification which encompasses any public body proposing services on the market, regardless of whether it has a primarily profit-making objective, whether it is structured as an undertaking or whether it has a continuous presence on the market. The referring court refers, in that regard, to Case C-305/08 CoNISMa [2009] ECR I-12129. From that perspective, provided that the University has the capacity to take part in a procurement procedure, the contracts concluded with it by contracting authorities fall within the scope of European Union public procurement rules where they relate, as in the case in the main proceedings, to research services which do not appear to be incompatible with the services mentioned in categories 8 and 12 of Annex II A to Directive 2004/18.

21 In those circumstances, the Consiglio di Stato decided to stay the proceedings and to refer to the Court the following question:

‘Does [Directive 2004/18] and, in particular, Article 1(2)(a) and (d), Article 2 and Article 28 of that directive and Categories 8 and 12 in Annex II[A] thereto, preclude national legislation which permits written agreements to be entered into between two contracting authorities for the study of the seismic vulnerability of hospital structures and its evaluation in the light of national regulations on the safety of structures and in particular of strategic buildings, for a consideration not exceeding the costs incurred in the performance of the service, where the authority responsible for performance may act as an economic operator?’

The question referred for a preliminary ruling

22 By its question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as precluding national legislation which permits the conclusion, without an invitation to tender, of a contract by which two public entities set up between them a form of cooperation such as that at issue in the main proceedings.

23 As a preliminary point, it should be noted that the application of Directive 2004/18 to a public contract is subject to the condition that the estimated value thereof reaches the threshold laid down in Article 7(b) of that directive, taking into consideration the usual value on the market of the works, supplies or services to which that public contract relates. Otherwise, the fundamental rules and the general principles of the FEU Treaty, in particular the principles of equal treatment and of non-discrimination on grounds of nationality and the consequent obligation of transparency apply, provided that the contract concerned has a certain cross-border interest in the light, inter alia, of its value and the place where it is carried out (see, to that effect, inter alia, Joined Cases C-147/06 and C-148/06 SECAP and Santorso [2008] ECR I-3565, paragraphs 20, 21 and 31 and the case-law cited).

24 However, the fact that the contract at issue in the main proceedings is capable of falling, as the case may be, either under Directive 2004/18 or the fundamental rules and general principles of the FEU Treaty does not affect the answer to be given to the question posed. The criteria laid down in the case-law of the Court in order to determine whether an invitation to tender is mandatory or not are relevant both with regard to the interpretation of that directive and with regard to the interpretation of those rules and principles of the FEU Treaty (see, to that effect, Case C-573/07 Sea [2009] ECR I-8127, paragraphs 35 to 37).

25 That having been stated, it should be pointed out that, in accordance with Article 1(2) of Directive 2004/18, a contract for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between an economic operator and a contracting authority and having as its object the provision of services referred to in Annex II A to that directive, is a public contract.

26 In that regard, first, it is immaterial whether that operator is itself a contracting authority (see, to that effect, Case C-107/98 Teckal [1999] ECR I-8121, paragraph 51). It is also immaterial whether the body concerned is primarily profit-making, whether it is structured as an undertaking or whether it has a continuous presence on the market (see, to that effect, CoNISMa, paragraphs 30 and 45).

27 Thus, with regard to entities such as public universities, the Court has held that such entities are, in principle, entitled to take part in a tendering procedure for the award of a public service contract. However, the Member States may regulate the activities of those entities and inter alia authorise or not authorise them to operate on the market, taking into account their objectives as an institution and those laid down in their statutes. None the less, if and to the extent that such entities are entitled to offer certain services on the market, they may not be prevented from participating in a tendering procedure for the services concerned (see, to that effect, CoNISMa, paragraphs 45, 48, 49 and 51). In the present case, the referring court stated that Article 66, first paragraph, of the Decree of the President of the Republic No 382 of 11 July 1980 on the reorganisation of University education, concerning training and organisational and teaching methodology reforms, expressly authorises public universities to supply research and consultancy services to public or private entities provided that that activity does not impair their educational role.

28 Second, activities such as those which are the subject-matter of the contract at issue in the main proceedings – notwithstanding the fact, referred to by the referring court, that they are capable of coming under academic research – fall, according to the actual nature of those activities, either within the framework of research and development services covered by Annex II A, category 8, of Directive 2004/18 or within the framework of engineering services and related scientific and technical consulting services covered by category 12 of that annex.

29 Third, as stated by the Advocate General in paragraphs 32 and 34 of her Opinion, and as is clear from the usual and ordinary meaning of the phrase ‘pecuniary interest’, a contract cannot fall outside the concept of public contract merely because the remuneration remains limited to reimbursement of the expenditure incurred to provide the agreed service.

30 Subject to the checks which are for the referring court to carry out, the contract at issue in the main proceedings does appear to have all the characteristics referred to in paragraphs 26 to 29 of this judgment.

31 It follows however from the case-law of the Court that two types of contracts entered into by a public entity do not fall within the scope of European Union public procurement law.

32 The first type of contracts are those concluded by a public entity with a person who is legally distinct from that entity where, at the same time, that entity exercises over the person concerned a control which is similar to that which it exercises over its own departments and where that person carries out the essential part of its activities with the entity or entities which control it (see, to that effect, Teckal, paragraph 50).

33 It is however common ground that that exception is not applicable in a context such as that at issue in the main proceedings, because it is apparent from the order for reference that the ASL does not exercise any control over the University.

34 The second type of contracts are those which establish cooperation between public entities with the aim of ensuring that a public task that they all have to perform is carried out (see, to that effect, Case C-480/06 Commission v Germany [2009] ECR I-4747, paragraph 37).

35 In those circumstances, European Union rules on public procurement are not applicable in so far as, in addition, such contracts are concluded exclusively by public entities, without the participation of a private party, no private provider of services is placed in a position of advantage vis-à-vis competitors and implementation of that cooperation is governed solely by considerations and requirements relating to the pursuit of objectives in the public interest (see, to that effect, Commission v Germany, paragraphs 44 and 47).

36 While, as stated by the referring court, a contract such as that at issue in the main proceedings appears to satisfy some of the criteria referred to in the two preceding paragraphs of this judgment, such a contract can however fall outside the scope of European Union public procurement rules only if it fulfils all those criteria.

37 In that regard, it appears to follow from the information in the order for reference, first, that that contract contains a series of substantive aspects a significant or even major part of which corresponds to activities usually carried out by engineers and architects and which, even though they have an academic foundation, do not however constitute academic research. Consequently, contrary to the holding of the Court in paragraph 37 of Commission v Germany, the public task which is the subject-matter of the cooperation between the public entities established by the abovementioned contract does not appear to ensure the implementation of a public task which the ASL and the University both have to perform.

38 Second, the contract at issue in the main proceedings may bring about an advantage for private undertakings if the highly qualified external collaborators to whom it permits the University to have recourse for the carrying out of certain services include private service providers.

39 It is however for the referring court to carry out all the necessary checks in that regard.

40 The answer to the question referred is therefore that European Union public procurement law precludes national legislation which authorises the conclusion, without an invitation to tender, of a contract by which public entities establish cooperation among each other where – this being for the referring court to establish – the purpose of such a contract is not to ensure that a public task that those entities all have to perform is carried out, where that contract is not governed solely by considerations and requirements relating to the pursuit of objectives in the public interest or where it is such as to place a private provider of services in a position of advantage vis-à-vis his competitors.

Costs

41 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Grand Chamber) hereby rules:

European Union public procurement law precludes national legislation which authorises the conclusion, without an invitation to tender, of a contract by which public entities establish cooperation among each other where – this being for the referring court to establish – the purpose of such a contract is not to ensure that a public task that those entities all have to perform is carried out, where that contract is not governed solely by considerations and requirements relating to the pursuit of objectives in the public interest or where it is such as to place a private provider of services in a position of advantage vis-à-vis his competitors.

(Reference for a preliminary ruling from the Consiglio di Stato (Italy))

(Procurement law – Public-public partnership – Directive 2004/18/EC – Failure to conduct a public tendering procedure – Provision of a service consisting in the study and evaluation of the seismic vulnerability of certain hospitals – Contracts entered into between a contracting authority and a university constituted under public law – Contracts for pecuniary interest not exceeding the costs incurred – Capacity as an economic operator)

I – Introduction

1. In the present preliminary ruling proceedings under Article 267 TFEU, the Consiglio di Stato (Council of State; ‘the referring court’) asks the Court a question concerning the interpretation of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts. (2)

2. The reference for a preliminary ruling has been made in a dispute between Azienda Sanitaria Locale di Lecce (‘Lecce ASL’) and a number of associations of engineers and architects, in connection with an agreement entered into by Lecce ASL and the Università del Salento (‘the University’) for the study and evaluation, for consideration, of the seismic vulnerability of hospital buildings in the Province of Lecce. Those associations of engineers and architects, which were not involved in that project, allege that Lecce ASL awarded the contract to the University without conducting a public tendering procedure and thus unlawfully. Lecce ASL objects that the agreement comes under cooperation and coordination between public authorities, since it was concluded in order to attain a public interest objective.

3. The present case gives the Court another opportunity to develop its case-law on procurement law. Proceeding from its judgment in Commission v Germany, (3) the Court must decide whether it appears justified to apply the rules of procurement law in a situation such as that in the main proceedings, where a public authority awards a contract for consultancy activities to a university constituted under public law. Account must be taken of various aspects, such as the power of the University to act as an economic operator and the cost-covering character of the consideration received.

II – Legislative framework

A – EU law

4. Article 1(2), (8) and (9) of Directive 2004/18 provides:

‘(2)(a) “Public contracts” are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services within the meaning of this Directive.

(d) “Public service contracts” are public contracts other than public works or supply contracts having as their object the provision of services referred to in Annex II.

(8) The terms “contractor”, “supplier” and “service provider” mean any natural or legal person or public entity or group of such persons and/or bodies which offers on the market, respectively, the execution of works and/or a work, products or services.

The term “economic operator” shall cover equally the concepts of contractor, supplier and service provider. It is used merely in the interest of simplification.

(9) “Contracting authorities” means the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or several of such authorities or one or several of such bodies governed by public law.

A “body governed by public law” means any body

(a) established for the specific purpose of meeting needs in the general interest, not having an industrial or commercial character;

(b) having legal personality; and

(c) financed, for the most part, by the State, regional or local authorities, or other bodies governed by public law; or subject to management supervision by those bodies; or having an administrative, managerial or supervisory board, more than half of whose members are appointed by the State, regional or local authorities, or by other bodies governed by public law.

5. Under Article 7, the directive applies to public contracts which have a value exclusive of value-added tax (VAT) estimated to be equal to or greater than a threshold of EUR 206 000, provided the contracts are public supply and service contracts awarded by contracting authorities other than those listed in Annex IV. Under Article 9 of the directive, the calculation of the estimated value of a public contract is based on the total amount payable, net of VAT, as estimated by the contracting authority.

This calculation must take account of the estimated total amount, including any form of option and any renewals of the contract.

6. Under Article 16(f) of the directive, the directive does not apply to public service contracts for research and development services other than those where the benefits accrue exclusively to the contracting authority for its use in the conduct of its own affairs, on condition that the service provided is wholly remunerated by the contracting authority.

7. Under Article 20 of the directive, contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex II A are to be awarded in accordance with Articles 23 to 55. Article 28 provides that in awarding their public contracts, contracting authorities must apply the national procedures adjusted for the purposes of the directive. Annex II A lists, inter alia, the following categories of services: 'Research and development services' (category 8) and 'Architectural services; engineering services and integrated engineering services; urban planning and landscape engineering services; related scientific and technical consulting services; technical testing and analysis services' (category 12).

B – National law

8. Article 15(1) of Law No 241 of 7 August 1990 introducing new rules governing administrative procedure and relating to the right of access to administrative documents (nuove norme in materia di procedimento amministrativo e di diritto di accesso ai documenti amministrativi) (4) provides that public administrative authorities may at any time enter into agreements among themselves with a view to laying down rules governing cooperation in activities of common interest.

9. Article 66 of Decree of the President of the Republic (Decreto del Presidente della Repubblica) No 382/1980 provides:

'Provided that the performance of their academic function of dissemination of knowledge is not thereby impaired, universities may carry out research and consultancy activities under contracts and agreements with public and private entities. The carrying out of those contracts and agreements shall, as a rule, be entrusted to [university] departments or, where such departments are not in place, to institutes or university clinics, or to individual full-time teachers.

The proceeds from the performance of the contracts and agreements referred to in the preceding paragraph shall be allocated in accordance with rules.

The teaching and non-teaching staff cooperating in the provision of those services may be rewarded up to an annual sum not exceeding 30% of total remuneration. In each case, the sum so paid to staff may not exceed 50% of the overall proceeds from those services.

The rules referred to in the second paragraph shall determine the amount to be allocated for general expenditure incurred by the university and the criteria for the allocation to the staff of the sum referred to in the third paragraph.

The proceeds derived from the activities referred to in the preceding paragraph shall constitute revenue in the budget of the university.'

10. The order for reference also states that, according to the specific legislation relating to their activity, the universities are primary centres for academic research.

III – Facts, main proceedings and question referred for a preliminary ruling

11. On the basis of the specification approved by decision of 7 October 2009 by the Director General of Lecce ASL and the subsequent agreement entitled 'Consultancy Contract', a written agreement was entered into between the abovementioned Lecce ASL and the University. That agreement concerned the study and evaluation, for consideration, of the seismic vulnerability of hospital buildings in the Province of Lecce in the light of the most recent national legislation in relation to the safety of structures and, in particular, of strategic buildings.

12. The specification indicated in the following terms the services to be provided:

– identification of the structural typology of the materials used for construction and the methods of calculation adopted; brief verification of the actual state of affairs in the light of the project documentation made available;

– verification of the soundness of the structure; brief analysis of the overall seismic resistance of the building; where appropriate, on-site analysis of structural elements or subsystems that are significant for the purposes of identifying overall seismic resistance; and

– compilation of the results referred to in the previous indent, and drafting of technical data sheets on structural diagnosis; in particular: reports on the structural typology observed, on the materials and on the state of conservation of the structure, with particular reference to the aspects having a major effect on structural reactions in relation to the seismic risk of the site of the works; drawing up of technical data sheets for the classification of the seismic vulnerability of the hospitals; technical reports on the structural elements or subsystems identified as critical in relation to the verification of seismic vulnerability; preliminary suggestions and a brief description of works which may be needed to bring the buildings up to standard, or to improve them, with regard to their seismic resistance, with particular reference to the advantages and limitations, in technical and economic terms, of the various possible technologies.

13. Under the Consultancy Contract, the work was to be carried out through close collaboration between the Lecce ASL working group and the University working group, if necessary with the help of highly qualified external staff; academic responsibility was to be assigned to two persons appointed, respectively, by the contracting authority and by the University Department; ownership of any results produced by the experimental work was to lie with Lecce ASL, together with the commitment, however, to make express mention of the Department if the results appeared in technical-academic publications. Lecce ASL was to pay the University an amount of EUR 200 000 excluding VAT for the entire service, due in four instalments. If the contract were terminated early, the University was to be entitled to an amount equivalent to the volume of work performed up to that point and the costs incurred.

14. On three administrative appeals brought, respectively, by the Ordine degli Ingegneri della Provincia di Lecce, the Associazione delle Organizzazioni di Ingegneri, di Architettura e di Consultazione Tecnico-economica (OICE) – together with Etacons Srl, Vito Prato Engineering Srl, Barletti-del Grosso & Associati Srl – and the Ordine degli Architetti della Provincia di Lecce, the Puglia Regional Administrative Court declared the direct award to the University of the above contract unlawful for failure to apply public tendering procedures.

15. Lecce ASL and the University appealed to the referring court against the respective judgments. In its order for reference, that court expresses reservations that Directive 2004/18 could preclude the conclusion of a contract like the one at issue. Accordingly, it asks whether the contested agreement satisfies the legal requirements governing a public-public partnership, as developed in the Court's case-law. Whilst there are some grounds in support of this conclusion, it cannot be stated with any certainty, especially since other aspects suggest the contrary. Because, in its view, it is not possible to infer any guidance as to interpretation from the Court's case-law, the Consiglio di Stato stayed the proceedings and made reference to the Court for a preliminary ruling on the following question:

'Does Directive 2004/18, and, in particular, Article 1(2)(a) and (d), Article 2 and Article 28 of that directive and Categories 8 and 12 in Annex II [A] thereto, preclude national legislation which permits written agreements to be entered into between two contracting authorities for the study of the seismic vulnerability of hospital structures and its evaluation in the light of national regulations on the safety of structures and of strategic buildings in particular, for a consideration not exceeding the costs incurred in the performance of the service, where the authority responsible for performance may act as an economic operator?'

IV – Procedure before the Court

16. The order for reference dated 9 November 2010 was lodged at the Registry of the Court on 1 April 2011.

17. Written observations were submitted by Lecce ASL, the University, the Consiglio Nazionale degli Ingegneri (CNI), the Associazione delle Organizzazioni di Ingegneri, di Architettura e di Consultazione Tecnico-economica (OICE), the Consiglio Nazionale degli Architetti, Pianificatori, Paesaggisti e Conservatori (CNAPPC), the Italian, Czech, Polish and Swedish Governments and the European Commission within the period laid down in Article 23 of the Statute of the Court of Justice.

18. At the hearing on 27 March 2012, oral argument was presented by the agents of Lecce ASL, the University, CNI, OICE, CNAPPC, the Italian, Polish and Swedish Governments, and the Commission.

V – Main arguments of the parties

19. The arguments of the parties will, in so far as they are relevant, be reproduced in my statements.

VI – Legal assessment

A – General remarks

20. According to the wording of the question, the referring court is essentially seeking to ascertain whether the applicable national legislation may be regarded as compatible with Directive 2004/18 in so far as it permits agreements such as that described in the question. If, however, we consider the legal problems raised in the present case in their overall context, it must be stated that the central question which the Court must address as a matter of priority concerns the compatibility of the agreement in question with Directive 2004/18. In order to give the national court an answer to its questions which is helpful with a view to the resolution of the main proceedings, it would appear reasonable to shift the focus of the analysis to this aspect. In my analysis I will therefore deal with the question whether there has been an infringement of Directive 2004/18 in the main proceedings. I do not consider it absolutely necessary to reformulate the question to that end, especially since the finding of a possible infringement will indirectly provide clarification whether the applicable national law is consistent with EU law. Should the analysis reveal that the agreement in question does not comply with Directive 2004/18, the legal position which exists in Italy likewise cannot be regarded as consistent with EU law.

21. Directive 2004/18 would preclude an agreement such as that entered into between Lecce ASL and the University if under European Union law the contract for the study and evaluation of the seismic vulnerability of certain hospitals required a tendering procedure, since no call for tenders was made in the main proceedings. According to the order for reference, the contract in question was instead awarded directly to the University. Should the requirement of a tendering procedure be confirmed, it would also have to be examined whether an exception might apply which allows no public tendering procedure to be conducted, in which connection consideration must be given in the main proceedings to both the exceptions codified in Directive 2004/18 itself and the legal concept, developed in the Court's case-law, of a partnership between public authorities for the performance of a public interest task.

B – Applicability of Directive 2004/18

22. However, that presupposes that the agreement in question actually falls within the scope of Directive 2004/18. This is the first point to be examined, to which I will turn immediately below.

(1) Existence of a public contract

(a) Provision of services

23. For the situation to fall within the material scope of the directive, a 'public contract' must exist. The agreement in question may possibly be classifiable as one of the types of public contract listed in Article 1(2) of the directive. In my view, in the light of the available factual information, classification as a ‘public service contract’ within the meaning of the legal definition contained in Article 1(2)(d) is a possibility. In that provision, public service contracts are defined as ‘public contracts other than public works or supply contracts having as their object the provision of services referred to in Annex II’. According to its object, the work to be performed by the University under the agreement corresponds to the type of services listed under category 12 in Annex II A (‘Architectural services; engineering services and integrated engineering services; urban planning and landscape engineering services; related scientific and technical consulting services; technical testing and analysis services’). This is complex technical work consisting in analysis of both compliance with building regulations and the seismic exposure of buildings. It has an obvious link to architecture and envisages extensive consultancy activities in this field carried out by suitably qualified staff from the University.

(b) Contract between a contracting authority and an economic operator

24. In addition, the definition of ‘public service contract’ requires, in so far as it is based on the notion of public contract in Article 1(2)(a) of the directive, a written contract between a contracting authority and an economic operator.

25. The legal requirement of written form is satisfied because the ‘Consultancy Contract’ concluded on 29 October 2009 was laid down in writing.

26. Under Article 1(9) of the directive, ‘contracting authority’ means ‘the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or several of such authorities or one or several of such bodies governed by public law’. In its capacity as part of the public administration, Lecce ASL satisfies the conditions for classification as a contracting authority within the meaning of the directive.

27. As far as the potential classification of the University as an ‘economic operator’ is concerned, under Article 1(9) of the directive that term also covers ‘service provider’. This means ‘any natural or legal person or public entity or group of such persons and/or bodies which offers on the market ... services’. The Università del Salento itself is constituted under public law, as is clear from its written observations. (5) A relevant provision in this connection is Article 66 of Decree of the President of the Republic No 382/1980, because it authorises universities to enter into contracts and agreements with public and private bodies to carry out research and consultancy activities. Accordingly, under national law, universities are permitted not only to function as education and research centres, but also as economic operators within the meaning of the abovementioned definition.

28. Reference should be made here to CoNISMa, (6) in which the Court confirmed that universities may also take part in tendering procedures as economic operators. In that judgment, the Court stated that capacity as an economic operator is not necessarily reserved for service providers which are structured as a business. (7) Rather, any person or entity which is capable of carrying out the contract is eligible to put itself forward as a candidate, regardless of whether it is governed by public law or private law, whether it is active as a matter of course on the market or only on an occasional basis and whether or not it is subsidised by public funds. (8) The Court also found that the effect of a restrictive interpretation of the concept of economic operator would be that contracts concluded between contracting authorities and bodies which are primarily non-profit-making would not be regarded as ‘public contracts’, could be awarded by mutual agreement and would thus not be covered by EU rules on equal treatment and transparency, which would be inconsistent with the aim of those rules.

29. Consequently, the agreement entered into between Lecce ASL and the University must be regarded as a written contract between a contracting authority and an economic operator.

(c) Pecuniary interest of the service

30. A further condition for classification of an agreement as a ‘public contract’ within the meaning of Article 1(2)(a) of the directive is that it is for pecuniary interest. The notion of ‘pecuniary interest’ requires that the service provided by the tenderer is subject to a remuneration obligation on the part of the contractor. This means, in addition to participation by two persons, reciprocity in the form of the material exchange of consideration. Such reciprocity of the contractual relationship is necessary for the requirement of a tendering procedure to apply.

31. In the main proceedings, under the agreement in question Lecce ASL entered into a remuneration obligation vis-à-vis the University. However, in this particular case, the consideration promised was assessed in such a way that it did not exceed the costs incurred. Against that background, the question arises whether cost-covering remuneration also satisfies the definition of 'pecuniary interest'. In my view, certain arguments support a broad interpretation of this notion, to the effect that it covers any kind of remuneration which has monetary value.

32. As the referring court correctly explains in its order for reference, (9) the absence of profit alone does not render the contractual agreement gratuitous. It continues to be a contract for valuable consideration from an economic point of view, especially since the recipient is in any case given a non-cash benefit, (10) and could thus, in principle, come within the scope of Directive 2004/18. Notwithstanding the above, the view can be taken that only a broad understanding of the notion of 'pecuniary interest' is consistent with the purpose of the procurement directives, which is to open up the markets to genuine competition. (11) Only in this way is it possible to guarantee the effectiveness of the procurement directives and to prevent the circumvention of procurement law by agreeing other forms of remuneration which are not readily recognisable as profit-making, for example through swaps or the waiver of reciprocal claims existing between the contracting parties. (12)

33. Such an understanding of pecuniary interest is also in line with the broad definition adopted by the Court for freedom to provide services under Article 56 TFEU. (13) In view of the fact that, according to its legal basis in Article 95 EC (now Article 114 TFEU), Directive 2004/18 is intended to serve to attain the fundamental freedoms in the internal market, as expressed in recital 2 in the preamble, a broad understanding of the notion 'pecuniary interest' would seem logical. In accordance with that broad interpretation, the service provider may not be absolutely required to be profit-making. Rather, it should also be sufficient, for the pecuniary interest requirement to be satisfied, if the service provider merely receives cost-covering remuneration in the form of reimbursement of costs. The notion of pecuniary interest is thus also intended to cover simple reimbursement. (14)

34. Consequently, the agreement in question is for pecuniary interest and a 'public service contract' within the meaning of the definition contained in Article 1(2)(d) of the directive exists in the main proceedings.

(2) Attainment of the respective threshold

(a) Falling below the relevant threshold?

35. The procurement directives, with their strict procedural requirements, do not apply to every small contract. Rather, the monetary consideration of the contract in question must reach a certain threshold in order to come under the procurement rules. Considering only proportionality grounds, the sometimes very expensive procurement procedures do not have to be used for every small-scale contract. In addition, a low contract value does not suggest a serious cross-border commercial interest.

36. Thus, as a result of the thresholds, procurement law is divided into two classes. Above the thresholds it is necessary to comply with detailed stipulations under the directives. Below the thresholds, only EU primary procurement law, together with the unwritten principles stemming from the Court's case-law, is relevant. This division proves to be relevant in the present case because the contract in the main proceedings possibly falls below the threshold, which will have to be examined in detail.

37. Under Article 9(1) of Directive 2004/18, the calculation of the estimated value of a public contract is to be based on the total amount payable, net of VAT, as estimated by the contracting authority. This calculation must take account of the estimated total amount, including any form of option and any renewals of the contract. It is clear from the documents before the Court that Lecce ASL undertook to pay a consideration of EUR 200 000 net of VAT. If that amount is taken as the estimated value of the contractually agreed services, it is clear that it falls below the threshold of EUR 206 000 defined in Article 7(1)(b) of Directive 2004/18 in the version applicable on 29 October 2009, i.e. at the time the agreement in question was concluded. Consequently, the compatibility of the agreement in question with EU procurement law should also not be assessed on the basis of Directive 2004/18. The sole basis for assessment should be primary law, and above all the provisions relating to the fundamental freedoms.

38. On the other hand, as the Commission points out in its written observations, (15) it should not be disregarded that a short time later the threshold was reduced to EUR 193 000, under Commission Regulation (EC) No 1177/2009 of 30 November 2009, with effect from 1 January 2010. (16) The estimated value of the services would thus be above the new threshold. The question therefore arises which threshold must be used in the main proceedings. This is in turn linked to the question which version of Directive 2004/18 is applicable in the main proceedings. In order to be able to answer this question, the relevant moment from which a procurement directive is applicable must be determined.

39. Directive 2004/18 contains a number of rules which are intended to help those applying the law to determine the relevant moment for the calculation of the contract value. For example, Article 9(2) of the directive provides that the relevant moment for the calculation is the moment at which the contract notice is sent or, where such notice is not required, the moment at which the procedure is commenced. It would therefore be conceivable, in principle, to have regard to those rules in order to determine the temporal applicability of the relevant version of Directive 2004/18. It must be stated, however, that those rules assume a situation where a tendering procedure has actually taken place. They do not state what action should be taken where – as in the main proceedings – no call for tenders has been made, for whatever reason. In the absence of express provisions governing this latter situation, it is necessary to make some fundamental observations in order to find a solution for this situation which takes sufficient account of it.

40. In my Opinion in Commission v Germany, (17) I had drawn attention to the fact that the thresholds defined in the procurement directives are regularly revised. Accordingly, clear rules are needed to determine the relevant thresholds. For that reason, I also suggested in that Opinion that, where there is no call for tenders, regard is to be had to the time of the contractual negotiations as the material time for determining the relevant threshold and, indirectly, also for the temporal applicability of a procurement directive. (18) This seems to be reasonable, especially since regard must be had to a time when there is sufficient certainty as to the overall contract volume and the estimated contract value. The abovementioned provisions in Article 9(2) of Directive 2004/18 are based on the same idea. Since it must be assumed that at the time the contract was concluded at the latest there was final certainty as to the estimated contract value, that must be the relevant moment in the main proceedings. This means that in the main proceedings the older version of Directive 2004/18 is applicable. Because the value of the contractually agreed service falls below the threshold laid down therein, the compatibility of the agreement in question with EU procurement law would, as has already been explained, have to be assessed, in principle, solely on the basis of primary law.

41. There are no explicit rules on procurement law in the treaties. (19) The Court has nevertheless inferred principles of procurement law from the fundamental freedoms, the prohibition on discrimination on grounds of nationality and the principle of equal treatment and, according to the individual case to be assessed, has laid down conditions of procurement law with which contracting authorities must comply. Thus, the principle of equal treatment under primary law in the field of public procurement is intended to afford equality of opportunity to all tenderers when formulating their tenders, regardless of their nationality. (20) The principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination on grounds of nationality imply a duty of transparency which consists in ensuring, for the benefit of any potential tenderer, a degree of advertising sufficient to enable the award of the contract to be opened up to competition and a review of the impartiality of the procurement procedures. (21)

42. However, the referring court has not provided the necessary descriptions of the facts and explanations for a detailed analysis of compliance with the principles governing procurement under primary law. This is not least due to the fact that the referring court has restricted its request for the interpretation of EU law to Directive 2004/18. The statements made by the referring court therefore relate solely to aspects which are relevant to an interpretation of that secondary legislation.

43. It should be borne in mind in this connection that, with regard to the admissibility of references, the Court has pointed to the requirement that the national court's decision should contain a sufficient description of the facts and law involved in the case. The purpose of that requirement is to enable the Court, first, to provide an interpretation of EU law which will be of use to the national court, (22) and, second, to give the governments of the Member States and other interested parties the opportunity to submit observations pursuant to Article 23 of the Statute of the Court of Justice. (23) However, account can be taken of both purposes, at least as far as the main proceedings are concerned, only if the referring court makes a suitable request for an interpretation of primary law to the Court and supplements its description of the facts and law involved in the case with relevant statements. The referring court should therefore be advised of the possibility of making a fresh reference.

44. However, a fresh reference would appear to be possible only if it is definitively confirmed that the contract actually falls below the relevant threshold. It is for the national court to make the necessary factual findings in order to rule out entirely that other amounts also do not have to be taken into consideration as part of the agreed consideration. Particular attention must be given to the method by which the contract value for Lecce ASL was calculated. The national court will have to review a number of aspects, including whether items might be underestimated, whether the contractual agreement provided for the subsequent adjustment of such items to the actual costs, and whether the contracting parties agreed to split up the contracts, including a separate calculation of items. (24) Since the contract falls only slightly below the threshold in the main proceedings, it appears that these aspects require particular clarification.

(b) Presumption that the question is relevant

45. Should the contract value actually fall below the threshold of EUR 206 000 which is relevant in the main proceedings, this fact would raise doubts whether the question referred is relevant to the decision, especially since it expressly seeks the interpretation of Directive 2004/18, rather than of the applicable primary law. The question referred could possibly prove to be irrelevant to the decision in so far as it is not entirely clear that it bears any relation to the actual facts of the main proceedings or to their purpose.

46. It should nevertheless be remembered that it is settled case-law that, in the context of the cooperation between the Court of Justice and the national courts provided for by Article 267 TFEU, it is solely for the national court before which the dispute has been brought, and which must assume responsibility for the subsequent judicial decision, to determine in the light of the particular circumstances of the case both the need for a preliminary ruling in order to enable it to deliver judgment and the relevance of the questions which it submits to the Court. (25) Where the questions submitted by the national court concern the interpretation of EU law, the Court of Justice is, in principle, bound to give a ruling. (26)

47. It follows that the presumption that questions referred by national courts for a preliminary ruling are relevant may be rebutted only in exceptional cases, where it is quite obvious that the interpretation which is sought of the provisions of EU law referred to in the questions bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or to its purpose. (27) This is not the case in the main proceedings, however, especially since it cannot be ruled out that, after assessing all the circumstances of the main proceedings, in particular the method by which the contract value for Lecce ASL was calculated, (28) the referring court will conclude that Directive 2004/18 should ultimately be applied in the main proceedings, because the relevant threshold has been exceeded.

48. Consequently, the Court is bound to comply with the request from the referring court and to interpret Directive 2004/18.

(3) Irrelevance of an exception

49. Whilst the thresholds narrow the limits of procurement law initially on a purely financial basis, the directives also contain explicit exceptions for specific areas. These must be distinguished from the unwritten exceptions which the Court has developed in its case-law and which mainly concern situations in which regional or local public authorities perform public interest tasks together. The purpose of the rules laying down the exceptions is to fine tune the procurement directives. In particular, the intention is to exclude from the scope of procurement law areas in which there is no specific procurement-related danger to competition, there is no cross-border commercial interest or an application of procurement law would not be consistent with the characteristics and the particular needs of the areas covered by the exceptions. (29)

50. Irrespective of the kind of exception that is relevant in a certain case, it should be borne in mind that, because of the aim of the procurement directives, which is to make the award of public contracts in all Member States subject to common rules and to open up public procurement to competition in general, the rules laying down exceptions in the directives must be given a definitive and, in principle, a narrow interpretation. (30)

51. In the main proceedings, consideration must be given to both codified and unwritten exceptions, the applicability of which will be examined below in that schematic order.

(a) Codified exceptions

(i) Service contract on the basis of an‘exclusive right’

52. Consideration should first be given to the exception laid down in Article 18 of Directive 2004/18. Under that provision, the directive ‘shall not apply to public service contracts awarded by a contracting authority to another contracting authority … on the basis of an exclusive right which they enjoy pursuant to a published law, regulation or administrative provision which is compatible with the Treaty’. This exception would thus be relevant only if it can be shown that the University has an exclusive right to provide services of the agreed kind.

53. It is sufficient to note that even though Italian law states in Article 6(4) of Law No 168/1989 that the universities are the ‘primary centres for academic research’ and, in Article 15(1) of Law No 241/1990, it authorises them to ‘enter into agreements among themselves with a view to laying down rules governing cooperation in activities of common interest’, it is not possible to infer from this any exclusive right in the abovementioned sense. A legally enshrined exclusive right for the universities to carry out the study and evaluation of the seismic vulnerability of hospital buildings on behalf of the public administration cannot be found in either the Italian legal order or in EU law. The Czech Government (31) is correct in its view that these activities should, by their nature, be regarded as ancillary research activities carried out by the University and do not serve to fulfil its fundamental function as a centre of academic learning, in respect of which the University enjoys an exclusive right in the context of the education system of each Member State.

54. The exception laid down in Article 18 of Directive 2004/18 is not therefore relevant in the main proceedings.

(ii) Special exception for research and development services

55. It must also be examined whether the special exception laid down in Article 16(f) of Directive 2004/18 is relevant in the main proceedings. Under that provision, the directive does not apply to service contracts for ‘research and development services other than those where the benefits accrue exclusively to the contracting authority for its use in the conduct of its own affairs, on condition that the service provided is wholly remunerated by the contracting authority’.

56. This criterion is satisfied in so far as Lecce ASL has undertaken, by contract, to pay a consideration. However, it is unclear whether the other requirements are fulfilled. Even though under the consultancy contract ownership of any results produced by the experimental work was to lie with Lecce ASL, it was under a commitment to make express mention of the Department if the results appeared in academic publications. That raises the question of the extent to which the benefits of the research accrue exclusively to Lecce ASL. It cannot be ruled out entirely that that was the case. In the absence of more precise factual information on the content of the agreement and the associated legal consequences under national law, it is not possible to determine with any certainty whether that requirement of the exception in Article 16(f) of Directive 2004/18 is satisfied. To that end it would be necessary to ascertain and assess facts, which the Court however has no power to do in proceedings under Article 267 TFEU. (32) Instead, this falls within the jurisdiction of the national court. It must therefore examine whether the exception laid down in Article 16(f) of Directive 2004/18 is relevant in the light of the overall circumstances in the main proceedings.

(b) Unwritten exceptions

57. As has already been intimated above, in its case-law the Court has developed two further exceptions, which relate to 'in-house operations' and various forms of inter-municipal cooperation. (33) A description should be given, with a view to an examination of whether they are applicable in the main proceedings, of their main characteristics.

(ii) In-house operations

58. In-house operations presuppose, by definition, an exchange of consideration which – from a legal point of view – takes place within a single legal entity. In-house operations are not therefore relevant for the purposes of the procurement rules because a contracting authority provides the services with its own resources. This is permissible under procurement law, as the Court found in Stadt Halle and RPL Lochau. (34) In that judgment, the Court stated that 'a public authority which is a contracting authority has the possibility of performing the tasks conferred on it in the public interest by using its own administrative, technical and other resources, without being obliged to call on outside entities not forming part of its own departments'. In the view of the Court, 'in such a case, there can be no question of a contract for pecuniary interest concluded with an entity legally distinct from the contracting authority'. There is therefore no need to apply the EU rules in the field of public procurement to such a situation. (35)

59. The situation where a public corporation awards a contract to a legally autonomous person, but that person has special relations with it is also dealt with in connection with the same set of issues. (36) In this case too, the question is ultimately whether there is a contract which requires a tendering procedure to be conducted. The key question is whether the operation involves two different persons who may operate respectively as a contracting authority and as a tenderer. Whilst it can be ruled out that they are the same person in view of their legal autonomy, the question whether they each have the capacity of contracting authority and tenderer for a specific operation often causes difficulties. Both persons may possibly be linked to one another, in relation to a specific contract, in such a way that in the absence of a contract the tender requirement ceases to apply.

60. In the view of the Court, it is sufficient, for a tender requirement to apply, if the contract was concluded between, on the one hand, a contracting authority and, on the other, a person legally distinct from that contracting authority. Since the leading judgment in Teckal, (37) however, the Court considers that there is no need for a call for tenders and that, in the final analysis, there is a quasi in-house operation 'where a public authority which is a contracting authority exercises over the separate entity concerned control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments, provided that that entity carries out the essential part of its activity with the public authority or with other controlling local or regional authorities'. (38)

61. It should be stated, however, that neither of these two situations exists in the main proceedings. First, the contract at issue was concluded between two distinct legal entities. Second, according to the referring court, (39) the University is exempt from any kind of control by Lecce ASL. As a result, there can be no question of an in-house operation.

(ii) Inter-municipal cooperation

62. A further unwritten exception can be seen in Commission v Germany (40) in which the Court sets out certain principles. (41) That judgment shows under what circumstances and in what forms inter-municipal cooperation is to be excluded from the scope of procurement law. (42) For this reason in particular, the facts in that case and the broad lines of the Court's arguments should be summarised.

– The Court's arguments in Commission v Germany

63. Those treaty infringement proceedings concerned the assignment by four Landkreise in Lower Saxony, namely Rotenburg (Wümme), Harburg, Soltau-Fallingbostel and Stade, of the contract for the disposal of their waste to Stadtreinigung Hamburg, a public undertaking operating in the form of a public-law institution (Anstalt des öffentlichen Rechts), without conducting a tendering procedure at European level. Provision was made for an annual fee with a price adjustment mechanism based on the volume of waste as remuneration. The contract was to run for 20 years. The parties had agreed to open negotiations five years at the latest before the end of that contract in order to make a decision as to whether a subsequent contract should be concluded.

64. The Court dismissed the action brought by the Commission, since it did not consider the conclusion of the contract on waste disposal services, without issuing a call for tenders or conducting a tendering procedure at European level, to be an infringement of Directive 92/50. The Court essentially rejected any requirement for a call for tender on the ground that the contract at issue established cooperation between local authorities with the aim of ensuring that a public task that they all have to perform, namely waste disposal, was carried out. (43) In order to ascertain this, it subjected the contract to a detailed analysis in which it highlighted the aspects which, in its view, typically characterised inter-municipal cooperation. As will be shown below, those aspects also constitute the criteria by which it can be determined whether a certain agreement between public authorities is covered by the unwritten exception of inter-municipal cooperation. In other words, they constitute the criteria for the exception.

65. It is striking that, in the view of the Court, inter-municipal cooperation is characterised by the efforts of all the participating local authorities to ensure jointly the effective performance of a public interest task. The legitimation for excluding that area from the scope of procurement law is the finding – as was held in Coditel Brabant (44) – that a public authority may perform the public interest tasks conferred on it by using its own resources, without being obliged to call on outside entities not forming part of its own departments. The Court considers, however, that this autonomy also requires a contracting authority to have the freedom to cooperate with other contracting authorities and thereby to pool their respective resources. (45) On the basis of these arguments, the Court acknowledged that the public authorities also have the freedom to choose the legal form for their cooperation in order to carry out jointly their public service tasks, whether, as in the present case, by means of a simple contract or institutionalised (46) by means of a specifically created public body. It based this view, first, on the formal argument that EU law does not require any particular legal form. (47) Second, from a teleological point of view, it also saw no need for any such requirement that cooperation take a certain form, provided competition in the internal market for procurement is not distorted because a private undertaking is given preferential treatment and others are thus discriminated against. (48)

– The criteria defined by the Court

66. Unlike the case-law on in-house operations, where, in Teckal, the Court summarised the two relevant criteria in a succinct mnemonic, there is no comparable succinct formula in that leading decision as to the conditions under which, going beyond the case to be decided, inter-municipal cooperation to which the procurement rules are not applied may be regarded as lawful. Nevertheless, as has already been mentioned, it is possible to identify, from the line of argument pursued by the Court, a number of relevant criteria which must be satisfied cumulatively. Accordingly, the Court exempts inter-municipal cooperation from the scope of procurement law on the basis of the following criteria:

– performance of a common public interest task or tasks relating to the pursuit of objectives in the public interest;

– solely by public authorities, without the participation of any private party;

– on a contractual basis or in an institutionalised legal form, such as an association;

– no private undertaking is placed in a position of advantage vis-à-vis competitors in relation to the conclusion of the contract;

– the contract does not seek to circumvent procurement law.

67. It could, in principle, be argued, against the direct applicability of this case-law to the main proceedings, that the present case – unlike the situation in Commission v Germany – does not concern cooperation between local authorities. In fact, the present case relates to a contractual agreement between a local authority and a public-law institution. Against this background, it is necessary to consider the extent to which it is possible, on the basis of this case-law, to assume the existence of an exception which covers forms of cooperation like the one at issue here.

(iii) Legal form of the ‘public-public partnership’

– Extension of the exception to various forms of cooperation between public authorities

68. A careful reading of the judgment in Commission v Germany nevertheless makes it clear that the exception developed by the Court does not, in principle, preclude such forms of cooperation.

69. An argument in support of this view is, first, that that case concerned a contract between Stadtreinigung Hamburg and four neighbouring Landkreisen, where Stadtreinigung Hamburg was a public-law institution and not a local authority. (49) Second, it should be borne in mind that in the judgment the Court often uses the neutral term ‘public authority’, (50) by which it intimates that cooperation, as a condition for the application of the unwritten exception, is open not only to municipalities. (51) To restrict the exceptions solely to cooperation by local authorities would also be excessively formalistic and difficult to comprehend in view of the different forms of administrative organisation in each of the Member States. Accordingly, it is more logical to give a broad understanding to the scope of that unwritten exception and talk about ‘cooperation between public authorities’.

70. This unwritten exception must therefore be considered, in principle, also to cover a situation in which a health authority and a university are parties to a contract.

– Satisfaction of the criteria in the main proceedings

71. In order for Lecce ASL and the University to be able to rely on this unwritten exception, the abovementioned criteria which distinguish cooperation between public authorities must be satisfied in the main proceedings. It is common ground that there is a contractual agreement solely between public authorities, without the participation of any private party in any form, and several criteria are therefore satisfied. Other criteria raise difficulties, on the other hand, and require closer examination.

Performance of a public interest task

72. One of the most contentious questions raised in the present case is whether the contract in question was concluded by both parties with the aim of performing a public interest task.

73. As has already been explained, the University was awarded a contract for the study and evaluation of the seismic vulnerability of hospital buildings in the Province of Lecce. That work had to be carried in accordance with the national regulations on the safety of structures and of strategic buildings in particular. As Lecce ASL (52) stated in its written observations, the results of that study were intended to serve as the basis for its own future projects to improve the resistance of the structures concerned. It follows that, by the contract to carry out the study, Lecce ASL actually intended to comply with an obligation imposed on it by national law with a view to guaranteeing the safety of hospitals. This is a public interest task which falls within the competence of the State.

74. Consequently, the contract in question was concluded by both parties with the aim of performing a public interest task.

Cooperation to perform a common public task

75. It must also be required that the cooperation serves to perform a common public task. (53) It is not therefore sufficient that the statutory duty to perform the public task in question concerns only one of the public authorities involved, whilst the other’s role is limited to that of a vicarious agent, which takes on the performance of this external task under a contract. This seems understandable if we consider the etymological meaning of the word ‘cooperation’; the essence of such cooperation consists precisely in a common strategy between partners which is based on the exchange and the coordination of their respective interests. The unilateral pursuit of one participant's own interests cannot really be described as 'cooperation' in the above sense. (54)

76. Specific indications of such a requirement of genuine cooperation between public authorities are given by the Court's statements in Commission v Germany, (55) which relate to a particular form of cooperation between four local authorities and a public institution which enabled them jointly to perform a public task incumbent on them all, namely waste disposal. The Court made express reference to this aspect in its statements. As has already been mentioned, the relationship between the parties to the contract is distinguished by the recognition of reciprocal rights and duties. In addition, the parties to the contract were committed to mutual assistance and mutual consideration. This judgment is thus based on a relationship of exchange which goes beyond the provision of services for consideration. (56)

77. As the Polish Government, (57) CNI (58) and the Commission (59) rightly recognise, however, the main proceedings are fundamentally different from the situation described above, in so far as the specific aims of the public authorities are not the same. Whilst Lecce ASL alone is subject to a statutory duty to study and evaluate the seismic vulnerability of hospital buildings, the University's role, by law, consists in scientific research. This role is supplemented by the traditional function as a centre of academic learning, as has already been pointed out. (60) Against this background, it is clear that the study and evaluation of the seismic vulnerability of hospital buildings cannot be considered to fall within the primary competence of a university. If we consider the specific aspects of the main proceedings, it must be stated that the University does not have any such statutory duty. This has already been established in the context of the analysis of Article 18 of Directive 2004/18. (61) Nor are there any indications that the University would take on this task of its own motion. Nevertheless, it has both the necessary expertise and the staff and facilities to perform that task. Lecce ASL calls on those resources in order to carry out its public task. It is, to some extent, the beneficiary of the University's resources. Ultimately, however, only the interests of Lecce ASL are pursued.

78. Importance must be attached in this connection to the nature of the relationship between the two parties. Cooperation between public authorities may take different forms, as can be seen from Commission v Germany: either on an institutional basis by establishing a structure tailored to the needs of the participants, to which powers are transferred or through which powers are exercised jointly, or on a contractual basis by concluding a cooperation agreement or an agreement on the performance of a joint public task. (62) In the main proceedings there is nothing of the sort. The consultancy contract concluded between Lecce ASL and the University does not lay down either the basis or the legal framework for cooperation in the service of a common public task. Instead, it merely provides for a service in the form of specialist consultancy for a consideration. In the final analysis, Lecce ASL 'buys' a study from the University, especially since it acquires the sole right of ownership and may use it as it wishes. The University receives financial remuneration in return, in connection with which it must be pointed out that the cost-covering character of the consideration does not affect the pecuniary interest of the service. (63)

79. In addition, the consultancy contract at issue here, unlike the contractual agreement in Commission v Germany, does not provide for any reciprocal assistance obligations. This is notwithstanding the fact that the work was to be carried out through close collaboration between the Lecce ASL working group and the University working group, since external staff could also be used under the contract. The reciprocal assistance obligations were therefore limited and were clearly not intended to go beyond what was necessary to allow the University working group to carry out the study.

80. Irrespective of this, the written observations submitted by Lecce ASL (64) suggest that no genuine exchange took place between the two working groups appointed by it and the University to perform the supposedly common public task. Rather, on the basis of the findings, i.e. after the completion of the study by the University, the Lecce ASL working group was to formulate plans to improve the safety of the investigated structures. This fact confirms the view already expressed that in reality Lecce ASL commissioned and paid for a report.

81. In the light of the foregoing, it must be stated that the consultancy contract in question does not, in accordance with case-law, establish any genuine cooperation between the public authorities involved which performs a common public task. It is in fact a contract for services which are provided for a consideration.

A private undertaking is not placed in a position of advantage vis-à-vis competitors

82. Furthermore, according to the criteria set out by the Court, a private undertaking should not be placed in a position of advantage vis-à-vis competitors with regard to the award of the contract to carry out the study.

83. As was stated earlier, the University acted as an 'economic operator' within the meaning of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18. (65) It therefore had the same legal status, from the point of view of procurement law, as a private undertaking. Because the University was awarded that contract without a public tendering procedure having taken place, it was placed in a position of advantage vis-à-vis the associations of engineers and architects which could possibly also have produced the study in question.

84. This criterion logically presupposes that potential competitors actually existed. It must be stated in this regard that in its written observations Lecce ASL did not expressly deny that other economic operators could also have carried out the study in question. The University's cost-effectiveness, material resources and competence are indeed praised, (66) but the basic capacity of other economic operators such as engineering or architect's firms to perform the task certainly cannot be denied. In view of the statements made by CNI (67) in support of the view that this kind of activity tends to fall within the primary competence of engineers and architects, such a claim is difficult to maintain. In so far as at the hearing Lecce ASL amended its position, to the effect that the complex terms of reference would have overstretched engineering or architect's firms, it could not deny, in response to a question asked by the Court, that other universities and private research institutes at home and aboard would possibly also have met the requirements of the terms of reference.

85. However, it is for the national court having jurisdiction to make the factual findings to give definitive clarification on this question. It must assess whether the necessary procedures for the study and evaluation of seismic vulnerability were actually so complex that, in the final analysis, only that University – and no other – could have carried out the study. For the purposes of the present preliminary ruling proceedings, it is sufficient to state that Lecce ASL would most probably have had a choice between various potential competitors if it had invited tenders for a public contract to carry out the study.

86. Consequently, the University was placed in a position of advantage vis-à-vis potential competitors with regard to the conclusion of the contract and a further condition for the application of the unwritten exception is not satisfied.

No circumvention of procurement law

87. As a further condition for the applicability of the unwritten exception in the main proceedings it must be required that the rules of procurement law were not circumvented through the conclusion of the contract.

88. As far as this condition is concerned, the Polish Government (68) is correct in its view that a distortion of competition stems from the fact that no call for tenders was made, even though the study in question could, in all likelihood, also have been carried out by associations of engineers and architects competing with the University. Mention should be made in this connection of the fact that it would have been in the specific interest of Lecce ASL as the contracting authority to open out the contract to the largest possible number of competitors. As the Court held in CoNISMa, (69) one of the primary objectives of EU rules on public procurement is to attain the widest possible opening-up to competition. Such opening-up is contemplated not only from the point of view of the EU interest in the free movement of goods and services, (70) but also the interest of the public authority concerned itself, which will thus have greater choice as to the most advantageous tender which is most suitable for the needs of the public authority in question. Lecce ASL prevented itself from utilising that option because it did not give potential tenderers an opportunity to submit tenders.

89. Against this background, the argument put forward by Lecce ASL (71) that the award of the contract to the University brought it considerable cost savings is not convincing, especially since, in the absence of a public tendering procedure, it did not have the opportunity to assess tenders from other potential competitors. Not only has Lecce ASL failed to provide evidence in support of this claim, it has not even been able to demonstrate conclusively how it arrived at an estimated amount of EUR 800 000 which, in its view, other competitors would have charged if they had been in a position to carry out the study. The assumption, which is not substantiated by facts, that only the University could have carried out the study in question at such a favourable price highlights a misunderstanding of the purpose of procurement law.

90. If contracting authorities were permitted – going beyond the scope of the public-public partnership – to have recourse to other public authorities in order to obtain services, without making them subject to the rules of procurement law, there would be grounds to fear that those rules could be circumvented in the long term, which would ultimately frustrate the Union's aim of guaranteeing freedom of establishment, freedom to provide services and unrestricted competition within the internal market. In order to prevent this, there is a need for strict monitoring of compliance with the criteria set out by the Court in Commission v Germany.

91. It can therefore be concluded that the contract concluded between Lecce ASL and the University sought to circumvent procurement law. That fact too militates against the application of the unwritten exception.

– Arguments against classification as a 'public-public partnership'

92. The above analysis has shown that a number of criteria for classification of the collaboration between public authorities as a 'public-public partnership' are not satisfied in the main proceedings. This holds, above all, for the requirement of cooperation to perform a joint public service task. (72) It is neither possible to identify genuine 'cooperation' in the conventional sense, nor do the participants pursue a common aim imposed on them by law. Rather, a public authority is using the resources of another public authority to limit costs. From a legal point of view, there is a contract for services which are provided for a consideration. Other arguments against excluding the operation at issue from the scope of procurement law are the fact that the University was placed in a position of advantage vis-à-vis potential competitors with regard to the conclusion of the contract (73) and the fact that the contract in question sought to circumvent procurement law. (74) In the light of this finding, there can be no question of a 'public-public partnership'.

(c) Interim conclusion

93. Consequently, there is no relevant exception which would preclude the applicability of Directive 2004/18.

2. Summary of conclusions

94. In summary, it must be stated that the contract at issue concerning the study and evaluation of the seismic vulnerability of certain hospitals requires a tendering procedure and Directive 2004/18 is applicable. Since no call for tenders was made in the main proceedings, there is an infringement of the directive. In view of the fact that national law permits agreements such as that between Lecce ASL and the University, national law is also not consistent with the directive.

95. Consequently, Directive 2004/18, and, in particular, Article 1(2)(a) and (d), Article 2 and Article 28 of that directive and Categories 8 and 12 in Annex II thereto, are to be interpreted as precluding national legislation which permits written agreements to be entered into between a contracting authority and a university constituted under public law for the study of the seismic vulnerability of hospital structures and its evaluation in the light of national regulations on the safety of structures and of strategic buildings in particular, for a consideration not exceeding the costs incurred in the performance of the service, where the university responsible for performance may act as an economic operator.

VII – Conclusion

96. In the light of the above considerations, I suggest that the Court answer the question asked by the Consiglio di Stato as follows:

Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, and, in particular, Article 1(2)(a) and (d), Article 2 and Article 28 of that directive and Categories 8 and 12 in Annex II thereto, are to be interpreted as precluding national legislation which permits written agreements to be entered into between a contracting authority and a university constituted under public law for the study of the seismic vulnerability of hospital structures and its evaluation in the light of national regulations on the safety of structures and of strategic buildings in particular, for a consideration not exceeding the costs incurred in the performance of the service, where the university responsible for performance may act as an economic operator.

24 – Connected with the calculation method are the prohibitions on circumvention expressly laid down in all the procurement directives. First, it is prohibited to split up contracts with the intention of circumventing the application of the relevant directive. Second, the directives prohibit circumvention through the choice of calculation method. Furthermore, it is possible to infer from the prohibitions of circumvention a general prohibition of deliberate or negligent under-calculation (see Frenz, W., loc. cit. JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Fourth Chamber)

7 June 2012 (*)

(Directive 2004/18/EC — Public contracts in the field of defence — Article 10 — Article 296(1)(b) EC — Protection of a Member State's essential security interests — Trade in arms, munitions and war material — Product procured by a contracting authority specifically for military purposes — Existence, as regards that product, of a potential and largely identical civilian application — Tiltable turntable for carrying out electromagnetic measurements — Contract not put out to tender in accordance with the procedures provided for by Directive 2004/18)

In Case C-615/10,

REFERENCE for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Korkein hallinto-oikeus (Finland), made by decision of 13 December 2010, received at the Court on 23 December 2010, in the proceedings brought by

Insinööritoimisto InsTiimi Oy,

party heard in the matter:

Puolustusvoimat,

THE COURT (Fourth Chamber),

composed of J.-C. Bonichot, President of the Chamber, A. Prechal, L. Bay Larsen (Rapporteur), C. Toader and E. Jarašiūnas, Judges,

Advocate General: J. Kokott,

Registrar: C. Strömholm, Administrator,

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 12 December 2011,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– Insinööritoimisto InsTiimi Oy, by A.-M. Eskola, asianajaja, and T. Pekkala,

– the Puolustusvoimat, by J. Matinlassi, acting as Agent,

– the Finnish Government, by J. Heliskoski, acting as Agent,

– the Czech Government, by J. Očková, T. Müller and M. Smolek, acting as Agents,

– the Portuguese Government, by L. Inez Fernandes, acting as Agent,

– the European Commission, by E. Paasivirta and C. Zadra, acting as Agents,

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 19 January 2012,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This reference for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 10 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114), of Article 346(1)(b) TFEU and the list of arms, munitions and war material included in Council Decision 255/58 of 15 April 1958 (‘the Council list of 15 April 1958’) to which that provision of the TFEU applies.

2 The reference has been made in a dispute between Insinööritoimisto InsTiimi Oy (Engineering firm InsTiimi SA; ‘InsTiimi’) and the Suomen Puolustusvoimien Teknillinen Tutkimuslaitos (the Finnish Defence Forces Technical Research Centre) concerning the award by the latter, following a procedure differing from those provided for in Directive 2004/18, of a contract for the supply of tiltable turntable equipment intended to be used to support objects being subjected to electromagnetic measurements.

Legal context

European Union (‘EU’) law

3 Article 10 of Directive 2004/18, entitled ‘Defence procurement’ and included in Chapter II (entitled ‘Scope’) of Title II of that directive, provides:

‘This Directive shall apply to public contracts awarded by contracting authorities in the field of defence, subject to Article 296 of the [EC] Treaty.’

4 Article 296 EC, which was applicable at the time of the facts in the main proceedings and was replaced, in the same terms, by Article 346 TFEU following the entry into force of the Treaty of Lisbon on 1 December 2009, stated:

‘1. The provisions of … [the EC] Treaty shall not preclude the application of the following rules:

(a) no Member State shall be obliged to supply information the disclosure of which it considers contrary to the essential interests of its security;

(b) any Member State may take such measures as it considers necessary for the protection of the essential interests of its security which are connected with the production of or trade in arms, munitions and war material; such measures shall not adversely affect the conditions of competition in the common market regarding products which are not intended for specifically military purposes.

2. The Council may, acting unanimously on a proposal from the Commission, make changes to the list, which it drew up on 15 April 1958, of the products to which the provisions of paragraph 1(b) apply.’

5 Council Decision 255/58 of 15 April 1958 established the list referred to in Article 296(2) EC, extracts of which are reproduced in Council document 14538/4/08 of 26 November 2008. The referring court refers to that list, in particular to points 11, 14 and 15 thereof, which read as follows:

‘The provisions of Article 296(b) of the [EC] Treaty are applicable to the war material, including nuclear arms, listed below:

11. Military electronic equipment.

...

14. Specialised parts and items of material included in this list insofar as they are of a military nature.

15. Machines, equipment and items exclusively designed for the study, manufacture, testing and control of arms, ammunitions and equipment of an exclusively military nature included in this list.’

6 Directive 2009/81/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 13 July 2009 on the coordination of procedures for the award of certain works contracts, supply contracts and service contracts by contracting authorities or entities in the fields of defence and security, and amending Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC (OJ 2009 L 216, p. 76), which the Member States were required to implement before 21 August 2011, provides as follows in recital 10 in its preamble:

‘For the purposes of this Directive, military equipment should be understood in particular as the product types included in the list of arms, munitions and war material adopted by the Council in its [list] … of 15 April 1958 ... . This list includes only equipment which is designed, developed and produced for specifically military purposes. … For the purposes of this Directive, military equipment should also cover products which, although initially designed for civilian use, are later adapted to military purposes to be used as arms, munitions or war material’.

Finnish law

7 Directive 2004/18 was transposed into Finnish law by Law No 348/2007 on public procurement (julkisista hankinnoista annettu laki) and by Decree No 614/2007 on public procurement (julkisista hankinnoista annettu asetus).

8 Paragraph 7(1) of that Law defines its scope as follows:

‘This Law shall not apply to contracts

(1) where they are to be kept confidential, where their performance must be accompanied by special security measures laid down by law, or where the essential security interests of the State so require;

(2) where their object is suited primarily to military purposes …

9 It is apparent from an administrative instruction issued by the Finnish Ministry of Defence on 28 May 2008 that, provisionally, public procurement contracts for military equipment intended for defence must comply with, inter alia, Order No 76/1995 issued by the Ministry of Defence on 17 March 1995.

10 Paragraph 1 of Order No 76/1995 defines products or services intended essentially for military purposes, to which Law No 348/2007 on public procurement is not applicable.

11 It is apparent from Paragraph 1 of, in conjunction with point M of the annex to, Order No 76/1995 that, essentially, this relates to ‘specialised equipment for military activities, training or military situation simulation drills, and [the] components, additional apparatus and equipment specially designed for these’.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the question referred 12 In the course of 2008, the Suomen Puolustusvoimien Teknillinen Tutkimuslaitos issued a call for tenders for tiltable turntable equipment to a value of EUR 1 650 000 without prior publication of a contract notice in the Official Journal of the European Union.

13 On 5 February 2008 it invited four economic operators, including InsTiimi, to submit tenders to it.

14 On 24 June 2008, pursuant to a ‘negotiated procedure’ which did not satisfy the requirements of one of the procurement procedures referred to in Directive 2004/18, the contract was awarded to a tenderer other than InsTiimi. On 25 June 2008, the subject-matter of the contract and the operation of the tiltable turntable equipment at issue in the main proceedings were described in a Finnish national daily newspaper.

15 As it took the view that the procedure ought to have complied with the rules set out in Directive 2004/18, InsTiimi brought an action before the Markkinaoikeus (Market Court) challenging the decision to award the contract at issue in the main proceedings.

16 The Markkinaoikeus dismissed the action since it regarded it as settled that that tiltable turntable equipment was suited primarily to military purposes and that the contracting authority intended to use it solely for such purposes.

17 The Markkinaoikeus accordingly concluded that that contract came under the exception provided for in Paragraph 7(1)(2) of Law No 348/2007 on public procurement.

18 InsTiimi appealed against that decision to the Korkein hallinto-oikeus (Supreme Administrative Court).

19 Before that court, InsTiimi submitted that the tiltable turntable constitutes a technical innovation from the civilian sector and is not war material. The technical implementation of the tiltable turntable equipment at issue in the main proceedings is, it contended, based on a combination of freely available materials, components and assembly systems, and its design is solely a matter of the appropriate selection and attachment of structural components in order to fulfil the requirements of the invitation to tender.

20 The Puolustusvoimat (Defence Forces), represented by the Pääesikunta (General Staff), contended before the referring court that that tiltable turntable equipment had been purchased for specifically military purposes and was intended, in particular, for the purposes of simulating combat situations. The tiltable turntable, it was argued, is used to simulate and practise military countermeasures against aerial reconnaissance from a variety of angles and target ‘acquisition’.

21 According to the argument put forward by the Puolustusvoimat, that tiltable turntable equipment is the essential component of an open-space measurement track, intended for electronic warfare measurements, simulations and drills, and it is consequently designed for the study of weapons intended for military use.

22 That same tiltable turntable equipment, it is argued, is a product within the meaning of point M of the annex to Order No 76/1995.

23 The referring court expresses uncertainty as to whether Directive 2004/18 applies in the case where the material which forms the subject-matter of the contract has a specifically military purpose but where there are also technical applications of that material in the civilian sector that are fundamentally similar.

24 Against that background, the Korkein hallinto-oikeus decided to stay proceedings and to refer the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

‘Is Directive [2004/18] applicable, having regard to Article 10 of that directive and to Article 296(b) [EC] and to the list … of the Council [of] 15 April 1958, to a procurement which otherwise falls within the scope of the directive, when according to the contracting entity the intended purpose of the object of procurement is specifically military, but there also exist largely identical technical applications of the object of procurement in the civilian market?’

Admissibility of the question referred 25 While not raising an objection of inadmissibility, the Finnish Government states, in its written observations, that the reference for a preliminary ruling does not contain information with regard to the measures which the contracting authority considers necessary for ‘the protection of the essential interests of [the] security’ of the Republic of Finland, within the terms of Article 296(1)(b) EC, this being the reason why it took the view that it was unable to rule on that condition for the application of that provision.

26 In that regard, it is necessary to state that the fact that the referring court does not seek an interpretation of that condition for the application of Article 296(1)(b) EC is not, of itself, such as to call into question the admissibility of that reference.

27 In the context of the procedure laid down in Article 267 TFEU, it is solely for the national court before which the dispute has been brought, and which must assume responsibility for the subsequent judicial decision, to determine, in the light of the particular circumstances of the case, both the need for a preliminary ruling in order to enable it to deliver judgment and the relevance of the questions which it submits to the Court. Consequently, where the questions submitted concern the interpretation of European Union law, the Court is in principle bound to give a ruling (see, inter alia, Case C-571/10 Kamberaj [2012] ECR, paragraph 40 and the case-law cited).

28 However, the Court must examine the circumstances in which cases are referred to it by the national court in order to assess whether it has jurisdiction (see Kamberaj, paragraph 41). The Court may refuse to rule on a question referred for a preliminary ruling by a national court only where it is quite obvious that the interpretation of EU law that is sought bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose, where the problem is hypothetical, or where the Court does not have before it the factual or legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted to it (see Case C-450/06 Varec [2008] I-581, paragraph 24).

29 In that regard, it is necessary to note that the question raised in the present case could be regarded as hypothetical and, consequently, as inadmissible only if it appeared clearly that, in the case in the main proceedings, the application of the derogation provided for in Article 296(1)(b) EC, to which Article 10 of Directive 2004/18 refers, could not, in any case, be justified by the Republic of Finland's essential security interests.

30 In the order for reference, without definitively indicating that, in this case, the contracting authority claimed such essential interests, the Korkein hallinto-oikeus restricts itself to stating that the Puolustusvoimat did not specify, in the manner advocated by the Commission in the interpretative communication on the application of Article 296 EC in the field of defence procurement (COM(2006) 779 final) of 7 December 2006, the essential security interests which were affected by the acquisition of the tiltable turntable equipment at issue in the main proceedings or the reasons why it was necessary not to apply the rules set out in Directive 2004/18 in this specific case.

31 In those circumstances, it is not obvious that the question referred is hypothetical in nature.

32 The reference for a preliminary ruling must therefore be considered to be admissible.

The question referred for a preliminary ruling

33 By its question, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Article 10 of Directive 2004/18, read in conjunction with Article 296(1)(b) EC, must be interpreted as authorising a Member State to set aside the procedures laid down by that directive in the case of a public contract awarded by a contracting authority in the field of defence for the acquisition of material which, although intended for specifically military purposes, may also be used for largely identical civilian applications.

34 It follows from Article 10 of Directive 2004/18, read in conjunction with Article 296(1)(b) EC, that the Member States may, for contracts awarded in the field of defence, take measures derogating from that directive where, first, 'trade in arms, munitions and war material' is concerned and, second, those measures appear necessary for the 'protection of the essential interests' of the security of the Member State concerned.

35 In this respect, it should be borne in mind that those provisions must, in accordance with settled case-law in respect of derogations from fundamental freedoms, be interpreted strictly (see, inter alia, as regards the derogations provided for in Article 296 EC, Case C-284/05 Commission v Finland [2009] ECR I-11705, paragraph 46 and the case-law cited). Although Article 296(1)(b) EC refers to measures which a Member State may consider necessary for the protection of the essential interests of its security, that article cannot, however, be read in such a way as to confer on Member States a power to depart from the provisions of the EC Treaty based on no more than reliance on those interests (Commission v Finland, paragraph 47).

36 The types of products included in the Council list of 15 April 1958, to which Article 296(2) EC expressly refers, in principle come within the possibility of derogation provided for by Article 296(1)(b) EC.

37 It is for the referring court to determine whether a product such as the tiltable turntable equipment at issue in the main proceedings may be classified in one or other of the categories featuring in that list.

38 However, Article 296(1)(b) EC stipulates that measures which the Member States may thus take must not adversely affect the conditions of competition in the common market regarding products which are not intended for specifically military purposes.

39 Consequently, it is necessary, first, to bear in mind that a contracting authority cannot invoke Article 296(1)(b) EC to justify a derogating measure when purchasing material which is certainly for civilian use and possibly for military use (see, to that effect, Case C-337/05 Commission v Italy [2008] ECR I-2173, paragraphs 48 and 49).

40 Second, even if a product comes within one or other of the categories of materials included in the Council list of 15 April 1958, that product can, if it has technical applications for civilian use which are largely identical, be considered to be intended for specifically military purposes, within the terms of Article 296 EC, only if such use is not solely that which the contracting authority intends to confer on it but also, as the Advocate General has noted in point 48 of her Opinion, that which results from the intrinsic characteristics of a piece of equipment specially designed, developed or modified significantly for those purposes.

41 In this regard, it must, indeed, be noted that the word ‘military’ used in point 11 of that list and the words ‘insofar as they are of a military nature’ and ‘exclusively designed’ used respectively in points 14 and 15 of that list indicate that the products referred to in those points must, in objective terms, have a specifically military nature.

42 Finally, it is necessary to reiterate that, recently, in recital 10 in the preamble to Directive 2009/81, the EU legislature stated that the term ‘military equipment’, as used in that directive, should cover products which, although initially designed for civilian use, are later adapted to military purposes to be used as arms, munitions or war material.

43 Material such as the tiltable turntable equipment at issue in the main proceedings is deemed, according to the information provided to the Court, to facilitate the carrying-out of electromagnetic measurements and the simulation of combat situations. It could, therefore, be characterised as a component of military equipment for the testing and control of arms, within the meaning of point 15 of the Council list of 15 April 1958, read together with points 11 and 14 of that list, this being a matter for the referring court to determine.

44 However, such tiltable turntable equipment, which the contracting authority intends to use only for military purposes, can be considered to be intended specifically for such purposes, within the terms of Article 296(1)(b) EC, only if it is established that, unlike the similar material intended for civilian uses invoked by the applicant in the main proceedings, that equipment, by virtue of its intrinsic characteristics, may be regarded as having been specially designed and developed, also as a result of substantial modifications, for such purposes, this also being a matter for the referring court to determine.

45 It should be added that if, in the light of the foregoing considerations, the referring court should find that the product at issue in the main proceedings comes within the material scope of Article 296(1)(b) EC, to which Article 10 of Directive 2004/18 refers, it would be for that court to determine whether the Member State which seeks to take advantage of that Treaty provision can show that it is necessary to have recourse to the derogation provided for in that provision in order to protect its essential security interests (see, to that effect, inter alia, Commission v Finland, paragraph 49) and whether the need to protect those essential interests could not have been addressed within a competitive tendering procedure such as that specified by Directive 2004/18 (see, to that effect, Commission v Italy, paragraph 53).

46 Having regard to the foregoing considerations, the answer to the question referred is that Article 10 of Directive 2004/18, read in conjunction with Article 296(1)(b) EC, must be interpreted as authorising a Member State to set aside the procedures laid down by that directive in the case of a public contract awarded by a contracting authority in the field of defence for the acquisition of material which, although intended for specifically military purposes, also presents possibilities for essentially identical civilian applications only if that material, by virtue of its intrinsic characteristics, may be regarded as having been specially designed and developed, also as a result of substantial modifications, for such purposes, this being a matter for the referring court to determine.

Costs

47 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 10 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, read in conjunction with Article 296(1)(b) EC, must be interpreted as authorising a Member State to set aside the procedures laid down by that directive in the case of a public contract awarded by a contracting authority in the field of defence for the acquisition of material which, although intended for specifically military purposes, also presents possibilities for essentially identical civilian applications only if that material, by virtue of its intrinsic characteristics, may be regarded as having been specially designed and developed, also as a result of substantial modifications, for such purposes, this being a matter for the referring court to determine.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL
KOKOTT
delivered on 19 January 2012 (1)

Case C-615/10

Insinööritoimisto InsTiimi Oy

(Reference for a preliminary ruling from the Korkein hallinto-oikeus (Finland))

(Public supply contracts — Article 10 of Directive 2004/18/EC — Article 296 EC — Protection of a Member State's essential security interests — Trade in arms — Products which are procured by the contracting authorities specifically for military purposes, but for which there exists a largely identical civilian application — Turntable equipment for electromagnetic measurements)

I – Introduction

1. The conditions under which the Member States may derogate from European Union legislation in connection with their defence and their armed forces repeatedly give rise to legal disputes. (2)

2. In the present case, the Court is called upon to clarify under what conditions a Member State's armed forces may circumvent the rules of European procurement law in awarding public supply contracts for the procurement of products which are intended for military use.

3. In 2008, the Finnish Defence Forces awarded a contract for the supply of turntable equipment (3) for electromagnetic measurements, which was to be used for simulating and practising military situations in 'electronic warfare'. The procurement procedures prescribed in Directive 2004/18/EC (4) were not fully complied with.

4. A Finnish Court now raises the question of how the exception for public contracts in the field of defence, laid down in Article 10 of Directive 2004/18 in conjunction with Article 296 EC (now Article 346 TFEU), is to be construed. On the basis of its judgment in Agusta, (5) in answering this question referred for a preliminary ruling, the Court will be required, in particular, to clarify whether products may be regarded as 'intended for specifically military purposes' where, in addition to their military use, there is also a largely similar civilian application.

5. Unlike the helicopters in Agusta, the turntable equipment at issue here was purchased by the contracting authority for purely military purposes, with the result that it is not a 'dual-use item' in the stricter sense of the expression. However, according to the findings in the order for reference, it is perfectly conceivable that private organisations and undertakings could use such turntable equipment.

II – Legislative framework

6. The Union-law framework of this case is formed by Article 10 of Directive 2004/18 in conjunction with Article 296 EC.

7. Under the heading ‘Defence procurement’, Article 10 of Directive 2004/18 contained, in its original version, (6) this clarification of the scope of the rules governing public contracts:

‘This Directive shall apply to public contracts awarded by contracting authorities in the field of defence, subject to Article 296 of the Treaty.’

8. Until it was replaced by Article 346 TFEU following the entry into force of the Treaty of Lisbon, (7) Article 296 EC (formerly Article 223 of the EEC Treaty) was worded as follows:

‘1. The provisions of this Treaty shall not preclude the application of the following rules:

(b) any Member State may take such measures as it considers necessary for the protection of the essential interests of its security which are connected with the production of or trade in arms, munitions and war material; such measures shall not adversely affect the conditions of competition in the common market regarding products which are not intended for specifically military purposes.

2. The Council may, acting unanimously on a proposal from the Commission, make changes to the list, which it drew up on 15 April 1958, of the products to which the provisions of paragraph 1(b) apply.’

9. Council Decision 255/58 of 15 April 1958, which defined the list mentioned in Article 296(2) EC (also: ‘the 1958 list’), includes the following provisions: (8)

‘The list of the arms, munition and war materiel, including nuclear arms, to which the provisions of Article 223 paragraph 1(b) of the Treaty are applicable is given below:

5. Military fire control equipment:

(a) firing computers and guidance systems in infra-red and other night guidance devices;

(b) telemeters, position indicators, altimeters;

(c) electronic tracking components, gyroscopic, optical and acoustic;

(d) bomb sights and gun sights, periscopes for the equipment specified in this list.

11. Military electronic equipment.

14. Specialised parts and items of material included in this list insofar as they are of a military nature.

15. Machines, equipment and items exclusively designed for the study, manufacture, testing and control of arms, munitions and apparatus of an exclusively military nature included in this list.’

10. Reference should also be made to recital 10 in the preamble to Directive 2009/81:

‘For the purposes of this Directive, military equipment should be understood in particular as the product types included in the list of arms, munitions and war material adopted by the Council in its Decision 255/58 of 15 April 1958, and Member States may limit themselves to this list only when transposing this Directive. This list includes only equipment which is designed, developed and produced for specifically military purposes. However, the list is generic and is to be interpreted in a broad way in the light of the evolving character of technology, procurement policies and military requirements which lead to the development of new types of equipment, for instance on the basis of the Common Military List of the Union. For the purposes of this Directive, military equipment should also cover products which, although initially designed for civilian use, are later adapted to military purposes to be used as arms, munitions or war material.'

A – National law

11. In Finland Directive 2004/18 was implemented by Law No 348/2007 on public procurement (9) ('Law on public procurement'), the scope of which is subject to the following limitation under paragraph 7(1):

'This law shall not apply to contracts

(1) where they are to be kept confidential, where their performance must be accompanied by special security measures laid down by law, or where the essential security interests of the State so requires;

(2) where their object is suited primarily to military purposes.'

12. Furthermore, according to an administrative instruction issued by the Finnish Ministry of Defence on 28 May 2008, until further notice, defence procurement contracts must comply with, inter alia, Order No 76 issued by the Ministry of Defence on 17 March 1995.

13. Paragraph 1 of Order No 76 defines products or services intended primarily for military purposes, to which the Law on public procurement is not applicable. This applies in particular to 'specialised equipment for military activities, training or military situation simulation drills, and components, additional apparatus and equipment specially designed for these', according to paragraph 1 in conjunction with point M of the Annex to that order.

III – Facts and main proceedings

14. In 2008, the Finnish Defence Forces Technical Research Centre (10) conducted a tender procedure for the procurement of turntable equipment for electromagnetic measurements, to a value of EUR 1 650 000. To that end, on 5 February 2008 it invited four undertakings to submit tenders, including the engineering firm Insinööritoimisto InsTiimi Oy (InsTiimi).

15. The contract was awarded in a 'negotiated procedure' which, according to the information provided in the order for reference, differs from the procurement procedures prescribed in Directive 2004/18. InsTiimi takes the view that the procurement procedure should have complied with the rules of Directive 2004/18 and has therefore brought the main proceedings before the Finnish courts. The Finnish Defence Forces, represented by the General Staff of the Finnish Defence Forces, (11) is also a party to those proceedings.

16. Before the Markkinaoikeus, (12) the court of first instance, the appeal lodged by InsTiimi was unsuccessful. The Markkinaoikeus regarded it as settled that the turntable equipment was suited primarily to military purposes and that the contracting authority intended it solely for military purposes. The Markkinaoikeus thus concluded that the contested contract came under the exception provided for in paragraph 7(1)(2) of the Law on public procurement.

17. Following an appeal lodged by InsTiimi, the case is now at second instance before the Korkein hallinto-oikeus, (13) the referring court.

18. Before that court, InsTiimi submitted that the turntable was a technical innovation from the civilian sector and is not designed to be war material. It is an item of general-purpose auxiliary equipment for examination and a base which does not in itself provide any new information on the object of examination. It also submits that the technical implementation of the contested contract is based entirely on combining freely available materials, components and assemblies, and that the design involved is solely a matter of the appropriate selection and attachment of these structural components in order to fulfil the requirements of the invitation to tender.

19. The Defence Forces contended before the Korkein hallinto-oikeus that the turntable had been purchased for specifically military purposes and was also intended especially for purposes of simulation of military situations. The turntable would be used to simulate and practise military countermeasures against reconnaissance and target acquisition which takes place from overhead threat angles. A threat-emulating sensor can only be brought to the angle corresponding to the threat by tilting the target, for example a tank which is placed on the turntable, to the correct angle by means of the turntable.

20. According to the Defence Forces, the turntable is an essential part of the open space measurement track, intended for electronic warfare measurements, simulations and drills, which is being built for it, and it is therefore designed for the study of weapons intended for military use. The turntable is a product within the meaning of point M of the Annex to Order No 76 of the Ministry of Defence.

IV – Reference for a preliminary ruling and procedure before the Court

21. By interlocutory order of 13 December 2010, the Korkein hallinto-oikeus stayed its proceedings and referred the following question to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

Is Directive 2004/18/EC applicable, having regard to Article 10 of that directive and to Article 346(1)(b) of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union and to the list of arms, munitions and war material adopted by decision of the Council on 15 April 1958, to a procurement which otherwise falls within the scope of the directive, when according to the contracting entity the intended purpose of the object of procurement is specifically military, but there also exist largely identical technical applications of the object of procurement in the civilian market?

22. In the proceedings before the Court, in addition to the two parties to the main proceedings — InsTiimi and the Defence Forces — the Finnish, Czech and Portuguese Governments and the European Commission submitted written observations. With the exception of the Czech and Portuguese Governments, the same parties also took part in the hearing on 12 December 2011.

V – Assessment

23. The answer to the present reference for a preliminary ruling hinges on the interpretation of Article 296 EC (now Article 346 TFEU), to which reference is made in Article 10 of Directive 2004/18.

24. The first half of Article 296(1)(b) EC permits any Member State unilaterally (14) to take such measures as it considers necessary for the protection of the essential interests of its security which are connected with the production of or trade in arms, munitions and war material. Directive 2004/18 refers to that provision in Article 10 for the purpose of defining its own scope.

25. As the Commission rightly states and the Finnish Government also acknowledges, the first half of Article 296(1)(b) EC makes the adoption of unilateral national measures dependent on two cumulative conditions being satisfied:

– First, the measures must be connected with the production of or trade in arms, munitions and war material.

– Second, the measures to be taken must appear necessary for the protection of the essential security interests of the Member State concerned.

26. With its reference for a preliminary ruling, the referring court has the first of these two conditions specifically in view: it addresses only the notion of ‘products intended for specifically military purposes’. However, the second condition cannot be disregarded completely either in the assessment of the admissibility of the reference for a preliminary ruling (see immediately below under section A) or in the substantive appraisal of the question referred (see further below under section B). I will therefore also consider this second condition below, in so far as is necessary, as several of the parties have done, not least at the hearing.

A – Admissibility of the reference for a preliminary ruling

27. The fact that in its order for reference the referring court addresses only the first criterion under Article 296(1)(b) EC — the notion of 'products intended for specifically military purposes' — cannot, in itself, call into question the admissibility of its reference for a preliminary ruling.

28. The question referred to the Court for a preliminary ruling would have to be regarded as hypothetical if it were established that in the present case the second cumulative criterion under Article 296(1)(b) EC was not satisfied in any event, i.e. if the derogation from the procurement rules laid down in Directive 2004/18 could not be justified by Finland's essential security interests. However, there is not sufficient evidence to that effect in the case before the Court.

29. The order for reference does not state definitively whether or not the contracting authority in the present case has relied on the protection of Finland's essential security interests in accordance with the second criterion. The referring court merely states that the Defence Forces had failed to specify, as recommended by the European Commission, (15) which essential security interest is connected with the procurement of the turntable equipment and why the non-application of Directive 2004/18 was necessary in this specific case. The Finnish Government and the General Staff of the Defence Forces nevertheless claim that such security interests were invoked in the national proceedings.

30. The referring court also states that the application made by InsTiimi would have to be dismissed as inadmissible if the public contract does not fall within the scope of Directive 2004/18 and of Law No 348/2007. In order to be able to assess this, it is also necessary to clarify the first criterion, the notion of 'products intended for specifically military purposes'.

31. Under these circumstances, it cannot be assumed that it would be obvious that the question referred has no relevance to the decision. (16) According to settled case-law, that question continues to enjoy a presumption of relevance. (17)

32. Consequently, there are no reservations to answering the question referred for a preliminary ruling.

B – Substantive appraisal of the question

33. By its question, the referring court is essentially seeking to ascertain whether the award of a public contract in the field of defence may disregard the rules laid down in Directive 2004/18 where the intended purpose of the object of procurement is specifically military, but there also exist largely similar civilian applications.

34. The background to this question is that turntable equipment like that procured in the present case is not, according to claims made by InsTiimi which have not been refuted, intended primarily for military purposes, but has predominantly civilian applications.

35. The parties disagree sharply. Whilst InsTiimi and the Commission take the view that the rules of Directive 2004/18 should have been complied with in the present case, the Defence Forces and all the Governments participating in the proceedings consider that a derogation from that directive was justified under Article 296(1)(b) EC.

36. In principle, the European Union legislation governing the award of public contracts also applies in the field of defence. This followed, at the time of the award of the contested contract, from Article 10 of Directive 2004/18. For the period after 21 August 2011, it is also confirmed in Directive 2009/81. (18) The application of the European Union legislation governing the award of public contracts will strengthen freedom of movement of goods, freedom of establishment and freedom to provide services within the Union and contribute to the realisation of the internal market. (19)

37. At the same time, however, European Union law recognises the legitimate interest of the Member States in the protection of their essential security interests, as expressed in particular in Article 296 EC. Article 10 of Directive 2004/18, which expressly refers to that Treaty provision, demonstrates the tension which can arise in public procurement between the principle of the internal market and national security interests.

38. Under Article 10 of Directive 2004/18 in conjunction with Article 296(1)(b) EC, a Member State may derogate from the European Union legislation on the award of public contracts where the measures are connected with trade in arms, munitions and war material (first criterion) and where a derogation from the European Union legislation governing the award of public contracts appears necessary for the protection of the essential security interests of that Member State (second criterion).

39. In view of the key importance of the fundamental freedoms and the principle of the internal market in the system of the Treaties, (20) these criteria must be given a strict interpretation in accordance with the case-law on Article 296 EC. (21)

1. First criterion: military products

40. The first half of Article 296(1)(b) EC is applicable to arms, munitions and war material, i.e. military products. The Council defined the specific categories of items covered in the 1958 list.

41. I share the view taken by the General Court of the European Union (then the Court of First Instance) (22) that the substantive scope of Article 296(1)(b) EC is regulated exhaustively by the 1958 list, to which express reference is made in Article 296(2) EC. (23) The General Court rightly pointed out that the exception contained in Article 296(1)(b) EC is not intended to apply to activities relating to products other than the military products identified on the 1958 list. (24)

42. A derogation from the procurement procedures prescribed in Directive 2004/18 on the basis of Article 296(1)(b) EC therefore requires, first of all, that a product like the contested turntable equipment can actually be classified in one of the categories of items included in the 1958 list. This will have to be examined and evaluated in detail by the referring court, which has exclusive jurisdiction to establish and evaluate the facts.

43. Because, according to the Finnish Defence Forces, the abovementioned turntable equipment allows electromagnetic measurements to be taken and is used for the simulation of military situations where target acquisition is practised, it could be a component of equipment for testing and control of arms (point 15 in conjunction with points 11 and 14 of the 1958 list). Theoretically, the turntable equipment could also be regarded as a part of a position indicator or a tracking component (point 5(b) and (c) in conjunction with point 14 of the 1958 list). (25)

44. However, the mere fact that the turntable equipment can possibly be classified in one of the categories of items in the 1958 list does not, as such, justify a derogation from the European Union legislation governing the award of public contracts. The mention of a certain item in the 1958 list is a necessary, but insufficient condition for reliance on Article 10 of Directive 2004/18 in conjunction with the first half of Article 296(1)(b) EC.

45. The application of the first half of Article 296(1)(b) EC also requires that the item in question be intended for specifically military purposes. (26) This follows a contrario from the second half of that provision, which mentions ‘products which are not intended for specifically military purposes’. The 1958 list likewise contains numerous wordings which suggest that a product within the meaning of Article 296(1)(b) EC must not only be classified generically in a certain category of items, but must also be intended for specifically military purposes. (27) This has also been recently confirmed by the Union legislature. (28)

46. It is not possible to infer whether a product is intended for specifically military purposes solely from the fact that a Member State’s armed forces are the purchaser or another public authority purchases the product for the armed forces. Otherwise, any pencil could become a military product merely because it is purchased for the military. This would run counter to the requirement of a strict interpretation of Article 296(1)(b) EC and impair the principle of the internal market excessively.

47. Nor is it sufficient that a product is merely suited to military use and thus will possibly be used for military purposes. The Court ruled in Agusta that the helicopters which had been purchased by the Italian State for a long time, without any competitive tendering procedure, did not come under Article 296(1)(b) EC because they were certainly for civilian use and only possibly for military use. (29)

48. The application of Article 296(1)(b) EC requires that a product, more than being merely suited to possible military use, has a specifically military purpose, both subjectively and objectively. Thus, the item in question must be intended for specifically military purposes not only according to its specific use defined by the contracting authority (30) (subjectively), but also according to its design and its characteristics (31) (objectively).

49. Such a specifically military purpose may be obvious in the case of many products. One need only think of the anti-tank guns, bombs and warships included in the 1958 list. (32) They are designed as purely military equipment (objective purpose) and purchased by the contracting authorities solely for military purposes (subjective purpose).

50. On the other hand, in the case of other products such as the vehicles, aircraft, explosives, ammunition and telemeters also included in the 1958 list, the specifically military purpose must be positively demonstrated (33) because a civilian use is also conceivable.

51. That is precisely the situation in the present case.

52. It is certainly clear that subjectively the contested turntable equipment had a specifically military use: according to the intentions of the contracting authority, it was to be used by the Finnish Defence Forces in the simulation of military situations and in practising target acquisition. In this respect the present case therefore differs from the Agusta case, in which no specifically military purpose could be established for the purchased products. (34)

53. However, there are serious doubts objectively as to the status of that turntable equipment as a product with a specifically military purpose. At the hearing the parties were not in agreement as to whether turntable equipment like that at issue here would find a buyer on the civilian market in the event of its subsequent sale by the Defence Forces. However, according to the information provided by the referring court, which alone is relevant in preliminary ruling proceedings, (35) there also exist largely similar technical applications for such turntable equipment on the civilian market. Similarly, InsTiimi makes the — unrefuted — argument that turntables could also be used in the civilian sector; indeed they were even initially designed for civilian use and only later were actually made useable for military purposes.

54. Such items which, although initially designed for civilian use, are later adapted to military purposes, are not intended in principle, according to the will of the Union legislature, (36) to fall outside the scope of the procedures for the award of public contracts under European Union law. (37)

55. It certainly cannot be ruled out that the turntable purchased in the present case was modified with a view to its military use in such essential respects that it became an entirely different product from the common product in the civilian sector. Such adaptation could have been made, for example, in connection with the installation of the turntable in a specially designed ‘open space measurement track’ intended for ‘electronic warfare’ measurements, simulations and drills.

56. Should there have there been such a fundamental modification — which the referring court will have to examine — the turntable in question would have acquired a specifically military purpose not only subjectively, but also objectively. Then (and only then) would the contracting authority have rightly classified it as a military product for the purposes of the first half of Article 296(1)(b) EC.

57. If, on the other hand, in the main proceedings the referring court’s current assumption were confirmed that, on the basis of its design and its characteristics — even as part of a specialist military installation for taking electromagnetic measurements and simulating operations — the contested turntable equipment is essentially no different from the turntables commonly used in the civilian sector, it would objectively have no specifically military purpose, even though the contracting authority may have envisaged and purchased the turntable equipment for a specifically military use.

58. In the latter case, the procurement procedures prescribed by European Union law should have been applied in the procurement of the turntable in question.

59. In summary:

An item which, according to the contracting authority, is to be used for specifically military purposes, but which, viewed objectively, is essentially no different from similar items used in the civilian sector cannot, through reliance on Article 296(1)(b) EC in conjunction with Article 10 of Directive 2004/18, be excluded from the procurement procedures prescribed in that directive.

2. Second criterion: protection of essential security interests

60. Even if the contested turntable were to be classified as a military product (first criterion for the application of Article 296(1)(b) EC), the referring court would still have to examine whether in the present case a derogation from the procurement procedures prescribed by European Union law appeared necessary for the protection of Finland's essential security interests (second criterion for the application of Article 296(1)(b) EC).

61. In this regard, the Court has held that no more than reliance by a Member State on its security interests does not justify a derogation from European Union law. (38)

62. Certainly the relevant Member State is to be granted a wide discretion in the definition of its essential security interests; (39) this is shown by the use of the words 'as it considers necessary' in Article 296(1)(b) EC. Nevertheless, the national authorities bear the burden of proof to demonstrate that the conditions laid down by that provision are satisfied. (40)

63. As the Commission has rightly argued, the contracting authority should demonstrate in the present case that the derogation from the procurement procedures prescribed in Directive 2004/18 appeared necessary for the protection of Finland's essential security interests (41) and was proportionate. (42)

64. It should be noted that any confidentiality requirement in relation to certain military information does not, in itself, prevent the use of a competitive tendering procedure for the award of a contract. (43) It is also possible in a procurement procedure as laid down in European Union law to take the necessary precautions for the protection of sensitive information. (44)

65. In the present case, according to the unrefuted claims made by InsTiimi, the contracting authority is said to have reported in detail on the item purchased and the operation of the turntable equipment in a Finnish daily newspaper. Under these circumstances, it would seem unlikely that there could have been a legitimate confidentiality interest on the part of the Finnish State in the procurement procedure.

66. Certain derogations from the procurement procedures prescribed by European Union law may nevertheless be justified by the fact that a Member State does not wish simply to disclose security-related information to foreign undertakings or undertakings controlled by foreign nationals, in particular undertakings or persons from non-member countries. A Member State can also legitimately ensure that it does not become dependent on non-member countries or on undertakings from non-member countries for its arms supplies. Both points were rightly highlighted by the Czech Government.

67. However, in the present case there is likewise — as far as can be seen — absolutely no evidence of such security concerns on the part of the contracting authority. But all this will ultimately have to be assessed by the referring court in a full evaluation of all the circumstances of the individual case.

VI – Conclusion

68. In the light of the above arguments, I propose that the Court give the following answer to the question asked by the Korkein hallinto-oikeus:

An item which, according to the contracting authority, is to be used for specifically military purposes, but which, viewed objectively, is essentially no different from similar items used in the civilian sector cannot, through reliance on Article 296(1)(b) EC in conjunction with Article 10 of Directive 2004/18, be excluded from the procurement procedures prescribed in that directive.

23 – Admittedly, this does not mean that the list cannot be given a contemporary interpretation and application in order to take account of current developments. According to recital 10 in the preamble to Directive 2009/81, 'the list is generic and is to be interpreted in a broad way in the light of the evolving character of technology, procurement policies and military requirements which lead to the development of new types of equipment … ' (see also the Commission Communication, cited in footnote 15, section 3). The list is thus applicable not only to the military products known in 1958, but also to those used today in the Member States' armed forces, provided they can be classified under the categories described in the list.

24 – Case T-26/01 Fiocchi munizioni v Commission, cited in footnote 22, paragraph 61.

25 – Classification in point 5 of the 1958 list requires the item to be ‘military fire control equipment’. A link to ‘fire control’ could, in principle, exist because the contested turntable equipment is used to simulate and practise ‘target acquisition’ in ‘electronic warfare’ and is ultimately intended to prepare ‘countermeasures against overhead reconnaissance’. However, no such connection with fire control was taken to exist by the parties at the hearing before the Court.

26 – Case C-337/05 Commission v Italy (‘Agusta’), cited in footnote 5, paragraph 47, and Case C-157/06 Commission v Italy [2008] ECR I-7313, paragraph 26.

27 – See, for example, points 5 and 11 (‘military’) and point 14 of the 1958 list (‘insofar as they are of a military nature’).

28 – ‘[The 1958 list] includes only equipment which is designed, developed and produced for specifically military purposes’ (second sentence of recital 10 in the preamble to Directive 2009/81).

29 – Case C-337/05 Commission v Italy (‘Agusta’), cited in footnote 5, in particular paragraphs 48 and 49; see also Case C-157/06 Commission v Italy, cited in footnote 26, paragraph 27.

30 – See Case C-337/05 Commission v Italy (‘Agusta’), cited in footnote 5, in particular paragraphs 48 and 49, where reference is made to the purpose defined by the contracting authority.

31 – See also recital 10 in the preamble to Directive 2009/81, according to which the 1958 list ‘includes only equipment which is designed, developed and produced for specifically military purposes’ (emphasis added); see also the Commission Communication (cited in footnote 15, section 3), which mentions ‘equipment which is of purely military nature and purpose’ (emphasis also in the original).

32 – Points 2(a), 4 and 9(a) of the 1958 list.

33 – Points 3, 5(a), 6, 8(b) and 10 of the 1958 list.

34 – Case C-337/05 Commission v Italy (‘Agusta’), cited in footnote 5, in particular paragraphs 48 and 49.

35 – Case C-475/99 Ambulanz Glöckner [2001] ECR I-8089, paragraph 10; Joined Cases C-482/01 and C-493/01 Orfanopoulos and Oliveri [2004] ECR I-5257, paragraph 42; and Case C-382/08 Neukirchinger [2011] ECR I-139, paragraph 41.

36 – Last sentence of recital 10 in the preamble to Directive 2009/81. Although this statement came from a legislative act which is not applicable to the present case ratione temporis, there is no obvious reason not to take account of the underlying evaluations in interpreting Directive 2004/18 in the relevant version for the main proceedings. In any case, recital 10 essentially makes clarifications regarding the meaning of the 1958 list, as it was to be understood until now.

37 – Similarly, the Court has held that a Member State may not rely on Article 296 EC in order to exempt from customs duties imports of dual-use material for both civilian and military use, 'whether or not such material was imported exclusively for military purposes' (see Case C-294/05 Commission v Sweden, paragraph 53, and Case C-387/05 Commission v Italy, paragraph 55, cited in footnote 2).

vu la procédure écrite, vu la décision prise, l'avocat général entendu, de juger l'affaire sans conclusions,

rend le présent

Arrêt

1 Par sa requête, la Commission européenne demande à la Cour de constater que, en ayant passé, en recourant à une procédure négociée sans publication préalable d'un avis de marché, des marchés publics ayant pour objet des services complémentaires de cadastrage et d'aménagement urbain qui ne figuraient pas dans le contrat initial conclu par les communes de Vassilika, de Kassandra, d'Egnatia et d'Arethousa, la République hellénique a manqué aux obligations qui lui incombent en vertu des articles 8 et 11, paragraphe 3, de la directive 92/50/CEE du Conseil, du 18 juin 1992, portant coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de services (JO L 209, p. 1), telle que modifiée par la directive 97/52/CE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 13 octobre 1997 (JO L 328, p. 1, ci-après la «directive 92/50»), ainsi que des articles 20 et 31, point 4, de la directive 2004/18/CE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 31 mars 2004, relative à la coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de travaux, de fournitures et de services (JO L 134, p. 14).

Le cadre juridique

La réglementation de l'Union

La directive 92/50

2 Selon l'article 1er, sous b), de la directive 92/50, sont considérées comme «pouvoirs adjudicateurs», notamment, les collectivités territoriales.

3 Aux termes de l'article 3, paragraphe 2, de cette directive:

«Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs veillent à ce qu'il n'y ait pas de discrimination entre les différents prestataires de services.»

4 Selon l'article 7 de la directive 92/50:

«1. a) La présente directive s'applique:

[...]

– aux marchés publics de services ayant pour objet des services figurant à l'annexe I A [...]

[...]

ii) passés par les pouvoirs adjudicateurs désignés à l'article 1er point b) autres que ceux mentionnés à l'annexe I de la directive 93/36/CEE [du Conseil, du 14 juin 1993, portant coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de fournitures (JO L 199, p. 1)] et dont la valeur estimée hors [taxe sur la valeur ajoutée] égale ou dépasse l'équivalent en écus de 200 000 [droits de tirage spéciaux (DTS)].

[...]»

5 Ladite annexe I A, intitulée «Services au sens de l'article 8», vise, notamment, sous la catégorie 12, les «services d'aménagement urbain» ainsi que les «services connexes de consultations scientifiques et techniques».

6 Il est constant que les collectivités territoriales grecques ne sont pas mentionnées à l'annexe I de la directive 93/36.

7 L'article 8 de la directive 92/50 dispose:

«Les marchés qui ont pour objet des services figurant à l'annexe I A sont passés conformément aux dispositions des titres III à VI.»

8 Figurant sous le titre III de cette même directive, intitulé «Choix des procédures de passation et règles applicables aux concours», l'article 11, paragraphe 3, de celle-ci prévoit:

«Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs peuvent passer leurs marchés publics de services en recourant à une procédure négociée sans publication préalable d'un avis de marché dans les cas suivants:

e) pour les services complémentaires ne figurant pas dans le projet initialement envisagé ou dans le premier contrat conclu, mais qui, à la suite d'une circonstance imprévue, sont devenus nécessaires à l'exécution du service tel qu'il y est décrit, à condition que l'attribution soit faite au prestataire qui exécute ce service:

– lorsque ces services complémentaires ne peuvent être techniquement ou économiquement séparés du marché principal sans inconvénient majeur pour les pouvoirs adjudicateurs,

ou

– lorsque ces services, quoiqu'ils soient séparables de l'exécution du marché initial, sont strictement nécessaires à son perfectionnement.

Toutefois, la valeur cumulée estimée des marchés passés pour les services complémentaires ne doit pas dépasser 50 % du montant du marché principal;

[...]»

La directive 2004/18

9 La directive 2004/18 a abrogé, notamment, les articles 3, 8 et 11 de la directive 92/50, avec effet à compter du 31 janvier 2006, date à laquelle les États membres devaient avoir mis en vigueur les dispositions législatives, réglementaires et administratives pour se conformer à la directive 2004/18.

10 Selon l'article 1er, paragraphe 9, de cette directive, sont considérées comme «pouvoirs adjudicateurs», notamment, les collectivités territoriales.

11 Aux termes de l'article 2 de ladite directive:

«Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs traitent les opérateurs économiques sur un pied d'égalité, de manière non discriminatoire et agissent avec transparence.»

12 En vertu de l'article 7 de la directive 2004/18, celle-ci s'applique aux marchés publics de services qui ne sont pas exclus en vertu des exceptions prévues par cette directive et dont la valeur estimée hors taxe sur la valeur ajoutée est égale ou supérieure à 249 000 euros lorsque les marchés sont passés par des pouvoirs adjudicateurs autres que ceux visés à l'annexe IV de ladite directive. Cette annexe, sous la rubrique «Grèce», ne mentionne pas les collectivités territoriales.

13 L'article 20 de la directive 2004/18 dispose:

«Les marchés qui ont pour objet des services figurant à l'annexe II A sont passés conformément aux articles 23 à 55.»

14 Ladite annexe vise, notamment, sous la catégorie 12, les «services d'aménagement urbain» ainsi que les «services connexes de consultations scientifiques et techniques».

15 L'article 31 de la directive 2004/18, intitulé «Cas justifiant le recours à la procédure négociée sans publication d'un avis de marché», prévoit:

«Les pouvoirs adjudicateurs peuvent passer leurs marchés publics en recourant à une procédure négociée sans publication préalable d'un avis de marché dans les cas suivants:

4) dans le cas des marchés publics de travaux et marchés publics de services:

a) pour les travaux ou services complémentaires qui ne figurent pas dans le projet initialement envisagé ni dans le contrat initial et qui sont devenus nécessaires, à la suite d'une circonstance imprévue, à l'exécution de l'ouvrage ou du service tel qu'il y est décrit, à condition que l'attribution soit faite à l'opérateur économique qui exécute cet ouvrage ou ce service:

– lorsque ces travaux ou services complémentaires ne peuvent être techniquement ou économiquement séparés du marché initial sans inconvénient majeur pour les pouvoirs adjudicateurs,

ou

– lorsque ces travaux ou services, quoiqu'ils soient séparables de l'exécution du marché initial, sont strictement nécessaires à son perfectionnement.

Toutefois, le montant cumulé des marchés passés pour les travaux ou services complémentaires ne doit pas dépasser 50 % du montant du marché initial.

[...]»

La réglementation nationale

16 La loi 3316/2005 relative à l'attribution et à l'exécution de marchés publics relatifs à l'élaboration d'études et à la prestation de services connexes et autres dispositions (FEK A' 42/22.2.2005) et le décret présidentiel 60/2007 (FEK A' 64/16.3.2007) ont adapté les procédures d'attribution et d'exécution des marchés publics relatifs à la réalisation d'études, prévues par le droit hellénique, aux dispositions de la directive 2004/18. Ils régissent l'attribution et l'exécution des marchés relatifs à la réalisation d'études et à la prestation de services connexes dont les résumés des avis de marché ont été publiés après le 23 février 2005.

17 Selon l'article 45, paragraphe 1, de la loi 3316/2005, l'attribution et l'exécution des marchés relatifs à l'élaboration d'études et à la prestation de services connexes dont les résumés des avis de marché ont été publiés avant le 23 février 2005 sont régies par les dispositions du cadre juridique antérieur, à savoir la loi 716/1977 relative au registre des experts et à l'attribution et à l'élaboration d'études (FEK A' 295/5.10.1977) et le décret présidentiel d'application 194/1979 (FEK A' 53/15.9.1979).

18 Conformément à la loi 716/1977, la rémunération de l'expert pour l'ensemble de l'étude est estimée au préalable mais ne correspond pas à la rémunération finale versée, la rémunération contractuelle étant déterminée par le devis soumis pour la première fois par le contractant, en ce qui concerne l'objet contractuel initial, et approuvé par le service du pouvoir adjudicateur. Les éventuels contrats complémentaires conclus dans le cadre du contrat initial doivent compléter l'étude en la délimitant mais ne peuvent en aucun cas l'étendre.

La procédure précontentieuse

19 Ayant été informée d'éléments faisant apparaître une infraction aux dispositions des directives 92/50 et 2004/18 commise par les communes de Vassilika, de Kassandra, d'Egnatia et d'Arethousa lors de la procédure d'attribution de marchés publics concernant des services complémentaires de cadastrage et d'aménagement urbain qui ne figuraient pas dans le contrat initial, la Commission a engagé la procédure prévue à l'article 258 TFUE.

20 Conformément à cette disposition, la Commission a adressé, le 2 février 2009, une lettre de mise en demeure à la République hellénique, dans laquelle elle constate que lesdites communes ont, en violation des articles 3, paragraphe 2, 8 et 11, paragraphe 3, sous e), de la directive 92/50 ainsi que des articles 2, 20 et 31, point 4, sous a), de la directive 2004/18, conclu des marchés publics de services en recourant à la procédure négociée sans publication préalable d'un avis de marché, alors que ces marchés, attribués chacun au même adjudicataire, étendent l'objet des marchés initiaux en prévoyant des services qui n'étaient pas couverts initialement.

21 Estimant la réponse fournie par la République hellénique insatisfaisante, la Commission a adressé, par lettre du 23 novembre 2009, un avis motivé à cet État membre.

22 Par lettre du 25 janvier 2010, la République hellénique a répondu audit avis motivé en reconnaissant que la passation de tous les marchés publics litigieux est contraire aux dispositions des directives 92/50 et 2004/18 et en annonçant l'adoption d'une série de mesures destinées à garantir le respect des exigences du droit de l'Union.

23 Constatant que les autorités administratives régionales refusent de procéder à l'application effective de ces mesures, alors qu'elles seraient suffisantes et appropriées pour mettre fin à l'infraction si elles étaient contraignantes et si leur respect était garanti dans la pratique, la Commission a décidé d'introduire le présent recours.

Sur le recours

24 Par son recours, la Commission reproche à la République hellénique d'avoir enfreint les directives 92/50 et 2004/18 en ce que les communes de Vassilika, de Kassandra, d'Egnatia et d'Arethousa ont conclu des marchés publics concernant des services de cadastrage et d'aménagement urbain en recourant à la procédure négociée sans publication préalable d'un avis de marché, alors que ces marchés étendent l'objet des contrats initiaux en prévoyant des services qui n'étaient pas couverts par ceux-ci.

25 Tant dans son mémoire en défense que dans son mémoire en duplique, la République hellénique reconnaît que les marchés publics litigieux, dès lors qu'ils ont été attribués dans le cadre du régime juridique en vigueur antérieurement, tel qu'il résultait de la loi 716/1977, ont été conclus en violation des dispositions des directives 92/50 et 2004/18. En effet, dans le cadre de cette loi, il aurait été impossible de fixer dès l'origine le montant des frais contractuels liés aux études, de manière à ce qu'il soit connu dès le stade de l'attribution, ainsi que l'exigent ces directives. En adoptant la loi 3316/2005 et le décret présidentiel 60/2007, les procédures d'attribution et d'exécution des marchés publics d'études auraient cependant été adaptées au droit de l'Union, en prévoyant que l'élaboration des études serait désormais attribuée sur la base de l'offre financièrement la plus intéressante.

26 La République hellénique souligne avoir informé la Commission des mesures qu'elle a adoptées en vue de contraindre les communes concernées à retirer les marchés publics litigieux. En particulier, elle aurait demandé aux collectivités locales concernées, d'une part, de suspendre immédiatement toute nouvelle action visant à l'exécution des marchés complémentaires en cause et, d'autre part, de retirer toutes les décisions des conseils municipaux concernant la fixation des rémunérations contractuelles des études concernées. Par ailleurs, elle aurait demandé au corps des contrôleurs inspecteurs de l'administration d'effectuer le contrôle-inspection requis des marchés complémentaires passés. Or, les rapports élaborés à cette occasion feraient ressortir que tant l'objet contractuel des études que la fixation des rémunérations contractuelles étaient illégaux. Les communes concernées refuseraient cependant de retirer les marchés publics litigieux au motif que ceux-ci ont été conclus en conformité avec la loi 716/1977.

27 Étant donné l'autonomie administrative et financière des collectivités locales, consacrée par la Constitution hellénique, et les limites étroites auxquelles se heurte une intervention en matière d'administration locale, ledit État membre estime qu'il a déployé tous les efforts possibles pour mettre fin au manquement reproché par la Commission. Il continuerait, par ailleurs, à exercer toutes les pressions possibles sur les organismes impliqués de manière à obtenir le retrait des marchés publics litigieux.

28 Il importe de rappeler que, dans le cadre d'un recours en manquement, introduit en vertu de l'article 258 TFUE par la Commission et dont celle-ci apprécie seule l'opportunité, il appartient à la Cour de constater si le manquement reproché existe ou non, même si l'État concerné ne conteste pas ce manquement (voir, notamment, arrêts du 22 juin 1993, Commission/Danemark, C-243/89, Rec. p. I-3353, point 30; du 15 janvier 2002, Commission/Italie, C-439/99, Rec. p. I-305, point 20, et du 8 septembre 2005, Commission/Italie, C-462/04, point 7).

29 En l'espèce, il y a lieu, tout d'abord, de constater qu'il ressort du dossier soumis à la Cour que, tandis que les marchés publics litigieux attribués par la commune de Kassandra ont été conclus avant le 31 janvier 2006, ceux attribués par les communes de Vassilika, d'Egnatia et d'Arethousa ont été conclus après cette date. Il en résulte que, si les premiers marchés publics sont susceptibles de relever de la directive 92/50, les seconds sont, quant à eux, susceptibles d'être soumis aux dispositions de la directive 2004/18, cette dernière directive ayant abrogé et remplacé les dispositions pertinentes de la directive 92/50 à compter du 31 janvier 2006.

30 Par ailleurs, il est constant que les marchés publics litigieux relèvent du champ d'application des directives 92/50 et 2004/18. En effet, d'une part, ils ont été passés par des communes qui constituent, en tant que collectivités territoriales, des pouvoirs adjudicateurs au sens des articles 1er, sous b), de la directive 92/50 ainsi que 1er, paragraphe 9, de la directive 2004/18, qui sont visés à l'article 7 de ces directives. D'autre part, la valeur estimée de chacun desdits marchés excède les seuils prévus audit article 7.

31 Or, en vertu de l'article 11, paragraphe 3, sous e), de la directive 92/50 et de l'article 31, point 4, sous a), de la directive 2004/18, les marchés publics de services, tels que ceux en cause dans la présente affaire, relatifs à des services d'aménagement urbain au sens, respectivement, de l'annexe I A de la première directive et de l'annexe II A de la seconde, peuvent être conclus par les pouvoirs adjudicateurs selon une procédure négociée sans publication d'un avis préalable de marché lorsqu'ils portent sur des services complémentaires ne figurant pas dans le contrat initial, à condition, notamment, d'une part, que, à la suite d'une circonstance imprévue, ils soient devenus nécessaires à l'exécution du service tel qu'il y est décrit et, d'autre part, que la valeur cumulée estimée des marchés passés pour ces services complémentaires ne dépasse pas 50 % du marché initial.

32 Selon la jurisprudence de la Cour, en tant que dérogations aux règles visant à garantir l'effectivité des droits reconnus par le traité FUE dans le secteur des marchés publics de services, l'article 11, paragraphe 3, sous e), de la directive 92/50 et l'article 31, point 4, sous a), de la directive 2004/18 doivent faire l'objet d'une interprétation stricte, et c'est à celui qui entend s'en prévaloir qu'incombe la charge de la preuve que les circonstances exceptionnelles justifiant la dérogation existent effectivement (voir arrêts du 10 avril 2003, Commission/Allemagne, C-20/01 et C-28/01, Rec. p. I-3609, point 58; du 18 novembre 2004, Commission/Allemagne, C-126/03, Rec. p. I-11197, point 23; du 11 janvier 2005, Stadt Halle et RPL Lochau, C-26/03, Rec. p. I-1, point 46, ainsi que du 8 avril 2008, Commission/Italie, C-337/05, Rec. p. I-2173, points 57 et 58).

33 Dans sa requête, la Commission soutient que rien n'indique en l'espèce qu'une circonstance imprévue soit ou puisse être intervenue après l'attribution des marchés publics litigieux, dès lors que les pouvoirs adjudicateurs en cause auraient pu, avant la passation des marchés initiaux, prévoir la nécessité d'inclure également les services complémentaires concernés, à savoir, en l'occurrence, l'extension des zones à urbaniser. Si le besoin d'une telle extension pour des raisons techniques ou économiques, ou liées à l'exécution des services prévus dans le marché initial, pouvait être considéré comme une circonstance imprévue, les pouvoirs adjudicateurs seraient en mesure d'invoquer leur propre échec à estimer et à déterminer précisément l'objet physique et la portée du marché initial pour procéder ensuite à l'attribution de services complémentaires par la conclusion de contrats distincts en violation des principes d'égalité de traitement et de transparence.

34 En tout état de cause, la Commission souligne que, selon les informations en sa possession, le montant des marchés complémentaires concernés dépasse, dans chaque cas, le seuil de 50 % du montant des marchés initiaux fixé par les directives 92/50 et 2004/18.

35 Force est de constater que la République hellénique, à laquelle incombe la charge de prouver que les conditions édictées par les articles 11, paragraphe 3, sous e), de la directive 92/50 et 31, point 4, sous a), de la directive 2004/18 sont remplies, n'a pas entrepris de réfuter ces affirmations.

36 Par ailleurs, cet État membre n'a pas davantage cherché à démontrer que les marchés publics litigieux étaient susceptibles de bénéficier des autres dérogations prévues à l'article 11, paragraphe 3, de la directive 92/50 et à l'article 31 de la directive 2004/18 quant au recours à la procédure négociée sans publication préalable d'un avis de marché.

37 La République hellénique fait certes valoir que la réglementation nationale en matière de marchés publics concernant la réalisation d'études est désormais conforme à la directive 2004/18, dès lors que la loi 3316/2005 et le décret présidentiel 60/2007 disposent que l'élaboration de telles études est attribuée sur la base de l'offre financièrement la plus intéressante et non plus sur la base de la rémunération estimée au préalable par l'expert, ainsi que le prévoyait la loi 716/1977.

38 Toutefois, ainsi que la Commission l'a observé à juste titre, une telle circonstance est sans pertinence dans le cadre du présent recours, dès lors que celui-ci porte sur la conformité des marchés publics litigieux avec les directives 92/50 et 2004/18 et non sur celle de la réglementation nationale en cause avec ces dernières.

39 En outre, il ne ressort en rien de la requête que le manquement allégué dans le cadre du présent recours, tiré de la violation de l'article 11, paragraphe 3, de la directive 92/50 et de l'article 31, point 4, de la directive 2004/18, viserait également le mode de fixation de la rémunération des experts en charge des études relatives aux marchés publics litigieux. En effet, la Commission ne fait nullement valoir, dans son recours, que l'extension des marchés initiaux à des services complémentaires de cadastrage et d'aménagement urbain par les communes concernées dans le cadre de procédures négociées sans publication préalable d'un avis de marché résulterait également du mode de fixation de la rémunération des experts, mais fait valoir uniquement que cette extension résulte de l'adjudication de services supplémentaires après la conclusion des marchés initiaux.

40 Quant aux prétendues difficultés rencontrées par la République hellénique, après l'envoi de sa réponse à l'avis motivé, aux fins d'obtenir le retrait effectif des marchés publics litigieux par les communes concernées, il suffit de rappeler que, selon une jurisprudence constante, l'existence d'un manquement doit être appréciée en fonction de la situation de l'État membre telle qu'elle se présentait au terme du délai fixé dans l'avis motivé et que les changements intervenus par la suite ne sauraient être pris en compte par la Cour (voir, notamment, arrêts du 30 novembre 2006, Commission/Luxembourg, C-32/05, Rec. p. I-11323, point 22, et du 17 janvier 2008, Commission/Allemagne, C-152/05, Rec. p. I-39, point 15).

41 Par ailleurs, et en tout état de cause, un État membre ne saurait exciper de dispositions, pratiques ou situations de son ordre juridique interne pour justifier l'inobservation des obligations résultant du droit de l'Union (voir, notamment, arrêts du 10 avril 2003, Commission/France, C-114/02, Rec. p. I-3783, point 11, et du 23 avril 2009, Commission/Espagne, C-321/08, point 9).

42 Dans ces conditions, le recours introduit par la Commission doit être considéré comme fondé.

43 Par conséquent, il convient de constater que, en ayant passé, en recourant à une procédure négociée sans publication préalable d'un avis de marché, des marchés publics ayant pour objet des services complémentaires de cadastrage et d'aménagement urbain qui ne figuraient pas dans le contrat initial conclu par les communes de Vassilika, de Kassandra, d'Egnatia et d'Arethousa, la République hellénique a manqué aux obligations qui lui incombent en vertu des articles 8 et 11, paragraphe 3, de la directive 92/50 ainsi que des articles 20 et 31, point 4, de la directive 2004/18.

Sur les dépens

44 Aux termes de l'article 69, paragraphe 2, du règlement de procédure, toute partie qui succombe est condamnée aux dépens, s'il est conclu en ce sens. La Commission ayant conclu à la condamnation de la République hellénique et celle-ci ayant succombé en ses moyens, il y a lieu de la condamner aux dépens.

Par ces motifs, la Cour (sixième chambre) déclare et arrête:

1) En ayant passé, en recourant à une procédure négociée sans publication préalable d'un avis de marché, des marchés publics ayant pour objet des services complémentaires de cadastrage et d'aménagement urbain qui ne figuraient pas dans le contrat initial conclu par les communes de Vassilika, de Kassandra, d'Egnatia et d'Arethousa, la République hellénique a manqué aux obligations qui lui incombent en vertu des articles 8 et 11, paragraphe 3, de la directive 92/50/CEE du Conseil, du 18 juin 1992, portant coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de services, telle que modifiée par la directive 97/52/CE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 13 octobre 1997, ainsi que des articles 20 et 31, point 4, de la directive 2004/18/CE du Parlement européen et du Conseil, du 31 mars 2004, relative à la coordination des procédures de passation des marchés publics de travaux, de fournitures et de services.

2) La République hellénique est condamnée aux dépens.

Judgment

1 This reference for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Articles 2, 51 and 55 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

2 The reference has been made in proceedings between the Úrad pre verejné obstarávanie (Public Procurement Office; 'the Úrad') and undertakings which were unsuccessful in a call for tenders launched during 2007 by Národná diaľničná spoločnosť a.s. ('NDS'), a commercial undertaking wholly controlled by the Slovak State, with a view to the supply of services relating to toll collection on motorways and certain roads.

Legal context

European Union law

3 Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 provides:

'Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way.'

4 Article 51 of that directive which, within Title II, Chapter VII, thereof, forms part of Section 2, entitled 'Criteria for qualitative selection', states:

'The contracting authority may invite economic operators to supplement or clarify the certificates and documents submitted pursuant to Articles 45 to 50.'

5 Article 55 of that directive, which forms part of Section 3, entitled 'Award of the contract', provides:

'1. If, for a given contract, tenders appear to be abnormally low in relation to the goods, works or services, the contracting authority shall, before it may reject those tenders, request in writing details of the constituent elements of the tender which it considers relevant.

Those details may relate in particular to:

(a) the economics of the construction method, the manufacturing process or the services provided;

(b) the technical solutions chosen and/or any exceptionally favourable conditions available to the tenderer for the execution of the work, for the supply of the goods or services;

(c) the originality of the work, supplies or services proposed by the tenderer;

(d) compliance with the provisions relating to employment protection and working conditions in force at the place where the work, service or supply is to be performed;

(e) the possibility of the tenderer obtaining State aid.

2. The contracting authority shall verify those constituent elements by consulting the tenderer, taking account of the evidence supplied.

…’

National law

6 Article 42, entitled ‘Procedure for assessment of tenders’, of Law No 25/2006 on public procurement, in the version that the national court considers to be applicable to the main proceedings, provides:

‘1. Tenders shall be assessed by a committee in camera. The committee shall assess the tenders having regard to compliance with the requirements of the contracting authority or contracting entity concerning the object of the contract and shall exclude tenders which fail to meet those requirements specified in the contract notice or in the notice used as a means of calling for competition and in the tender specifications. …

In the evaluation of tenders with a variant, Article 37(3) shall be applied.

2. The committee may ask tenderers in writing to explain their tenders. However, it may not seek or accept a proposal from a tenderer to make a change that would give the tender an advantage.

3. Where a tender contains an abnormally low price, the committee shall ask the tenderer in writing to explain its price proposal. The request must be designed to obtain details of the basic characteristic parameters of the tender which the committee considers important and which apply in particular to:

(a) the economics of the construction methods, manufacturing processes or the services provided;

(b) the technical solution or particularly favourable conditions available to the tenderer for the delivery of supplies, performance of construction works, provision of service;

(c) the special nature of the supplies, the construction works or the services proposed by the tenderer;

(d) compliance with the laws relating to the protection of employment and labour conditions in force in the place of the supplies, construction works or services,

(e) whether the tenderer may be granted State aid.

(4) The committee shall take into consideration the clarification of a tender or of an abnormally low price and the evidence provided by a tenderer. The committee shall exclude a tender in the case where:

(a) the tenderer has failed to submit a written explanation within three working days from the date of receipt of a request for clarification, unless the committee has fixed a longer period, or

(b) the clarification submitted fails to comply with the requirement under paragraphs (2) or (3).

(7) The committee shall assess tenders which have not been excluded pursuant to the criteria specified in the contract notice or in the notice used as a means of calling for competition or in the tender specifications, and on the basis of the rules of their application, as specified in the tender documents, which are non-discriminatory and support fair competition.

…’

The actions in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

7 NDS launched a restricted call for tenders by notice published in the Official Journal of the European Union on 27 September 2007, with a view to concluding a public contract having an estimated value in excess of EUR 600 million for the supply of toll collection services on motorways and certain roads.

8 In the course of that procedure, NDS sent requests for tender clarification to two groups of undertakings, including candidates. These were, firstly, SAG ELV Slovensko a.s., FELA Management AG, ASCOM (Schweiz) AG, Asseco Central Europe a.s. and TESLA Stropkov a.s. ('SAG ELV and Others'), and, secondly, Autostrade per l'Italia SpA, EFKON AG and Stalexport Autostrady SA ('Slovakpass'). In addition to questions specific to each of the tenders relating to their technical aspects, those two groups were asked to provide clarification of the abnormally low prices which they had proposed. Answers were given to those questions.

9 Subsequently, SAG ELV and Others and Slovakpass were excluded from the procedure by decisions of 29 April 2008.

10 Those decisions were challenged before NDS, which upheld them, and subsequently before the competent administrative appeal body, the Úrad, which on 2 July 2008 in turn dismissed the appeals brought before it.

11 The Úrad took the view that, although one of the grounds put forward by NDS to justify the exclusion of the two groups concerned from the call for tender procedure, namely the failure to produce certificates for installations not yet approved, was unfounded, the other two grounds advanced did, however, justify that exclusion. Firstly, those two groups had failed to provide an adequate response to the request for clarification of the abnormally low price in their tenders. Secondly, those tenders failed to comply with certain conditions set out in the tender specifications, namely those in Article 11.1. P 1.20 as regards SAG ELV and Others, requiring, in essence, determination of the parameters enabling calculation of tolls as a function of the toll sections by season, days of the week, hours of the day, and those set out in Article 12. T. 1.5 as regards Slovakpass, requiring provision of a diesel-powered emergency electricity generator.

12 SAG ELV and Others and Slovakpass challenged those decisions before the Krajský súd Bratislava (Bratislava Regional Court) (Slovak Republic). By judgment of 6 May 2009, that court dismissed the action brought by SAG ELV and Others. Similarly, by judgment of 13 October 2009, it dismissed the actions brought by Slovakpass, which it had joined and which sought, first, annulment of the decision of the Úrad of 2 July 2008 and, second, annulment of the decision by which NDS had confirmed the soundness of its measure creating a tender assessment committee, also contested by Slovakpass.

13 Appeals against those two judgments were lodged before the Najvyšší súd Slovenskej republiky (Supreme Court of the Slovak Republic). Having regard to the arguments raised by SAG ELV and Others and by Slovakpass, and in the light of the grounds relied on by the European Commission in the action for failure to fulfil obligations brought against the Slovak Republic because of irregularities in the public procurement procedure at issue in the main proceedings, the national court has doubts as to whether the NDS decisions concerned comply with the principles of European Union law on non-discrimination and transparency in the award of public contracts. In particular, it is unsure whether those principles preclude the contracting authority from being able to reject a tender on a ground alleging non-compliance with the tender specifications without first having asked the tenderer to clarify that failure to comply, or on a ground alleging that the price offered is abnormally low, without having questioned the tenderer sufficiently clearly on that point.

14 In those circumstances, the Najvyšší súd Slovenskej republiky decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'1. Is the interpretation that, under Article 51, in conjunction with Article 2, of [Directive 2004/18], taking account of the principle[s] of non discrimination and transparency in the award of public contracts, the contracting authority is obliged to seek clarification of a tender, respecting the subjective procedural right of the individual to be requested to supplement or clarify certificates and documents submitted pursuant to Articles 45 to 50 of the Directive, if a disputable or unclear understanding of the tenderer's bid could result in the exclusion of that tenderer, in conformity with the above Directive in the wording in effect in the relevant period?

2. Is the interpretation that, under Article 51, in conjunction with Article 2, of [Directive 2004/18], taking account of the principle[s] of non discrimination and transparency in the award of public contracts, the contracting authority is not obliged to seek clarification of a tender if the contracting authority considers it established that the requirements regarding the subject matter of the contract have not been met, in conformity with the Directive in the wording in effect in the relevant period?

3. Is a provision of national law under which a committee established to evaluate tenders only may request tenderers in writing to clarify their bid in conformity with Article 51 and Article 2 of [Directive 2004/18] in the wording in effect in the relevant period?

Is a contracting authority's procedure, according to which it is not obliged to request a tenderer to clarify an abnormally low price, in conformity with Article 55 of [Directive 2004/18], and, on the formulation of the question put by the contracting authority to the applicants in connection with the abnormally low price, did [the applicants] have the opportunity to explain sufficiently the constituent features of the tender submitted?'

Admissibility of the questions referred

15 In accordance with settled case-law, questions on the interpretation of European Union law referred by a national court in the factual and legislative context which that court is responsible for defining, and the accuracy of which is not a matter for the Court to determine, enjoy a presumption of relevance. The Court may refuse to rule on a question referred by a national court only where it is quite obvious that the interpretation of European Union law that is sought bears no relation to the actual facts of the main action or its purpose, where the problem is hypothetical, or where the Court does not have before it the factual or legal material necessary to give a useful answer to the questions submitted to it (see, inter alia, Joined Cases C-188/10 and C-189/10 Melki and Abdeli [2010] ECR I-5667, paragraph 27 and the case-law cited).

16 In the light of those principles, the Slovak Government has argued, in its written observations, that the reference for a preliminary ruling is inadmissible on the ground, first, that, in the dispute brought before the national court by SAG ELV and Others, no complaint was raised regarding clarification of the tenders made in the public procurement procedure by the tenderers.

17 It is, however, common ground that the Court has received one single reference for a preliminary ruling made by the national court concerning two disputes which were brought before that court at the same time and which have been joined. Accordingly, the situation referred to by the Slovak Government as regards the appeal lodged by SAG ELV and Others could in any event affect the admissibility of that reference only if it were established that no complaint relating to the clarification of the offer of tenderers in the public procurement procedure had been raised in the other dispute in the main proceedings either. Since such a situation has not been established or even alleged, the first objection to admissibility must be rejected.

18 Second, the Slovak Government submits that that part of the national court's third question, which concerns the request for clarification of the abnormally low tender, as formulated by the contracting authority, has no bearing on the action brought by Slovakpass, in which the challenge related to the assessment made of that request by the court at first instance.

19 Although the Slovak Government submits in that regard that, in accordance with national procedural law, the national court could not consider a plea other than that which had been raised before it, such a complaint, which is thus based on a rule of national law, does not necessarily mean that the question referred is manifestly unconnected with the facts or subject-matter of the disputes in question.

20 Finally, it is common ground that, in the main proceedings, the unsuccessful tenderers were declared unsuccessful after the contracting authority had assessed the answers to the requests for clarification of the tenders which they had submitted. In those circumstances, the questions referred by the national court, which relate to the conditions in which such requests must or may be made, having regard to the requirements of European Union law, do not appear to be manifestly unconnected with the facts or subject-matter of the disputes in question.

21 Accordingly, it is appropriate for the Court to give a ruling.

Consideration of the questions referred

Preliminary observations

22 As the Slovak Government and the Commission have pointed out, it is necessary to note, firstly, that Article 51 of Directive 2004/18 is among the provisions which form part of Section 2 relating to the criteria for qualitative selection of tenderers. The provisions of that article are therefore irrelevant to the assessment which the Court must make in order to answer the questions which have been referred and which relate, having regard to the facts of the cases in the main proceedings, solely to that stage of the restricted call for tenders procedure in which, following selection of the tenderers entitled to submit a tender, it is for the contracting authority to assess those tenders. There is therefore no need for the Court to rule on the interpretation of Article 51 of Directive 2004/18.

23 Secondly, the fact that the contracting authority has, in the present proceedings, set up a committee responsible for assessing, on its behalf, the tenders submitted by the tenderers does not relieve that authority of its responsibility to comply with the requirements of European Union law in the field of public procurement. Thus, although the national court asks whether a provision of national law providing that the committee set up to assess the tenders can only ask the tenderers in writing to clarify the tender is compatible with European Union law, that question must be understood as being asked generally as if the contracting authority itself were placed in that position.

24 In those circumstances, the Court must understand the questions referred to it, taken as a whole, as seeking to ascertain to what extent contracting authorities, when they take the view, in a restricted public procurement procedure, that the tender submitted by a tenderer is abnormally low or imprecise or does not meet the technical requirements of the tender specifications, may or must seek clarification from the tenderer concerned, having regard to Articles 2 and 55 of Directive 2004/18.

25 With regard to Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, it must be borne in mind that the principal objectives of the European Union rules in the field of public procurement include that of ensuring the free movement of services and the opening-up to undistorted competition in all the Member States. In order to pursue that twofold objective, European Union law applies, inter alia, the principle of equal treatment of tenderers and the obligation of transparency resulting therefrom (see, to that effect, Case C-454/06 pressetext Nachrichtenagentur [2008] ECR I-4401, paragraphs 31 and 32 and the case-law cited). The obligation of transparency, for its part, is essentially intended to preclude any risk of favouritism or arbitrariness on the part of the contracting authority (see, to that effect, Case C-496/99 P Commission v CAS Succhi di Frutta [2004] ECR I-3801, paragraph 111). As regards the award of contracts, Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 requires contracting authorities to comply with the same principles and obligations.

26 It is in the light of those considerations that the questions referred to the Court must be answered, by examining in turn the situation in which the contracting authority considers the tender to be abnormally low and that in which it takes the view that the tender is imprecise or does not meet the technical requirements of the tender specifications.

An abnormally low tender

27 It must be borne in mind that, under Article 55 of Directive 2004/18, if, for a given contract, tenders appear to be abnormally low in relation to the goods, works or services, the contracting authority must, before it may reject those tenders, ‘request in writing details of the constituent elements of the tender which it considers relevant’.

28 It follows clearly from those provisions, which are stated in a mandatory manner, that the European Union legislature intended to require the awarding authority to examine the details of tenders which are abnormally low, and for that purpose obliges it to request the tenderer to furnish the necessary explanations to prove that those tenders are genuine (see, to that effect, Joined Cases C-285/99 and C-286/99 Lombardini and Mantovani [2001] ECR I-9233, paragraphs 46 to 49).

29 Accordingly, the existence of a proper exchange of views, at an appropriate time in the procedure for examining tenders, between the contracting authority and the tenderer, to enable the latter to demonstrate that its tender is genuine, constitutes a fundamental requirement of Directive 2004/18, in order to prevent the contracting authority from acting in an arbitrary manner and to ensure healthy competition between undertakings (see, to that effect, Lombardini and Mantovani, paragraph 57).

30 In that regard, it must be borne in mind, firstly, that although the list in the second subparagraph of Article 55(1) of Directive 2004/18 is not exhaustive, it is also not purely indicative, and therefore does not leave contracting authorities free to determine which are the relevant factors to be taken into consideration before rejecting a tender which appears to be abnormally low (judgment of 23 April 2009 in Case C-292/07 Commission v Belgium, paragraph 159).

31 Secondly, in order for Article 55(1) of Directive 2004/18 to be effective, the contracting authority must set out clearly the request sent to the tenderers concerned so that they are in a position fully and effectively to show that their tenders are genuine.

32 It is, however, for the national court alone to ascertain, having regard to all the documents in the file placed before it, whether the request for clarification enabled the tenderers concerned to provide a sufficient explanation of the composition of their tender.

33 Furthermore, Article 55 of Directive 2004/18, far from precluding a provision of national legislation such as Article 42(3) of Law No 25/2006, which, in essence, provides that if a tenderer offers an abnormally low price, the contracting authority must ask it in writing to clarify its price proposal, requires the inclusion of such a provision in the national legislation on public procurement (see, to that effect, Commission v Belgium, paragraph 161).

34 Accordingly, Article 55 of Directive 2004/18 does preclude, in particular, a contracting authority from claiming, as the national court states in its third question, that it is not obliged to request a tenderer to clarify an abnormally low price.

An imprecise tender or one which does not meet the technical requirements of the tender specifications

35 In this regard, it must be noted that, in contrast to the situation concerning abnormally low prices, Directive 2004/18 does not contain any provision which expressly sets out the procedure to be followed in the event that the contracting authority finds, in a restricted public procurement procedure, that the tender submitted by a tenderer is imprecise or does not meet the technical requirements of the tender specifications.

36 By its very nature, the restricted public procurement procedure means that, once the tenderers have been selected and once their respective tenders have been submitted, in principle those tenders can no longer be amended either at the request of the contracting authority or at the request of the tenderers. The principle of equal treatment of tenderers and the obligation of transparency resulting therefrom preclude, in that procedure, any negotiation between the contracting authority and one or other of the tenderers.

37 To enable the contracting authority to require a tenderer whose tender it regards as imprecise or as failing to meet the technical requirements of the tender specifications to provide clarification in that regard would be to run the risk of making the contracting authority appear to have negotiated with the tenderer on a confidential basis, in the event that that tenderer was finally successful, to the detriment of the other tenderers and in breach of the principle of equal treatment.

38 In any event, it does not follow from Article 2 or from any other provision of Directive 2004/18, or from the principle of equal treatment or the obligation of transparency, that, in such a situation, the contracting authority is obliged to contact the tenderers concerned. Those tenderers cannot, moreover, complain that there is no such obligation on the contracting authority since the lack of clarity of their tender is attributable solely to their failure to exercise due diligence in the drafting of their tender, to which they, like other tenderers, are subject.

39 Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 does not therefore preclude the absence, in national legislation, of a provision which would oblige the contracting authority to request tenderers, in a restricted public procurement procedure, to clarify their tenders in the light of the technical requirements of the tender specifications before rejecting them because they are imprecise or do not meet those requirements.

40 None the less, Article 2 of that directive does not preclude, in particular, the correction or amplification of details of a tender where appropriate, on an exceptional basis, particularly when it is clear that they require mere clarification, or to correct obvious material errors, provided that such amendment does not in reality lead to the submission of a new tender. Nor does that article preclude a provision of national legislation such as Article 42(2) of Law No 25/2006, according to which, in essence, the contracting authority may ask tenderers in writing to clarify their tender without, however, requesting or accepting any amendment to the tender.

41 In the exercise of the discretion thus enjoyed by the contracting authority, that authority must treat the various tenderers equally and fairly, in such a way that a request for clarification does not appear unduly to have favoured or disadvantaged the tenderer or tenderers to which the request was addressed, once the procedure for selection of tenders has been completed and in the light of its outcome.

42 In order to provide a useful answer to the national court, it must be added that a request for clarification of a tender may be made only after the contracting authority has looked at all the tenders (see, to that effect, Lombardini and Mantovani, paragraphs 51 and 53).

43 Furthermore, that request must be sent in an equivalent manner to all undertakings which are in the same situation, unless there is an objectively verifiable ground capable of justifying different treatment of the tenderers in that regard, in particular where the tender must, in any event, in the light of other factors, be rejected.

44 In addition, that request must relate to all sections of the tender which are imprecise or which do not meet the technical requirements of the tender specifications, without the contracting authority being entitled to reject a tender because of the lack of clarity of a part thereof which was not covered in that request.

45 Having regard to all of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the questions referred is that:

– Article 55 of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as requiring the inclusion in national legislation of a provision such as Article 42(3) of Law No 25/2006 on public procurement, which, in essence, provides that if a tenderer offers an abnormally low price, the contracting authority must ask it in writing to clarify its price proposal. It is for the national court to ascertain, having regard to all the documents in the file placed before it, whether the request for clarification enabled the tenderer concerned to provide a sufficient explanation of the composition of its tender;

– Article 55 of Directive 2004/18 precludes a contracting authority from taking the view that it is not required to ask a tenderer to clarify an abnormally low price;

– Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 does not preclude a provision of national law, such as Article 42(2) of Law No 25/2006, according to which, in essence, the contracting authority may ask tenderers in writing to clarify their tenders without, however, requesting or accepting any amendment to the tenders. In the exercise of the discretion thus enjoyed by the contracting authority, that authority must treat the various tenderers equally and fairly, in such a way that a request for clarification cannot appear unduly to have favoured or disadvantaged the tenderer or tenderers to which the request was addressed, once the procedure for selection of tenders has been completed and in the light of its outcome.

The application for suspension of the effects of the judgment

46 The Slovak Government has requested the Court to limit in time the effects of the present judgment should it interpret the general principles referred to in Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 in such a way as to deduce from them an obligation on the part of the contracting authority to request a tenderer, in the context of the assessment of the conformity of a tender with the requirements relating to the subject-matter of the contract as defined in the tender specifications, to clarify its tender.

47 However, the interpretation of Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 arrived at in the present judgment does not lead to such a finding. The request of the Slovak Government is, accordingly and in any event, devoid of purpose.

Costs

48 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the actions pending before the national court, the decisions on costs are a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 55 of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts must be interpreted as requiring the inclusion in national legislation of a provision such as Article 42(3) of Slovak Law No 25/2006 on public procurement, in the version applicable in the main proceedings, which, in essence, provides that if a tenderer offers an abnormally low price, the contracting authority must ask it in writing to clarify its price proposal. It is for the national court to ascertain, having regard to all the documents in the file placed before it, whether the request for clarification enabled the tenderer concerned to provide a sufficient explanation of the composition of its tender.

Article 55 of Directive 2004/18 precludes a contracting authority from taking the view that it is not required to ask a tenderer to clarify an abnormally low price.

Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 does not preclude a provision of national law, such as Article 42(2) of the abovementioned Law No 25/2006, according to which, in essence, the contracting authority may ask tenderers in writing to clarify their tenders without, however, requesting or accepting any amendment to the tenders. In the exercise of the discretion thus enjoyed by the contracting authority, that authority must treat the various tenderers equally and fairly, in such a way that a request for clarification cannot appear unduly to have favoured or disadvantaged the tenderer or tenderers to which the request was addressed, once the procedure for selection of tenders has been completed and in the light of its outcome.

THE COURT (Second Chamber), composed of R. Silva de Lapuerta, President of the Chamber, G. Arestis, J.-C. Bonichot, A. Arabadjiev and J.L. da Cruz Vilaça (Rapporteur), Judges, Advocate General: M. Wathelet,

Registrar: C. Strömholm, Administrator,

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 31 January 2013, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 11 April 2013

gives the following

Judgment

1 By its application, the European Commission seeks a declaration from the Court that, by having infringed EU public procurement law and in particular Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114), in connection with the award of a public works concession by the municipality of Eindhoven, the Kingdom of the Netherlands has failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 2 and Title III of that directive.

Legal context

2 Article 1(2) and (3) of Directive 2004/18 provides:

‘2. (a) “Public contracts” are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services within the meaning of this Directive.

(b) “Public works contracts” are public contracts having as their object either the execution, or both the design and execution, of works related to one of the activities within the meaning of Annex I or a work, or the realisation, by whatever means, of a work corresponding to the requirements specified by the contracting authority. A “work” means the outcome of building or civil engineering works taken as a whole which is sufficient of itself to fulfil an economic or technical function.

3. “Public works concession” is a contract of the same type as a public works contract except for the fact that the consideration for the works to be carried out consists either solely in the right to exploit the work or in this right together with payment.’

3 Pursuant to Article 2 of that directive, contracting authorities are to treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and to act in a transparent way.

4 Title III of Directive 2004/18 sets out the rules on public works concessions.

5 Article 80(1) of Directive 2004/18, which is part of Title V thereof, provides:

‘The Member States shall bring into force the laws, regulations and administrative provisions necessary to comply with this Directive no later than 31 January 2006. They shall forthwith inform the Commission thereof. …’

Factual background to the dispute

6 The present dispute stems from the realisation of a construction project in the municipality of Eindhoven (‘the municipality’) in an area located between the existing district of Doornakkers and the new residential district of Tongelresche Akkers, owned by that municipality (‘the Doornakkers centre’).

7 On 7 August 2001, the Eindhoven municipal council (‘the municipal council’) approved the opinion on the Doornakkers centre. That document described the plans for the creation of a community centre (including a healthcare centre and a play, integration and learning centre, ‘the SPILcentrum’) and a commercial centre in which there would also be apartments. On 12 September 2001, the municipal council approved an urban development plan for the Doornakkers centre project. That plan contained the planning guidelines for the district and provided for infrastructure and facilities with a view to integrating the districts of Doornakkers and Tongelresche Akkers.

8 On 23 April 2002, the municipal council approved the opinion entitled ‘Selection of a promoter for the Doornakkers centre’ (‘the opinion of 23 April 2002’), which had been drafted by the municipality’s staff on 11 April 2002. That opinion set out the criteria to be applied in selecting the purchaser of the land on which the Doornakkers centre project would be carried out. It stated that the sale contract should comply with ‘the framework conditions and guidelines set by the municipality, namely the specifications’, and that it should ‘meet the … wishes of the purchasers/ end users’. It was also stated that ‘the fact that the municipality opts for a sale subject to conditions means that there will be no tender procedure and that the public procurement rules are not applicable’.

9 The framework conditions and guidelines mentioned in the preceding paragraph set out, inter alia, the functions and the heights of the buildings in accordance with the urban development plan. They envisage the construction of apartments and housing, the extension of the existing healthcare centre, a connecting area between the two main sites, good accessibility, an underground car park in accordance with municipal parking regulations, conservation of valuable green spaces and the creation of a square and a new district park.

10 Pursuant to the opinion of 23 April 2002, the companies Hurks Bouw en Vastgoed BV ('Hurks') and Haagdijk BV were requested to submit plans.

11 By decision of 15 July 2003, the municipality chose Hurks as the promoter of the Doornakkers centre and contractual partner approached.

12 From July 2003 to October 2005, Hurks fleshed out its construction plans into a master plan which was approved by the municipality on 14 February 2006. With a view to implementing the plan, the municipality and Hurks concluded a contract of cooperation, which was signed by Hurks on 12 June 2007 and by the municipality on 16 July 2007 ('the cooperation contract').

13 It is apparent from recital F in the preamble to that contract that the municipality and Hurks reached an agreement on the development and realisation of the SPILcentrum. The parties to that agreement decided that the SPILcentrum would consist of apartments, an extension of an existing health centre and an underground car park, a commercial centre also including housing, another underground car park and apartments. It was provided that Hurks would carry out those works at its own risk and for its own account. With a view to the successful realisation of those projects, the municipality and Hurks also reached an agreement on the sale of land by the municipality to Hurks.

14 In parallel to those negotiations, the municipality, on 13 February 2007, chose the Woonbedrijf foundation to be the owner of the SPILcentrum. To that end, a cooperation contract was signed by the municipality and the Woonbedrijf foundation on 15 April 2008.

The pre-litigation procedure and the proceedings before the Court

15 Following a complaint relating to the circumstances of the award of the Doornakkers centre project, the Commission, by letter of 2 July 2008, requested the Kingdom of the Netherlands for information on that project. That Member State replied by letter of 19 December 2008.

16 On 24 February 2009, the Commission sent that Member State a letter of formal notice based on an infringement of EU public procurement law, specifically of Directive 2004/18. The Kingdom of the Netherlands replied by letter of 30 June 2009, claiming, inter alia, that Directive 2004/18 was not applicable ratione temporis.

17 On 9 October 2009, the Commission issued a reasoned opinion, in which it confirmed, in essence, the position expressed in its letter of formal notice and put forward arguments with a view to demonstrating that Directive 2004/18 was applicable in the present case. The Commission also asked the Kingdom of the Netherlands to take the necessary measures within two months of receipt of that opinion.

18 That Member State replied to the reasoned opinion by letter of 8 December 2009. In its response, it challenged the position adopted by the Commission relating to the infringement of Directive 2004/18 and reasserted, on the basis of Case C-337/98 Commission v France [2000] ECR I-8377, paragraphs 36 and 37, that, rather than Directive 2004/18, it was Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54) that was applicable to the facts of the present case.

19 In those circumstances the Commission decided to bring the present action.

20 By order of the President of the Court of 17 May 2011, the Federal Republic of Germany was given leave to intervene in support of the form of order sought by the Kingdom of the Netherlands.

The action

Admissibility

Arguments of the parties

21 The Kingdom of the Netherlands raises two pleas of inadmissibility.

22 Firstly, it claims that the Commission's action is inadmissible in so far as the Commission used documents on which the Kingdom of the Netherlands was unable to give its opinion during the pre-litigation stage, in breach of its rights of defence.

23 After the reply of the Kingdom of the Netherlands to the reasoned opinion, the Commission, by letter of 12 May 2010, called on that Member State to produce a number of documents, including the protocol agreement of 15 January 2010 on the SPILcentrum and the resulting cooperation contract between the municipality and the Woonbedrijf foundation. That contract was sent to the Commission by letter of 11 June 2010 from the Minister for Foreign Affairs, with a note that the Commission should not use that information in the present proceedings.

24 Furthermore, the Kingdom of the Netherlands alleges that the Commission introduced into the proceedings three documents which were not annexed to the letter of 11 June 2010 or discussed during the pre-litigation procedure. These are an information letter of 18 March 2008 from the Eindhoven municipal council on housing development initiated by the municipality in respect of the period 2005-2010, the administrative regulation of 6 October 2009 entitled 'Temporary incentive scheme for housing construction projects for 2009' and a statement taken from the website of the Ministry of Housing, Spatial Planning and the Environment.

25 Secondly, according to the Kingdom of the Netherlands, the Commission has extended the subject-matter of the proceedings in relation to the pre-litigation stage.

26 It was only in its application that the Commission claimed for the first time, in order to show that there was a contract for pecuniary interest, that the municipality received a 'service'. During the pre-litigation stage, the Commission focused exclusively on the existence of a 'consideration' provided by the municipality to Hurks to prove that there was such a contract. The Commission therefore set out a new complaint in its application, in breach of the Court's case-law (Case C-458/08 Commission v Portugal [2010] ECR I-11599, paragraph 43).

27 The Commission claims that the Court should reject all those claims.

Findings of the Court

28 So far as concerns the first plea of inadmissibility, it must be recalled that, in accordance with settled case-law, the letter of formal notice sent by the Commission to the Member State and then the reasoned opinion issued by the Commission delimit the subject-matter of the dispute, so that it cannot thereafter be extended. The opportunity for the Member State concerned to be able to submit its observations, even if it chooses not to avail itself thereof, constitutes an essential guarantee intended by the Treaty, adherence to which is an essential formal requirement of the procedure for finding that a Member State has failed to fulfil its obligations. Consequently, the reasoned opinion and the action brought by the Commission must be based on the same complaints as those set out in the letter of formal notice initiating the pre-litigation procedure (Case C-186/06 Commission v Spain [2007] ECR I-12093, paragraph 15, and Case C-535/07 Commission v Austria [2010] ECR I-9483, paragraph 41).

29 Furthermore, the Court has also held that the production by the Commission of additional evidence intended, at the stage of proceedings before the Court, to support the proposition that the failure thus alleged is general and consistent cannot be ruled out in principle (Case C-494/01 Commission v Ireland [2005] ECR I-3331, paragraph 37, and judgment of 22 December 2008 in Case C-189/07 Commission v Spain, paragraph 29).

30 According to the Kingdom of the Netherlands, the four documents submitted for the first time in the application were used by the Commission in order to establish that the realisation of the Doornakkers centre project was of immediate economic benefit to the municipality and, consequently, that the contract concluded between the municipality and Hurks was for pecuniary interest.

31 However, and as the Advocate General observed in point 31 of his Opinion, the documents produced by the Commission, whose use is being challenged by the Netherlands Government, concern only the factual situation which was the subject-matter of the pre-litigation procedure and merely illustrate the complaint made in that procedure.

32 In those circumstances, the Commission was entitled to use those documents to support the complaint, set out from the time of the letter of formal notice, relating to the existence of a contract for a public works concession, one of whose conditions was that it was for pecuniary interest (see, to that effect, Commission v Ireland, paragraph 36).

33 Consequently, the first plea of inadmissibility must be rejected.

34 As regards the second plea of inadmissibility, admittedly, the subject-matter of proceedings brought under Article 258 TFEU is circumscribed by the pre-litigation procedure provided for in that provision and, consequently, the Commission's reasoned opinion and the application must be based on the same complaints, however that requirement cannot go so far as to mean that in every case exactly the same wording must be used in each, where the subject-matter of the proceedings has not been extended or altered (Case C-229/00 Commission v Finland [2003] ECR I-5727, paragraphs 44 and 46; Case C-433/03 Commission v Germany [2005] ECR I-6985, paragraph 28; and Case C-195/04 Commission v Finland [2007] ECR I-3351, paragraph 18).

35 Thus, in its application the Commission may clarify its initial complaints provided, however, that it does not alter the subject-matter of the proceedings (Commission v Ireland, paragraph 38, and Case C-195/04 Commission v Finland, paragraph 18).

36 In the present case, it can be seen by simply reading the letter of formal notice, the reasoned opinion and the application lodged before the Court that the subject-matter of the proceedings was not altered by the Commission in the course of the present proceedings for failure to fulfil obligations.

37 Those documents expressly show that the Commission seeks a declaration that 'the Kingdom of the Netherlands has not complied with its obligations under Article 2 and Title III of Directive 2004/18'.

38 Specifically, in its reasoned opinion, the Commission alleged that the municipality did not conclude a cooperation contract with Hurks, but a contract for a public works concession, whose existence was dependent, inter alia, on the fact that that contract was for pecuniary interest.

39 In the application, while repeating the same claim, the Commission referred to Case C-451/08 Helmut Müller [2010] ECR I-2673, in which the Court defined the concept of a contract for pecuniary interest. That definition, which indeed forms part of the case-law on that concept, concerned the services received by the contracting authority pursuant to a public contract in return for consideration.

40 In doing so, the Commission merely set out in detail the arguments supporting its conclusion as to the fact that the contract concluded between the municipality and Hurks was for pecuniary interest, arguments which had already been put forward in more general terms in the letter of formal notice and the reasoned opinion, and therefore did not alter the subject-matter of the proceedings (see, to that effect, Commission v Germany, paragraph 29, and Commission v Portugal, paragraph 47).

41 Since the second plea of inadmissibility put forward by the Kingdom of the Netherlands must also be rejected, the Commission's action must be declared admissible.

Substance

Arguments of the parties

42 In its application, the Commission first of all analysed the issue of the scope ratione temporis of Directive 2004/18 which had been raised by the Kingdom of the Netherlands during the pre-litigation stage.

43 While pointing out that the Member States were required to have implemented Directive 2004/18 into national law by 31 January 2006 at the latest, the Commission observes that the cooperation contract was not signed by the two parties until 16 July 2007, that is approximately 18 months after the expiry of the time-limit set for that implementation.

44 In the Commission's view, although, admittedly, the municipality had already taken some decisions before that date, including the choice of Hurks as promoter and contractual partner, the fact remains that it was only after 14 February 2006, the date on which the municipality adopted the master plan submitted by Hurks, that the negotiations on the essential aspects of the cooperation contract began.

45 It is apparent from a letter from the municipality dated 22 May 2007 that it carried out negotiations with Hurks for over a year regarding the content of the cooperation contract. The negotiations covered the issue of whether the municipality should purchase from Hurks part of the works completed, in particular the SPILcentrum, to prevent Hurks from having to bear the financial risk of the entire project alone, in addition to the apportionment of the financial burden concerning the construction of public spaces such as an esplanade and a park.

46 In this connection, the Commission submits that the Court's case-law according to which public contracts must be re-awarded if one of the essential terms of the contract is amended and results in the conclusion of a new contract (see, to that effect, Commission v France, paragraph 44) applies a fortiori in a situation such as that in the present case.

47 The Commission adds that, when the municipality decided, on 23 April 2002, to request two operators to draw up plans, it had not laid down any of the essential characteristics of the contract to be concluded and had not even established at that time whether it was a public contract or a concession.

48 According to the Commission, the negotiations between the municipality and Hurks concerning all or at least the most important of the conditions of the cooperation contract were not started effectively until after the date on which Directive 2004/18 was required to have been implemented. Therefore, and in the light of the Court's case law in Commission v France, the Commission submits that that directive is applicable in the present case.

49 The Kingdom of the Netherlands submits, in essence, that it is the decision approving the opinion of 23 April 2002, in which the municipal council envisaged merely selling the land and entrusting a promoter with the task of developing it, which constitutes the decisive element in order to ascertain whether Directive 2004/18 is applicable ratione temporis.

50 The Kingdom of the Netherlands concludes that the proceedings originated before the deadline for implementation of Directive 2004/18. It follows from the Court's case-law that it is not the date the contract was awarded which is decisive, but that of the decision which is alleged to have infringed EU law.

51 The position adopted by the Commission, according to which the decisive moment is that 'at which all or at least the most important of the conditions of the [cooperation] contract' actually existed, is derived from an incorrect interpretation of Commission v France.

Findings of the Court

52 As the Advocate General pointed out in point 56 of his Opinion, the applicable directive is, as a rule, the one in force when the contracting authority chooses the type of procedure to be followed and decides definitively whether it is necessary for a prior call for competition to be issued for the award of a public contract (see, to that effect, Commission v France, paragraphs 36 and 37).

53 It would be contrary to the principle of legal certainty to determine the applicable law by reference to the date of the award of the contract since that date marks the end of the procedure, while the decision of the contracting authority to proceed with or without a prior call for competition is normally taken at the initial stage of that procedure (Commission v France, paragraph 40).

54 Nevertheless, in that judgment the Court also stated that, where the negotiations opened after that decision are substantially different in character from those already conducted and are, therefore, such as to demonstrate the intention of the parties to renegotiate the essential terms of the contract, the application of the provisions of a directive with a time-limit for implementation which expired after the date of that decision, might be justified (see, to that effect, Commission v France, paragraph 44).

55 In the present case, it must be stated that the decision to realise the Doornakkers centre construction project without a prior call for competition took place when the municipal council approved the opinion of 23 April 2002.

56 It is apparent from the actual wording of point 2.5 of that opinion that the fact that the municipality chose the method of a sale of the land subject to conditions 'means that there will be no tender procedure and that the public procurement rules are not applicable'.

57 In those circumstances, the Commission's argument that, when the municipality decided, in accordance with the opinion of 23 April 2002, to request two operators to draw up plans, it had not yet determined whether the project was to be a public contract or a concession, must be rejected.

58 The decision approving the opinion of 23 April 2002 thus constitutes, in principle, the decision which is alleged to have infringed EU law and whose date determines the law applicable to such a claim (see, to that effect, Case C-138/08 Hochtief and Linde-Kca-Dresden [2009] ECR I-9889, paragraph 29).

59 Moreover, concerning the Commission's argument alleging that the municipality did not establish in a binding form at the beginning of the 'procedure' the conditions and essential characteristics of the concession, but made the content of the contract and its essential conditions dependent on the progress of the negotiations with Hurks, it is important to point out, firstly, that the Commission itself asserted, at point 76 of the application, that it is apparent from an information document sent in June 2002 to the candidate promoters by the municipality that the latter 'already had a relatively clear idea of the expected result'. According to the Commission, that document contained 'details concerning the number of plots, the maximum height of the construction, the general direction the commercial development was to take, the location of the entrances to the health centre and the reintroduction of certain functions in the district park'.

60 Secondly, at point 77 of the application, the Commission acknowledged that a comparison between Article 1.1 of the cooperation contract and that information document 'shows that, for the most part, the assignment of the buildings to be constructed had been defined by the municipality as early as 2002'.

61 Thirdly, as the Advocate General observed in points 70 and 71 of his Opinion, the fact that the allocation of the financial risks for certain parts of the SPILcentrum project and responsibility for the development of public spaces could have been finally decided after the opinion of 23 April 2002 is not crucial. In the light of the Court's case-law, neither of those two specific features of the Doornakkers centre project can be regarded as substantially different in character from those initially envisaged (see, to that effect, Commission v France, paragraph 44, and Case C-454/06 pressetext Nachrichtenagentur [2008] ECR I-4401, paragraphs 34 to 37).

62 Therefore, the premises on which the Court's case-law relied on by the Commission in paragraph 46 above is based, namely the amendment of one of the essential terms of the contract and, consequently, the requirement that a new contract be concluded, are not established in the present case.

63 Given that both the municipality's decision not to conduct a prior call for competition for the Doornakkers centre project and the choice of the essential characteristics of that project are evident from the opinion of 23 April 2002, that is to say, at a time when Directive 2004/18 had not yet been adopted, it must be held that that directive is not applicable ratione temporis.

64 Since the Commission's action seeks quite specifically to prove that the Kingdom of the Netherlands failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 2 and Title III of Directive 2004/18, the inevitable conclusion is that the action must be dismissed.

Costs

65 Under Article 138(1) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Since the Kingdom of the Netherlands has applied for costs and the Commission has been unsuccessful, the latter must be ordered to pay the costs.

66 Pursuant to Article 140(1) of the Rules of Procedure, the Federal Republic of Germany must bear its own costs.

On those grounds, the Court (Second Chamber) hereby:

1. Dismisses the action;

2. Orders the European Commission to pay the costs;

3. Orders the Federal Republic of Germany to bear its own costs.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL
WATHELET
delivered on 11 April 2013 (1)

Case C-576/10

European Commission
v
Kingdom of the Netherlands

(Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations – Directive 2004/18/EC – Temporal application – Public works concession – Principles for award of contracts – Contract for pecuniary interest – Immediate economic benefit – Concession of indefinite duration – Ownership of the work – Municipality of Eindhoven)

I – Introduction: factual and procedural background

A – Summary of the facts

1. By the present action for failure to fulfil obligations, the European Commission alleges that the Kingdom of the Netherlands infringed EU public procurement law since, in connection with the award of a purported public works concession by the municipality of Eindhoven, it failed to fulfil its obligations under Article 2 and Title III of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts. (2)

2. The dispute stems from the decision taken by the municipality of Eindhoven ('the municipality') on 7 August 2001 to carry out, within its territory, a construction project in an area located between the existing district of Doornakkers and the new residential district of Tongelresche Akkers. (3) The municipality's aim was to redevelop that area ('the Doornakkers centre'), which it owned, by, among other things, giving residents of the two districts access to certain social and cultural services (a healthcare centre, a play, integration and learning centre ('the SPILcentrum') and a commercial centre with apartments and housing).

3. On 12 September 2001, the municipal council approved the urban development plans drawn up by the municipality's staff for the Doornakkers centre project (Annex 2 to the defence). Those plans contain the planning guidelines for the district in the form of a plan and provide for infrastructure and facilities with a view to joining the existing district of Doornakkers and the new residential district of Tongelresche Akkers. The former would have a healthcare centre, commercial premises and apartments. The latter would be home to accommodation and leisure infrastructure, including sports facilities.

4. On 11 April 2002, the municipality's staff drafted an opinion entitled 'Selection of a promoter for the Doornakkers district centre'. (4) That opinion informed the municipal council of the criteria to be applied in selecting the purchaser of the land on which the Doornakkers centre project would be carried out. In that opinion it was also stated that the contract for the sale of the plots offered to the contractual partner approached should comply with ‘the framework conditions and guidelines set by the municipality, namely the specifications’, and should ‘meet the … wishes of the purchasers/end users’. (5)

5. These framework conditions and guidelines set out, inter alia, the functions and the heights of the buildings in accordance with the urban development plan. They envisage the construction of apartments and housing, the extension of the existing healthcare centre, a connecting area between the two main sites, good accessibility, an underground car park in accordance with municipal parking regulations, conservation of valuable green spaces, and the creation of a square and a new district park.

6. According to the opinion entitled ‘Selection of a promoter for the Doornakkers district centre’, it was proposed to invite the promoters approached for the project, Hurks and Haagdijk BV, to a discussion. By decision of 23 April 2002, the municipal council decided to follow that opinion.

7. Thus, in mid-May 2002, the municipality invited Hurks and Haagdijk BV by telephone to a meeting scheduled for 11 June 2002.

8. The main topics of that discussion were the abovementioned framework conditions and guidelines and a document entitled ‘Information for prospective promoters participating in a selection process’.

9. On 15 July 2003, the municipality finally selected Hurks as the contractual partner approached for the conclusion of a contract for the sale of the plots concerned. (6)

10. From July 2003 to October 2005, Hurks fleshed out its construction plans into a master plan produced with the assistance of an architects practice. That master plan included numerous drawings specifying the dimensions, locations and spreads of the buildings to be constructed in accordance with the municipality’s framework conditions and guidelines. It was completed on 26 October 2005 and approved by the municipality on 14 February 2006.

11. With a view to implementing the plan, the municipality and Hurks concluded a ‘cooperation contract’ signed by Hurks on 12 June 2007 and by the municipality on 16 July 2007.

12. Alongside these negotiations, on 13 February 2007, the municipality chose Woonbedrijf as the owner of the SPILcentrum. A cooperation contract was signed by the municipality and Woonbedrijf on 15 April 2008.

B – Pre-litigation procedure

13. Following a complaint relating to an infringement of EU public procurement law allegedly committed by the municipality in connection with the Doornakkers centre project, on 2 July 2008 the Commission sent the Netherlands Government a letter in which it requested from it information on that centre. The Netherlands Government replied by letter of 19 December 2008.

14. Since the Commission considered these responses to be insufficient, on 24 February 2009 it sent the Netherlands Government a letter of formal notice based on an infringement of EU public procurement law, and specifically Directive 2004/18. The Netherlands Government replied by letter of 30 June 2009. As the Commission was not satisfied by the responses provided by the Netherlands Government, it issued a reasoned opinion on 9 October 2009.

15. Because the Netherlands Government had not changed its position upon the expiry of the time-limit laid down in the reasoned opinion, the Commission instituted the present proceedings.

II – Legislative framework

16. Article 1(2) and (3) of Directive 2004/18 stipulates:

‘2.(a) “Public contracts” are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services within the meaning of this Directive.

(b) "Public works contracts" are public contracts having as their object either the execution, or both the design and execution, of works related to one of the activities within the meaning of Annex I or a work, or the realisation, by whatever means, of a work corresponding to the requirements specified by the contracting authority. A "work" means the outcome of building or civil engineering works taken as a whole which is sufficient of itself to fulfil an economic or technical function.

3. "Public works concession" is a contract of the same type as a public works contract except for the fact that the consideration for the works to be carried out consists either solely in the right to exploit the work or in this right together with payment.'

17. Article 2 sets out the principles of awarding contracts, according to which '[c]ontracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way'.

18. Article 16 provides that Directive 2004/18 'shall not apply to public service contracts for: (a) the acquisition or rental, by whatever financial means, of land, existing buildings or other immovable property or concerning rights thereon'.

19. Lastly, Title III of Directive 2004/18 contains the rules specifically applicable to public works concessions.

III – Analysis

A – The legal problems to be examined

20. Before examining the substance of the case, the Court will have to consider three arguments raised by the Netherlands Government in connection with the admissibility of the action:

– the Commission's use of documents which it received or discovered after the reasoned opinion had been issued;

– an extension, in the Commission's application, of the subject-matter of the dispute;

– the application ratione temporis of Directive 2004/18.

21. According to the Commission, whose view I share, this latter argument concerns the substance and not the admissibility of the action. I will therefore examine, first of all, the two issues which relate to the admissibility of the action and then consider the temporal application of Directive 2004/18 and the other substantive issues.

22. As far as the substance is concerned, the parties essentially disagree on the notion of 'public works concession' within the meaning of Directive 2004/18. According to the Netherlands Government, the Commission does not demonstrate the existence of a public works contract or, a fortiori, the existence of a public works concession.

B – Admissibility

23. In accordance with settled case-law, the proper conduct of the pre-litigation procedure constitutes an essential guarantee required by the TFEU not only in order to protect the rights of the Member State concerned, but also to ensure that any contentious procedure will have a clearly defined dispute as its subject-matter. (7)

24. It should be borne in mind in this regard that 'in accordance with settled case-law, the letter of formal notice sent by the Commission to the Member State and then the reasoned opinion issued by the Commission delimit the subject-matter of the dispute, so that it cannot thereafter be extended. The opportunity for the Member State concerned to submit its observations, even if it chooses not to avail itself thereof, constitutes an essential guarantee intended by the Treaty, adherence to which is an essential formal requirement of the procedure for finding that a Member State has failed to fulfil its obligations. Consequently, the reasoned opinion and the proceedings brought by the Commission must be based on the same complaints as those set out in the letter of formal notice initiating the pre-litigation procedure'. (8)

1. The contested documents

25. According to the Netherlands Government, the Commission is seeking to prove the alleged failure to fulfil obligations on the basis of documents which it communicated to the Commission or which the Commission produced after the reasoned opinion had been issued. Since the Netherlands Government did not have the opportunity to comment on those documents during the pre-litigation stage, the Commission violated its rights of defence.

(a) What are these contested documents?

26. As was stated above, the letter of formal notice dates from 24 February 2009. The Netherlands Government replied to it on 30 June 2009. The Commission notified its reasoned opinion on 9 October 2009.

27. However, by letter of 12 May 2010, the Commission sent a fresh request for information to the Kingdom of the Netherlands. The Netherlands Government replied to that request by communicating a number of documents on 11 June 2010. In his reply, the Minister for Foreign Affairs stated that the Commission could not use this information in the present proceedings.

28. One of those documents was nevertheless used by the Commission, together with three other documents which it obtained in the course of its own research after the reasoned opinion had been sent and which it claims are available 'to the general public'. The four contested documents are therefore, respectively:

– the cooperation contract between Woonbedrijf – which will be the owner of the SPILcentrum – and the municipality dated 15 April 2008 (Annex 5 to the application);

– an information letter from the municipal council dated 18 March 2008 (Annex 18 to the application);

– a regulation adopted by the Minister for Housing, Communities and Integration on 6 October 2009, entitled 'Temporary incentive scheme for housing construction projects for 2009' and published in Staatscourant on 12 October 2009 (Annex 19 to the application);

– a statement taken from the website of the Ministry of Housing, Spatial Planning and the Environment, dated 14 December 2009 (Annex 20 to the application).

(b) The effect of the Commission's use of these documents on the proper conduct of the procedure?

29. As I stated in point 24 of this Opinion, the reasoned opinion and the proceedings brought by the Commission must be based on the same complaints as those set out in the letter of formal notice initiating the pre-litigation procedure.

30. Thus, 'the Commission cannot seek a declaration of a specific failure … regarding a particular factual situation that was not referred to in the course of the pre-litigation procedure'. (9) Any specific ground of complaint of that kind must necessarily have been relied on at the pre-litigation stage, in order that the Member State concerned has the opportunity to remedy the particular situation complained of or to avail itself of its right to defend itself in that regard; such defence may in particular prompt the Commission to withdraw the ground of complaint and/or help to delimit the subject-matter of the dispute that the Court will subsequently have before it. (10)

31. However, it should be pointed out that, in the present case, the documents produced by the Commission, whose use is being challenged by the Netherlands Government, regard exclusively the single factual situation which was the subject-matter of the pre-litigation procedure. They do not seek to support a new complaint, but only to illustrate the complaint made in the pre-litigation procedure.

32. More specifically, I note that the first two documents date from March and April 2008 and therefore predate the formal notice. They have a clear link with the factual situation described in that notice and, by their nature, were not unknown to the Netherlands authorities.

33. The first is the cooperation contract signed between Woonbedrijf and the municipality on 15 April 2008. Woonbedrijf had been chosen by the municipality as the owner of the SPILcentrum on 13 February 2007. Furthermore, when the municipality decided, on 14 February 2006, to approve the master plan proposed by Hurks, it stated in its decision that the plan had been prepared by a project unit which included representatives of the municipality and Woonbedrijf. The Netherlands Government could not therefore have been unaware that the relations established between Woonbedrijf and the municipality were part of the dispute.

34. The second is an information letter from the municipal authorities concerning housing developments initiated by the municipality for the period 2005 to 2010. The project relating to the Tongelresche Akkers district and the Doornakkers centre is expressly mentioned several times. As with the cooperation contract between Woonbedrijf and the municipality, the Netherlands Government could not have been unaware of the possible effect of that document on the proceedings in so far as, for the municipality, the development of housing was directly linked to securing government subsidies and the Doornakkers centre was part of that dynamic.

35. The other two documents are public documents, one of which is an administrative regulation published in Staatscourant and the other an information notice published on the website of a public authority. The first regulates the conditions for obtaining aid for the housing development programme and the second is a related general information notice.

36. The documents therefore simply make it possible to understand the factual situation and do not develop a new complaint. On the contrary, they merely illustrate the complaint made in the formal notice and the reasoned opinion.

37. Lastly, it should be borne in mind that, whilst the Commission must, of course, respect the rights of defence of the Netherlands Government, it must, in accordance with its duty of sincere cooperation under Article 4(3) of the EU Treaty, facilitate the achievement of the Commission's tasks. 'Where it is a question of checking that the national provisions intended to ensure effective implementation of the directive are applied correctly in practice, the Commission … does not have investigative powers of its own in the matter, [it] is [therefore] largely reliant on the information provided by any complainants and by the Member State concerned … In such circumstances, it is indeed primarily for the national authorities to conduct the necessary on-the-spot investigations, in a spirit of genuine cooperation and mindful of each Member State's duty, recalled in paragraph 42 of the present judgment, to facilitate the general task of the Commission …'. (11)

38. Consequently, the Commission's action cannot, in my view, be declared inadmissible by reason of the Commission's use of the abovementioned documents.

2. New complaint and extension of the subject-matter of the dispute

39. The Netherlands Government also alleges that the Commission claimed for the first time in the application that the municipality received a 'service' in order to show that there was a contract for pecuniary interest whereas, in the course of the pre-litigation stage, the Commission focused exclusively on the existence of a 'consideration' provided by the municipality to Hurks. This constitutes a new complaint concerning the existence of a service allegedly received by the municipality, which extends the subject-matter of the dispute.

40. In this connection, the Court stated in Commission v Portugal (12) that the fact that, 'in its application, the Commission set out in detail the arguments supporting its conclusion as to the alleged failure to fulfil obligations, arguments which had already been put forward in more general terms in the letter of formal notice and the reasoned opinion, and merely explained further why it takes the view that that scheme is incompatible with the freedom to provide services, did not alter the subject of that infringement and has thus had no effect on the scope of the proceedings'.

41. I do not concur with the Netherlands Government's opinion that this dictum is not applicable in the present case. Both in the letter of formal notice and in the reasoned opinion, the Commission alleges that the Kingdom of the Netherlands infringed EU public procurement rules and, more specifically, Directive 2004/18. From the outset, the Commission has taken the view that the contract between the municipality and Hurks was a public works concession within the meaning of Article 1(3) of Directive 2004/18 which requires a contract for pecuniary interest. That condition was expressly analysed by the Commission in its reasoned opinion (pp. 7 to 9).

42. In its application, (13) the Commission does not introduce a new complaint. It updates its arguments so as to take account of recent developments in the Court's case-law on the subject of the notion of 'contract for pecuniary interest', which requires a service to be provided by the contractor which is of 'immediate economic benefit' to the contracting authority. (14) In my view, in doing so, the Commission merely sets out in detail the arguments in support of its claim relating to the alleged failure to fulfil obligations which had already been put forward in more general terms in the letter of formal notice and in the reasoned opinion. (15)

43. The Commission's action thus seems to be admissible.

C – Applicability ratione temporis of Directive 2004/18

44. As a preliminary point, as I have already explained, I consider this question to relate not to the admissibility of the action, but to the substance of the dispute. (16)

45. Under Article 80 of Directive 2004/18, the directive had to be transposed no later than 31 January 2006.

46. According to the Commission, negotiations did not really begin until after the adoption of the master plan on 14 February 2006, i.e. after the entry into force of Directive 2004/18. The Netherlands Government, on the other hand, considers that it is the municipality's decision of 23 April 2002 that determines the applicable directive, as that was when the municipality decided not to follow the European tender procedure, but to choose just two candidates. The choice to proceed with Hurks was made on 15 July 2003.

47. The key dates are therefore as follows:

– 7 August 2001: decision taken by the municipality of Eindhoven to carry out, within its territory, a construction project in an area located between the existing district of Doornakkers and the new residential district of Tongelresche Akkers; (17)

– 12 September 2001: approval by the municipal council of the urban development plans for the Doornakkers centre project drawn up by the municipality. (18) Those plans contain the planning guidelines for the district in the form of a plan. They also provide for infrastructure and facilities with a view to joining the existing district of Doornakkers and the new residential district of Tongelresche Akkers. The former would have a healthcare centre, commercial premises and apartments. The latter would be home to accommodation and leisure infrastructure, including sports facilities;

– 11 April 2002: opinion entitled 'Selection of a promoter for the Doornakkers district centre'. (19) That opinion, drafted by the municipality's internal services, informs the municipal council of the criteria to be applied in selecting the purchaser of the land on which the Doornakkers centre project will be carried out. The opinion also states that the contract for the sale of plots offered to the contractual partner approached should comply with 'the framework conditions and guidelines set by the municipality, namely the specifications', and should 'meet the … wishes of the purchasers/end users'. (20) These framework conditions and guidelines set out, inter alia, the functions and the heights of the buildings in accordance with the urban development plan. They envisage the construction of apartments and housing, the extension of the existing healthcare centre, a connecting area between the two main sites, good accessibility, an underground car park in accordance with municipal parking regulations, conservation of valuable green spaces, and the creation of a square and a new district park. It proposes the selection of two companies, Hurks and Haagdijk;

– 23 April 2002: adoption by the municipal council of the opinion of 11 April 2002;

– 11 June 2002: meeting between the municipality and the two promoters approached to carry out the project. The topics of that discussion are the abovementioned framework conditions and guidelines and a document entitled ‘Information for prospective promoters participating in a selection process’; (21)

– 15 July 2003: selection by the municipality of Hurks as the contractual partner for carrying out the project; (22)

– July 2003 to October 2005, production by Hurks (with the assistance of an architects’ practice) of a master plan in which it fleshes out its construction plans. That master plan includes numerous drawings specifying the dimensions, locations and spreads of the buildings to be constructed in accordance with the municipality’s framework conditions and guidelines;

– 31 January 2006: time-limit for the transposition of Directive 2004/18;

– 14 February 2006: approval by the municipality of the master plan drawn up by Hurks;

– 12 June and 16 July 2007: signature of the ‘cooperation contract’.

1. Principle and exception

48. Each of the parties relies upon the judgments delivered by the Court in Commission v France (23) and pressetext Nachrichtenagentur. (24)

49. In Commission v France, the Court clarified the question of the application ratione temporis of Council Directive 93/38/EEC of 14 June 1993 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 84) by identifying a principle and an exception.

50. As regards the principle, ‘the decision by a contracting entity concerning the type of procedure to be followed and whether it is necessary for a prior call for competition to be issued for the award of a public contract constitutes a distinct stage in the procedure, a stage during which the essential characteristics of the execution of the procedure are defined and which may, as a rule, take place only at the point when that procedure is initiated. Accordingly, in determining whether [the directive] … is applicable to such a decision …, account must be taken, as a rule, of the point in time at which that decision was adopted’. (25) This is because ‘it would be contrary to the principle of legal certainty to determine the applicable law by reference to the date of the award of the contract since that date marks the end of the procedure, while the decision of the contracting entity to proceed with or without a prior call for competition is normally taken at the initial stage of that procedure’. (26)

51. Nevertheless – and herein lies the exception – if negotiations opened subsequently ‘were substantially different in character from those already conducted and were, therefore, such as to demonstrate the intention of the parties to renegotiate the essential terms of the contract, … the application [of the provisions of a subsequent directive] might be justified’. (27)

52. The notions of ‘materially different in character’ and ‘essential terms of the contract’ were developed in pressetext Nachrichtenagentur. The amendment necessary in order to be covered by the exception must affect a material aspect of the contract, such as:

– conditions which, had they been part of the initial award procedure, would have allowed for the admission of tenderers other than those initially admitted or would have allowed for the acceptance of a tender other than the one initially accepted; (28)

– the extension of the scope of the contract considerably to encompass services not initially covered; (29)

– an amendment which gives rise to a change in the economic balance of the contract in favour of the contractor in a manner which was not provided for initially; (30)

– the substitution, not provided for in the initial contract, of a new contractual partner for the one to which the contracting authority had initially awarded the contract; (31)

– the price.

2. Application in the present case

53. The exception identified by the Court in Commission v France, does not seem, prima facie, to be applicable as such in the present case. The exception covers situations in which a contract has been materially amended. However, it seems that the only contract signed between the municipality and Hurks dates from summer 2007.

54. It is nevertheless clear from the documents before the Court that the parties had already agreed on the essential points before the cooperation contract was signed. Moreover, the Commission does not, strictly speaking, claim the existence of fresh negotiations between the parties. It does, however, consider that certain essential aspects of the contract were determined only after the time-limit for the transposition of Directive 2004/18 had expired. According to the Commission, the dictum of Commission v France, should therefore be applied by analogy. (32)

55. I do not agree with that conclusion.

(a) The principle

56. In the view of the Court, the applicable directive is the one in force when the contracting authority chooses the type of procedure to be followed and decides definitively whether it is necessary for a prior call for competition to be issued for the award of a public contract. This rule is founded on the principle of legal certainty which does not permit the applicable law to be determined by reference to the date of the award of the contract since that date marks the end of the procedure, while the decision of the contracting entity to proceed with or without a prior call for competition is normally taken at the initial stage of that procedure. (33)

57. I do not therefore think that it is a question of the existence of a contract in the formal sense of the term, but of identifying, in the development of the matter over time, the time when the public authority takes ‘the decision … concerning the type of procedure to be followed and whether it is necessary for a prior call for competition to be issued for the award of a public contract’. (34)

58. This interpretation is confirmed in Hochtief and Linde-Kca-Dresden. In that judgment, the Court reaffirmed that where ‘the contracting authority’s decision to exclude the bid from the consortium set up by the applicants in the main proceedings and to continue the procedure with the two candidates who were considered to be suitable was taken before the date on which the period for transposition of Directive 2004/18 expired …, it would … be contrary to the principle of legal certainty to determine the law applicable … by reference to the date of the award of the contract, when the decision which in the present case is alleged to have infringed Community law was taken before the date [of expiry of the time-limit for transposition]’. (35)

59. In the present case, the decision within the meaning of the cited case-law was unquestionably taken by the municipality on 23 April 2002.

60. The urban development plan for the Doornakkers centre project had already been approved by the municipality on 12 September 2001. On that date, the project guidelines were known (infrastructure and facilities necessary for joining the existing district and the new district, types of buildings to be constructed, etc.).

61. On 23 April 2002, it is the method of selecting the promoter to carry out the project that is defined. On that date the municipality approved the opinion drafted by its services entitled 'Selection of a promoter for the Doornakkers district centre'. In that document, the role of the promoter and the selection method are expressly defined (see Articles 1.3 and 2). The two shortlisted candidates were already presented and the application of the public procurement rules was expressly rejected: 'at the end of the selection process, the municipality shall designate a prospective promoter to which it can award the promotion agreement. This will be, for the municipality, the contractual partner sought for a contract for the sale of land subject to conditions. These conditions must ensure that the planned district centre is constructed in accordance with the requirements and the wishes of the municipality and with the specifications and meets the wishes of the purchasers/end users. The fact that the municipality opts for a sale subject to conditions means that there will be no tender procedure and that the public procurement rules are not applicable'. (36)

62. This is certainly 'the decision by [the] contracting entity concerning the type of procedure to be followed and whether it is necessary for a prior call for competition to be issued for the award of a public contract'. (37)

(b) The exception

63. The question still remaining is therefore whether the abovementioned exception applies. In this respect, it is for the Commission, in the context of its action for failure to fulfil obligations, to show that essential aspects were amended after 31 January 2006, the date on which the time-limit for the transposition of Directive 2004/18 expired and which is considered to be the 'key' date by the parties.

64. The Commission relies on two aspects: the allocation of the financial risks for certain parts of the SPILcentrum project and responsibility for the development of public spaces.

(i) The SPILcentrum

65. In the project as a whole, the SPILcentrum was the infrastructure whose profitability was most uncertain. For that reason, Hurks did not wish to bear the financial risk alone. However, the municipality systematically refused to share the risk. Consequently, Hurks eventually agreed to proceed with the construction of the centre for its own account and at its own risk. In exchange, the municipality chose a housing corporation – Woonbedrijf – as the future owner of the SPILcentrum. In return Woonbedrijf received a one-off subsidy of EUR 2.41 million.

66. According to the Commission, this is an essential aspect of the collaboration between Hurks and the municipality. However, it could not be finalised until Woonbedrijf had been designated as owner on 13 February 2007.

(ii) Development of public spaces

67. In the opinion of the municipality adopted on 23 April 2002, it is stated, in Article 4.2, that 'the promoter shall also be responsible for the development of public spaces'. However, under the cooperation contract signed by the parties, public spaces remain in the ownership of the municipality, which is responsible, for its own account and at its own risk, for making the planning area (with the exception of the plot earmarked for the commercial centre) suitable for construction and habitation (Articles 8.1 and 8.2 of the cooperation contract).

68. Under Article 1.1 of the cooperation contract, the notion of 'making suitable for habitation' means 'inter alia the improvement of roads and their foundations, squares, pavements, green spaces and public spaces, including green compensation, urban furniture and urban facilities'.

69. According to the Commission, this is also an essential aspect of the collaboration which was agreed between the parties after the time-limit for the transposition of Directive 2004/18 had expired.

(c) Assessment

70. I do not think that the fact that the allocation of the financial risks for certain parts of the SPILcentrum project and responsibility for the development of public spaces could have been finally decided after the decision taken on 23 April 2002 is crucial.

71. Taking, for example, the aspects highlighted by the Court in pressetext Nachrichtenagentur, it would appear that neither of the two points identified by the Commission would have justified a new tender procedure:

– in the project as a whole, these two points would not have been sufficient to result in 'the admission of tenderers other than those [who could have been] initially admitted'; (38)

– the scope of the contract is, in any case, not extended considerably to encompass services not initially covered; (39)

– the amendment relating to the development of public spaces does not give rise to a notable change in the economic balance of the contract in favour of the contractor in a manner which was not provided for initially; (40)

– there is no substitution of a new contractual partner for the one to which the contracting authority had initially awarded the contract; (41)

– the price had already been fixed, as the Commission itself acknowledges. (42)

72. On the other hand, as the Commission itself pleads in order to prove the existence of a public works contract (which is paradoxical), 'a comparison between Article 1.1 of the cooperation contract and the information document communicated by the municipality to the prospective promoters in June 2002 shows that, for the most part, the assignment of the buildings to be constructed had been defined by the municipality as early as 2002'. (43)

73. In paragraph 43 of its application, it goes as far as to describe as 'details' the aspects which will be determined in the course of the negotiations subsequent to the decision of 23 April 2002. In paragraph 67 of its application, it also disputes that the object of the cooperation contract is merely the sale of land in view of the obligations imposed on the promoters during the 'informal' selection process. According to the Commission, 'the promoters were required to devise their plans on the basis of a specific concept, stipulated by the municipality, namely the "dumbbell" model, each of the two extremities forming a hub with facilities. If this represented merely the sale of land, no such obligation would have been provided for'.

74. At this point in my analysis, I therefore consider that the Commission has not provided the necessary and sufficient evidence to establish the application of Directive 2004/18, which is invoked in support of its action. In proceedings based on Article 258 TFEU, it is for the Commission to prove the existence of the failure. (44)

75. Furthermore, to take the Commission's view would lead to an absurd situation which is contrary to the objective pursued by the legislature. Following the Commission's reasoning, the date which should be used to determine the applicable directive would be the date on which the municipality adopted the master plan, i.e. 14 February 2006. However, that plan, produced by Hurks, is presented as a fully-fledged construction plan. Article 2 of the cooperation contract, which defines the object of the contract, expressly provides that it seeks to govern 'the terms and conditions for exclusive cooperation between the parties in order to carry out the project in accordance with the master plan and the other planning documents'. (45)

76. If the adoption of the master plan were the decision which determines the applicable directive, this would mean that the possible call for candidates would be based on the plans of a contractual partner selected outside a tender procedure which might not be successful at the end of the selection process. What promoter would agree to produce such a master plan without the guarantee of carrying out the project? What promoter would permit a competitor to use its plans?

77. It is certain that, just as the principle of legal certainty prevents the applicable law being determined by reference to the date of the award of the contract, (46) it prevents it being determined by reference to the date on which the plans of the pre-selected promoter are adopted by the public authority.

78. In addition, the rule identified by the Court in Commission v France, also safeguards the interests of competitors. To determine the applicable directive by reference to the decision whether to open a call for tenders makes it possible to give practical effect to possible recourse by competitors which have been rejected, de facto, by the decision of the public authority not to put the contract out to competitive tender.

79. By rejecting the view that the applicable law is determined by the contracting authority's decision to award the contract, the rule has the fortunate consequence of preserving an appropriate date for challenges by injured parties of decisions taken by the contracting authorities.

80. Consequently, since the Commission has not provided evidence to prove that Directive 2004/18, which is invoked in support of its action, was applicable and it confirmed at the hearing that it was restricting the basis of its action to that directive alone (even though the applicable definitions and principles were, in its view, identical in Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (47)), I consider that the action must be dismissed.

81. Nevertheless, in case the Court does not concur with my reasoning and considers Directive 2004/18 to be applicable, I will also examine below the substantive questions raised by the present case.

D – Substance

82. In order to find that the Kingdom of the Netherlands has failed to fulfil its obligations, it is necessary to determine the nature of the contract concluded between the municipality, on the one hand, and Hurks, on the other, with a view to the redevelopment of the Doornakkers centre: does it represent merely the sale of land or a public works concession within the meaning of Directive 2004/18? (48)

1. Assessment

83. The three conditions required for the existence of a public works concession follow from the definitions of 'public works contracts' and 'public works concession' in Article 1(2)(a) and (b) and in Article 1(3) of Directive 2004/18 respectively. There must be:

– a written contract between a contracting authority and an economic operator [Article 1(2)(a)];

– a contract whose object is either the execution, or both the design and execution, of works related to one of the activities within the meaning of Annex I to Directive 2004/18 or a work, or the realisation, by whatever means, of a work corresponding to the requirements specified by the contracting authority [Article 1(2)(b)];

– a contract concluded for pecuniary interest, where the consideration must consist either solely in the right to exploit the work or in this right together with payment (Article 1(3)).

84. As the existence of a written contract between the municipality and Hurks has not been called into question, only the second and third conditions will be examined.

(a) A public works contract

85. The existence of a public works concession necessarily implies, first and foremost, the existence of a public works contract. Three scenarios are provided for in Article 1(2)(b) of Directive 2004/18. The contract must have as its object:

– either the execution of works related to one of the activities within the meaning of Annex I of Directive 2004/18 or of a work (a work meaning the outcome of building or civil engineering works taken as a whole which is sufficient of itself to fulfil an economic or technical function);

– or both the design and execution of works related to one of the activities within the meaning of Annex I of Directive 2004/18 or a work; – or the realisation, by whatever means, of a work corresponding to the requirements specified by the contracting authority.

86. According to the Netherlands Government, the contract concluded between the municipality and Hurks does not come in any of these three categories in so far as it covers merely the sale of land. Article 16 of Directive 2004/18 expressly excludes this kind of transaction from its scope.

87. It is true that the agreements between the municipality and Hurks relate to the sale of several plots of land owned by the municipality. However, it is clear from reading the 'cooperation contract' and from all the legal and economic relations established between Hurks and the municipality that this can be only an accessory element of the contract. Furthermore, the Court has held that it was prudent not to exclude the application of Directive 2004/18 where an award procedure provided for the sale of land which would subsequently form the subject of a works contract. (49) This reasoning may be applied, a fortiori, where the two transactions are provided for in the same agreement, as in the present case.

88. According to the recitals in the preamble to the cooperation contract signed by the municipality and Hurks:

– '[t]he parties wish to develop and construct a new centre for the new residential district of Tongelresche Akkers and the existing district of Doornakkers …' (recital B);

– '[t]he municipality and Hurks have reached an agreement on the development and the implementation of the functions set out in recital B of the present …' – i.e. a healthcare centre, a play, integration and learning centre with apartments, an extension of an existing healthcare centre with an underground car park, a commercial centre with housing, and an underground car park, housing (recital F).

89. The object of the contract is itself defined without any reference to the sale of land. Under Article 2 of the cooperation contract, it seeks to govern 'the terms and conditions for exclusive cooperation between the parties in order to carry out the project in accordance with the master plan and the other planning documents'. The project in question is itself defined by the contract as the 'redevelopment of the planning area', which includes making that area 'suitable for construction and habitation' under the conditions laid down in the contract (Article 1.1 of the cooperation contract).

90. That contract also provides for the creation of a 'project team' composed of a 'project group' and several 'working groups', whose role is to devise the planning documents – that is to say the final draft of the urban development plan, the local area development plan, the specifications, the relevant demolition documents, the development plan for public spaces, etc. (Article 5 of the cooperation contract) – and to prepare the decisions taken by the parties, it being understood that the project group is chaired by the municipality's project manager (Article 3 of the cooperation contract).

91. Lastly, Article 7.5 of that contract, which concerns the sale of land, expressly makes the supply of the land subject to an undertaking given by Hurks to 'construct buildings on the plots in accordance with the planning documents and the schedule', which is the subject of Article 6.

92. In addition, according to the procedural documents, the price of the land is EUR 5 616 024, (50) whilst the construction of the project is evaluated at EUR 28 186 000 (Annex 7 to the application).

93. It can therefore be inferred from the cooperation contract that its object was not primarily the sale of land, but above all the execution of works related to one of the activities within the meaning of Annex I to Directive 2004/18, namely, to mention just one example, general construction of buildings and civil engineering works or a work within the meaning of that directive. (51)

94. I think that the project covered by the cooperation contract in question also comes under the third scenario mentioned in Article 1(2)(b) of Directive 2004/18, namely 'the realisation, by whatever means, of a work corresponding to the requirements specified by the contracting authority'.

95. If reference is made to the clarifications given in Helmut Müller, cited above, which is relied on by the Commission and the Netherlands Government, 'in order for it to be possible to establish that a contracting authority has specified its requirements within the meaning of [Article 1(2)(b) of Directive 2004/18], the authority must have taken measures to define the type of the work or, at the very least, have had a decisive influence on its design'. (52) This means that 'the mere fact that a public authority, in the exercise of its urban-planning powers, examines certain building plans presented to it, or takes a decision applying its powers in that sphere, does not satisfy the obligation that there be "requirements specified by the contracting authority" within the meaning of that provision'. (53)

96. In this regard, I share the Commission's opinion. It is clear from the cooperation contract signed by the two parties, the other documents referred to in that contract (master plan, planning documents, etc.) and the information document published by the municipality in June 2002 – i.e. at the very beginning of the project – for the two prospective promoters that it was the municipality that decided not only on the relevant land-use planning, but also on the assignment of the buildings to be constructed.

97. It is apparent, inter alia, from the document entitled 'Doornakkers Centre – Programme' (54) that the number of buildings to be constructed is specified precisely, but also the number of rooms, the function allocated to each of them, and even their surface area. The number of parking spaces to be provided for each building is also indicated. (55)

98. The Court has already had occasion to point out that specifications 'relating to a precise description of the buildings to be constructed, their quality and their fixtures and fittings, far exceed the usual requirements of a tenant in relation to newly-constructed premises of a certain size'. (56) According to the Court, a contract containing such specifications therefore has 'as its main object the construction [of a building] in accordance with the requirements specified by [the contracting authority]'. (57)

99. In those circumstances, which are similar to those in the present case, the Court held that, in so far as those constructions constituted a 'work' within the meaning of the applicable directive, they were sufficient of themselves to fulfil an economic function, their value was higher than the threshold laid down under Directive 93/37 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts and the contract had been concluded for pecuniary interest, the contract had to be classified as a 'public works contract'. The same findings must be made in the present case.

100. Lastly, the composition and the tasks entrusted to the 'project team' defined in Article 3 of the cooperation contract also reflect the municipality's desire to maintain a pro-active role as the project progresses, going beyond simply examining the building plans presented to it or taking a decision in the exercise of its regulatory urban-planning powers. It is this 'team', led by the municipality's project manager, which must devise and draw up the planning documents, which include not only the urban development plan and the local area development plan, but also the provisional and final proposal for the various functions, the specifications and the drawings of the various functions, and the construction and communication schedules (see Articles 5.1 to 5.3 of the cooperation contract). Furthermore, any departures from the master plan identified by the project group must be submitted to the municipality for approval (Article 5.4 of the contract).

Interim conclusion

101. I consider that the first condition laid down by Directive 2004/18 for the existence of a public works concession, namely the existence of a public works contract, is satisfied and that the Commission provides sufficient proof thereof. The project in question comes at least under the first and third scenarios referred to in Article 1(2)(b) of Directive 2004/18. It concerns the execution of works related to one of the activities within the meaning of Annex I of Directive 2004/18 and/or of a work within the meaning of that directive, and the realisation, by whatever means, of a work corresponding to the requirements specified by the contracting authority.

102. I wish to point out, in so far as it is relevant, that the Netherlands Government is incorrect in its claim that the three situations covered by Article 1(2)(b) of Directive 2004/18 are mutually exclusive.

103. As the Commission points out, the Court has already had occasion to state that 'infrastructure works of the kind listed in Article 4 of Law No 847/64 constitute either building or civil engineering works, hence activities of the kind referred to in Annex II to ?Directive 2004/18], or works sufficient in themselves to fulfil an economic and technical function. They thus satisfy, at the very least, the criteria laid down in the first and second indents ?of Article 1(2)(b) of Directive 2004/18]'. (58)

104. The fact that the works planned by the municipality in the present case come under more than one of the cases envisaged by the directive cannot therefore result in the dismissal of its application.

(b) A contract concluded for pecuniary interest

105. The third condition that must be met by a contract in order to satisfy the definition of 'public works concession' is to be concluded for pecuniary interest.

106. It is settled case-law that the pecuniary nature of the concession contract means that the contracting authority which has concluded a public contract receives a service pursuant to that contract in return for consideration paid by it to the contractor. (59) That service, for the contracting authority, consists in the realisation of works from which it intends to benefit. (60)

(i) A service and an immediate economic benefit

107. In the present case, the obligation to execute the works in question is expressly laid down in Article 7.5 of the cooperation contract, under which 'Hurks gives an undertaking to the municipality to construct buildings on the plots in accordance with the planning documents and the schedule'.

108. However, the Court stated in Helmut Müller, that such a service had to 'be of direct economic benefit to the contracting authority'. (61)

109. Rather than talking about immediate economic benefit, in his Opinion in Helmut Müller, Advocate General Mengozzi developed the requirement that 'there be a direct link between the public authority and the work or works to be executed' so as to 'reconcile the potential contradiction between the need to prevent abuses on the one hand and the need to avoid extending the scope of [Directive 2004/18] indefinitely on the other'. (62)

110. According to Advocate General Mengozzi, the existence of a direct link can be found:

– where the public authority immediately acquires ownership of the property or the works to be produced. This case covered situations in which the authority does not procure the property, but obtains an immediate economic benefit as a result of it, such as the right to make use of the property; (63)

– where public funds, or more generally public resources (such as making land available free of charge), are employed for the execution of the work and/or works; (64)

– where the work or works to be carried out are the result of an initiative taken by the authority in question. (65) However, this residual category must be distinguished from 'the mere pursuit of the public interest through recourse to ordinary town planning powers' for Directive 2004/18 to apply. (66)

111. As I have already stated, in point 108 of this Opinion, the Court did not adopt as such the criterion of a direct link in Helmut Müller. On the contrary, it opted to refer only to the notion of 'immediate economic benefit'. In doing so, the Court seems to have excluded the abovementioned residual category – that is, the scenario of an initiative taken by the contracting authority – and therefore restricted the scope of Directive 2004/18.

112. This interpretation nevertheless allows the public authorities a certain margin of discretion. In Helmut Müller, the Court only excluded from the concept of immediate economic benefit the mere exercise of urban-planning powers intended to give effect to the public interest. Otherwise, the Court simply illustrated its remarks by giving five non-exhaustive examples. Relevant situations were cases where:

– the public authority becomes owner of the works or work which is the subject of the contract; (67)

– the contracting authority holds a legal right over the use of the works which are the subject of the contract, in order that they can be made available to the public; (68)

– the contracting authority benefits from economic advantages derived from the future use or transfer of the work; (69)

– the contracting authority contributed financially to the realisation of the work; (70)

– the contracting authority assumes risks were the work to be an economic failure. (71)

113. The Court does not mention the case referred to by Advocate General Mengozzi in which the work or works to be carried out are the result of an initiative taken by the authority in question. (72) On the other hand, like him it excludes the case where that public authority merely exercises urban-planning powers, intended to give effect to the public interest. (73)

What does this mean for the present case?

114. In the present case, the municipality has certainly not become the owner of the constructed properties and that was not its intention.

115. However, the relations established by it for the purposes of the Doornakkers centre, whether with Hurks or with other actors such as Woonbedrijf, (74) tend to show an intervention by the municipality which goes beyond coherent planning of the development of part of an urban district. (75)

116. It should not be ignored that the functions to be fulfilled by the project were defined precisely by the municipality and include a healthcare centre, a play, integration and learning centre (SPILcentrum) with apartments, an extension of the existing healthcare centre with an underground car park, a commercial centre with housing and an underground car park and more housing (recital B of the cooperation contract).

117. The contracts relating to the use and the financing of the SPILcentrum also demonstrate that the project is of immediate economic benefit to the municipality.

118. As I have already explained above, (76) Hurks did not wish to bear the financial risk of the SPILcentrum alone on account of its uncertain profitability. It eventually agreed to construct it for its own account and at its own risk, as, in exchange, the municipality had approved the housing corporation Woonbedrijf as the future owner of the SPILcentrum, as early as 13 February 2007. (77) Hurks was therefore certain that the least profitable building would be used.

119. Woonbedrijf received a one-off operating subsidy of EUR 2.41 million from the municipality for the three unprofitable functions of the SPILcentrum: the sports hall, the meeting space and the youth space. (78)

120. The Netherlands Government confirms that the sports hall and the meeting space are used by the Sportbedrijf De Karpen association. It also explains that the association ‘belongs’ to the municipality. (79)

121. With the designation of Woonbedrijf as owner of the SPILcentrum, the agreement signed by that housing corporation and the municipality on 15 April 2008 and the use of the sports hall and the meeting space by the Sportbedrijf De Karpen association, the municipality guaranteed that the SPILcentrum is made available to the public.

122. This is a second illustration of the immediate economic benefit mentioned by the Court in Helmut Müller. Immediate economic benefit ‘may also be held to exist where it is provided that the contracting authority is to hold a legal right over the use of the works which are the subject of the contract, in order that they can be made available to the public’. (80)

123. Admittedly, it is not the municipality itself that is the user of the properties, but an association which ‘belongs’ to it (in the words of the Netherlands Government). However, the Court has already held that the State could take the form of bodies other than its own structures. Thus, for State aid, ‘[w]ith regard to the [condition connected with an intervention by the State or through State resources], it is clear from established case-law that there is no need to draw any distinction according to whether the aid is granted directly by the State or by public or private bodies established or appointed by that State’. (81) The same reasoning may be applied mutatis mutandis in the present case.

124. Second, I consider that the municipality can also be considered to have contributed financially to the project (fourth example given by the Court in Helmut Müller, cited above, point 52) in so far as Hurks did not agreed to build the SPILcentrum at its own risk until the municipality had given it an assurance that Woonbedrijf would be the owner of the centre. In exchange, Woonbedrijf received from the municipality an operating subsidy in excess of EUR 2 million.

125. It can also be seen that the transaction represents financial gain for the municipality in so far as the infrastructure promoter is required to pay for something which, in the absence of the cooperation contract, the municipality itself would have to build and finance. It should be noted that the extension of the healthcare centre is evaluated at EUR 8 400 000 and the construction of the SPILcentrum at EUR 7 386 500, including EUR 3 738 500 for functions likely to be used by the municipality (the school, the sports hall and the youth centre). (82)

126. Lastly, going beyond their contribution to the general interest or good urban planning, several of those functions (in particular the healthcare centre and the commercial centre) relate to economic activities which can bring in revenue for the municipality through taxes and other expenditure. In other words, to paraphrase the Court, the contracting authority, which is the municipality, will enjoy economic advantages derived from the use (or future transfer) of the work (third example given by the Court in paragraph 52 of the judgment in Helmut Müller).

127. I therefore take the view that, in the present case, having regard to the material in the file, the existence of an immediate economic benefit for the municipality is proven to the required legal standard: the municipality has gone well beyond simply achieving the objective of ‘the development or coherent planning of part of an urban district’. (83)

(ii) A consideration

128. As I have already stated, the pecuniary nature of a concession contract means that the contracting authority which has concluded a public contract receives a service pursuant to that contract in return for consideration.

129. Whilst, for the contracting authority, the service resides in the execution of the works, for the contractor, the consideration consists either in the right to exploit the work or in this right together with payment (Article 1(3) of Directive 2004/18).

130. In view of the legal relations established between the municipality and Hurks, I have doubts, above all, as to the very existence of the ‘right of exploitation’ conferred on Hurks when it is the owner of the land and the properties to be constructed. As the Netherlands Government explained at the hearing, to exploit means to benefit from the advantages and to tolerate the disadvantages of the work of a third party. That is not the situation in the present case.

131. Nevertheless, if there had to be 'exploitation' within the meaning of Directive 2004/18, the present case would raise a further two questions. First, is the grant of a public works concession – and of the right to exploit the work – for an indefinite duration compatible with EU law? Second, does the consideration exist where the concessionaire is or becomes the owner of the land and/or the finished works?

– Public works concession and indefinite duration?

132. First of all, I concur with the Commission's observation that Directive 2004/18 does not give the slightest indication that a concession should have a limited duration.

133. The Court has already had occasion to consider this question. I am referring to the abovementioned judgments in pressetext Nachrichtenagentur and Helmut Müller. According to the Netherlands Government, it is clear from paragraph 79 of the judgment in Helmut Müller that a concession contract of indefinite duration is contrary, per se, to EU law.

134. I must point out, however, that the Court has not given a clear statement in so far as it opted to use the conditional [in the French], explaining that 'in any event, with regard to the duration of concessions, there are serious grounds, including the need to guarantee competition, for holding the grant of concessions of unlimited duration to be contrary to the European Union legal order'. (84)

135. In addition, the Court refers to paragraph 73 of the judgment in pressetext Nachrichtenagentur, in which it asserted that 'the practice of concluding a public services contract for an indefinite period is in itself at odds with the scheme and purpose of the Community rules governing public contracts'. However, this paragraph of the judgment cannot be dissociated from the following paragraph, which forms the conclusion of the Court's reasoning. In that paragraph it ruled that '[n]evertheless, Community law, as it currently stands, does not prohibit the conclusion of public service contracts for an indefinite period'. (85)

136. EU law has not changed since that judgment was delivered. Unlike framework agreements, the European legislature has still not set a time-limit for concession contracts. (86) However, such a limit does appear in the Proposal for a Directive of the European Parliament and of the Council on the award of concession contracts (87) which is currently under discussion. If that amendment is adopted, EU law will then impose a time-limit. The text itself will no longer leave any room for doubt as to the interpretation of what the Court has called 'the scheme and purpose of the Community rules governing public contracts'. (88)

137. Second, it is true that the practice of concluding a public contract for an indefinite period might, over time, impede free competition between potential service providers and hinder the application of the provisions of European Union directives guaranteeing advertising of procedures for the award of public contracts. (89) However, simply to exclude contracts of indefinite duration from the scope of Directive 2004/18 seems to run an even greater risk, as it is more common: the risk of the same rules being circumvented.

138. As the Commission points out in its application, if such concession contracts of indefinite duration fell outside the scope of Directive 2004/18, the parties would need only conclude a written contract for pecuniary interest which is of indefinite duration to avoid the rules on equality, transparency and non-discrimination which form the basis for the public procurement rules.

139. Lastly, it must be ascertained exactly what is covered by the notion of 'indefinite duration'. In my view, this must be distinguished from 'infinite duration' which, alone, is limitless. On the other hand, a contract of indefinite duration is a contract whose duration has not been fixed at the beginning, but which may be terminated for certain reasons provided for in the contract, with or without notice and with or without penalty.

140. For these various reasons, I therefore believe that a concession of indefinite duration as defined in the preceding point may be covered by Directive 2004/18.

141. However, that is not the situation in the present case, as a concession of indefinite duration has not been awarded to Hurks, but ownership of the land and the future works. Consequently, Hurks does not enjoy a right of indefinite duration, but a right of 'infinite duration'. Conversely, for the municipality, the duration of the contract is clearly identified. Once the buildings provided for in the cooperation contract are constructed, the contract has been performed and the parties' rights and obligations come to an end. Before then, the only grounds for termination of the cooperation contract relate to the essential conditions for carrying out the project, such as obtaining a valid building permit (90) or the solvency of the contractor. (91)

142. In fact, the only question arising in the present case in analysing the consideration required for the concession contract to be a contract for pecuniary interest is the ownership of the site as a whole.

– Public works concession and ownership?

143. According to the Commission, the transfer of ownership of the land to Hurks was accompanied by the concurrent transfer of a right of exploitation of an indefinite duration, since the sale of the land to Hurks alone would not have permitted the works provided for in the cooperation contract to be executed.

144. Under Article 7.2 and 7.3 of the cooperation contract, the existence of a building permit to execute the works constituted a suspensive or resolutive condition for the sale of the land having regard to the relevant aspects. The execution of works was therefore made possible only by the undertaking given by the municipality in Article 6 of the cooperation contract to collaborate fully.

145. According to the Netherlands Government, a distinction should be drawn between exploitation as the owner and exploitation as the concessionaire. In the first case, exploitation is based on the owner's right of ownership. In the second case, exploitation is based on a concession granted by the owner to the concessionaire. In the present case, since the municipality transferred ownership of the land to Hurks, the Netherlands Government considers that Hurks exploits it as the owner and not by virtue of a concession. In support of its arguments, it again invokes Helmut Müller.

146. In the Opinion in Helmut Müller, Advocate General Mengozzi took the view that, if the words 'right to exploit' used by Directive 2004/18 in its definition of public works concessions could be interpreted broadly, one possibility which 'ought to be excluded, in view of the meaning and the general system of the measure in question, is the possibility of a public works concession in which the concessionaire has a right of ownership in the finished works'. (92)

147. The Court has taken a more nuanced position. It is true that 'in order for a contracting authority to be able to transfer to the other contracting party the right to exploit a work within the terms of [Article 1(3) of Directive 2004/18], that contracting authority must be in a position to exploit that work'. (93) However, according to the Court, 'that will normally not be the case where the only basis for the right of exploitation is the right of ownership of the economic operator concerned', since 'as long as an economic operator enjoys the right to exploit the land which he owns, it is in principle impossible for a public authority to grant a concession relating to that exploitation'. (94)

148. Accordingly, if the principle is to exclude a concession where the 'builder' is the owner of the land, the use of the words 'normally' and 'in principle' gives rise to the possibility of an exception.

149. The Court has not, however, given any indication as to the conceivable exceptions. The only clue lies in the explanation of the rule: the contracting authority may not exploit the work 'where the only basis for the right of exploitation is the right of ownership of the economic operator concerned'. (95)

150. It must be acknowledged that, in the light of this wording, opinion in legal literature has also been divided.

151. For some, the answer was clear: if the public authority does not remain or does not become the owner of the work forming the object of the contract, there is no concession in so far as the authority cannot grant a concession for a property to which it has no right. (96) As I have already explained, Directive 2004/18 requires the contracting authority to grant the concessionaire, as a consideration for realising the work, the right to exploit it or this right together with payment (Article 1(3) of Directive 2004/18). The right of ownership includes the right to exploit. Consequently, if the former is transferred, the latter can no longer be.

152. For proponents of this view, which I will describe as strict, the concessionaire must necessarily leave ownership with the contracting authority and retain the management of the property in order, inter alia, to make it available to the public and to receive a payment in exchange for this. (97)

153. Nevertheless, for others, Directive 2004/18 promotes a broader understanding of concessions. (98) According to these writers, exploitation of the work implies the right to derive profit from it even if this does not necessarily happen through the levying of fees paid by users. According to this interpretation, the right to exploit may be passed on by the promoter in the price at which the land, housing or other works are sold. In that case, ownership of the property does not remain with or revert to the contracting authority, but its contractual partner was nevertheless able to exploit the property it built by selling it.

154. This interpretation would be consistent with the definitions laid down in Directive 2004/18, as public works concession is defined by reference to the notion of 'public works'. It is true that the definition of public works contracts does not require the contracting authority to remain or become the owner of the property. In the view of the writers who support a broad interpretation of concession, a distinction should not therefore be drawn between the two kinds of contract depending on the holder of the right of ownership. (99)

155. For others still, the question has not been resolved and clarification on this point would be welcome. (100)

156. I share the latter opinion.

157. If we wish to adopt the framework outlined by the Court in Helmut Müller – the contracting authority may not exploit the work where 'the only basis for the right of exploitation is the right of ownership of the economic operator concerned' (101) – it must be asked what could be the basis for the right of exploitation but not the right of ownership.

158. In the present case, what would be the other basis for the right of exploitation?

159. Aside from the right of ownership exercised over the land and the buildings – whether that right is acquired prior to or concurrently with the transactions and whether the promoter has acquired it from a third party or from a public authority – I can possibly see only the acquisition of the permits required for the execution of works covered by the cooperation contract.

160. It should not be forgotten, however, that in Helmut Müller, the Court rejected the view that the economic risk inherent in concession lies in the uncertainty over obtaining the necessary urban planning authorisations. For the Court, in this case, the risk would not be the risk linked to exploitation, but to the contracting authority's powers in respect of urban planning. (102) Furthermore, in the present case, the risk does not exist for the promoter since the cooperation contract expressly provides that 'the contracts for the sale of the plots in question shall mention that the supply [of the land] was subject to the resolutive condition that a valid building permit has been issued on the date of commencement of the construction works as provided for in Article 9.1' (103) and that 'the supply of the plot for the commercial centre and for the housing shall take place no later than four weeks after a valid building permit is available for the fulfilment of the function concerned'. (104)

161. By analogy, I therefore consider that it is not possible to infer a basis for the right to exploit the works from the resolutive condition relating to the acquisition of permits. If permits are not obtained, the works will simply not be constructed and the sale of the land possibly cancelled (see Article 7.2 to 7.4 of the cooperation contract).

162. It is true that Hurks needs the municipality to help it to obtain the necessary permits and exemptions for the execution of the works. However, it seems that it is not the municipality that issues the permits. Consequently, it cannot be regarded as the 'basis' for the right of exploitation.

163. More generally, I have doubts as to the very existence of cases where the only basis for the right of exploitation is the right of ownership of the contracting authority or of the operator.

164. A priori, the different conventional forms taken by the right which permit the use of an object without having ownership of it always result from breaking up that ownership (whether that be, for example, servitudes, emphyteutic leases or usufruct). If the concessionaire derives its right to exploit from one of these forms (servitude, emphyteutic lease, usufruct), it is not therefore the owner and the question of the impossibility of a concession does not arise.

165. If that right is granted by the contracting authority, the concessionaire is not the owner, but it only benefits from a limited right of exploitation and derives that right from the authorisation to exploit the works granted by the contracting authority.

166. Conversely, if it grants a servitude, a usufruct or an emphyteutic lease, it does so as the owner and any exploitation that it retains stems from its right of ownership.

167. The uncertainty stemming from the wording of Helmut Müller, with regard to the effect of ownership of the work by the operator seems to be very small and restricted to situations which do not appear to arise in the present case.

168. Like Advocates General Mengozzi and Jääskinen, I would be in favour of the Court simply ruling out the possibility of a public works concession where a right of ownership of the finished works is granted to the (purported) concessionaire. (105)

169. Whatever the case, if the Court were to remove, either way, the uncertainty over the effect of ownership of the work by the operator which stems from Helmut Müller, I consider that, in the circumstances of the present case, the Commission does not demonstrate to the required legal standard the actual existence of a consideration – namely the right to exploit or this right together with payment – for Hurks, the owner of the land and the finished works. Consequently, there can be no question of a public works concession contract.

170. In the light of this last observation, I suggest that the Court dismiss the Commission's action.

171. It is true that my conclusion allows the risk of the circumvention of public procurement rules to persist, through contracts of sale with the transmission of the right of ownership. As a result, the situation is certainly not satisfactory. However, this is a consideration de lege ferenda.

172. In the present case, the Court is required to rule within the strict framework of an action for failure to fulfil obligations having regard to the law as it stands and the evidence provided by the Commission. If the Commission considers the risk described above to be considerable and harmful to the European Union, it is for it to exercise its right of legislative initiative in order to amend Directive 2004/18.

2. Summary

173. The applicable directive is the one in force when the contracting authority chooses the type of procedure to be followed and assesses whether it is necessary for a prior call for competition to be issued for the award of a public contract.

174. In the present case, I consider that the municipality took that decision on 23 April 2002. In my view, Directive 2004/18 was not therefore applicable. However, it is the basis for the Commission's action.

175. The conditions required for the existence of a public works concession follow from the definitions of 'public works contracts' and 'public works concession' in Article 1(2)(a) and (b) and in Article 1(3) of Directive 2004/18 respectively. There are three. There must be:

– a written contract between a contracting authority and an economic operator;

– a contract whose object is either the execution, or both the design and execution, of works related to one of the activities within the meaning of Annex I to Directive 2004/18 or a work, or the realisation, by whatever means, of a work corresponding to the requirements specified by the contracting authority;

– a contract concluded for pecuniary interest, where the consideration must consist either solely in the right to exploit the work or in this right together with payment (Article 1(3)).

176. In my view, the pecuniary nature of the contract requires, first, the realisation of a work by the concessionaire which is of immediate economic benefit to the contracting authority and, second, a consideration for the concessionaire, namely the right to exploit the work or this right together with payment to the concessionaire. To satisfy this condition, as the applicable legislation stands at present, the concession may be granted for an indefinite duration, but not infinitely, in particular in the form of a transfer of the contractual partner's right of ownership.

177. Consequently, since Hurks derives its right of exploitation from ownership of the land purchased from the municipality and has not therefore obtained it through a public works concession contract, I consider the Commission's action to be unfounded.

IV – Costs

178. Under Article 138 of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. The Commission must therefore be ordered to pay the costs incurred by the Kingdom of the Netherlands, since it has applied for costs.

179. In accordance with Article 140 of the Rules of Procedure, the Federal Republic of Germany is ordered to bear its own costs.

V – Conclusion

180. In the light of the foregoing considerations, I propose that the Court:

– dismiss the action brought by the European Commission, since Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts is not applicable ratione temporis;

– in the alternative, dismiss the Commission's action, since Directive 2004/18 is not applicable because the contract at issue is not a public works concession contract;

– in any event, order the Commission to pay the costs incurred by the Kingdom of the Netherlands and order the Federal Republic of Germany to bear its own costs.

49 – Helmut Müller, cited above, paragraph 82.

50 – At the hearing, the Netherlands Government confirmed that the price of the land had been assessed beforehand by an independent expert and that it did not take into account any increase in value subsequently realised by the promoter. Hurks was not granted any reduction in consideration of the advantages that the municipality would derive from the execution of the project.

51 – With regard to this latter category – a work – reference can usefully be made to Auroux and Others, which also concerned a project to revitalise a district through the creation of a leisure centre consisting of, inter alia, a multiplex cinema and commercial premises. According to the Court, ‘[i]t is clear from Article 1(c) of [Directive 2004/18] that the existence of a work must be determined in relation to the economic or technical function of the result of the works undertaken (see Joined Cases C-187/04 and C-188/04 Commission v Italy, … paragraph 26). As is apparent from a number of clauses in the agreement, the construction of the leisure centre is intended to accommodate commercial and service activities, so that the agreement must be regarded as fulfilling an economic function’ (Case C-220/05 Auroux and Others [2007] ECR I-385, paragraph 41). 96 – 'Helmut Müller[, cited above,] taught us that there could be a concession only if the contracting authority retained ownership of the works in question, the idea being that it is not possible to grant a concession for something that you do not possess or that you no longer possess' (Llorens, F., and Soler-Couteaux, P., 'Marchés, DSP, concession de travaux ou d'aménagement: de quelques problèmes de frontière', Contrats et marchés publics, Les revues Jurisclasseur, November 2011, indicator 10). The same writers expressed a similar view in an initial commentary on Helmut Müller: 'One thing is sure: the sale of land cannot be treated in the same way as a works concession if the work to be constructed remains in the (definitive) ownership of the purchaser. … This closes the debate on whether the exploitation by a purchaser of land of the buildings which he expects to construct there as owner cannot be treated in the same way as the right of exploitation, which is a characteristic of concession'. However, the writers are uncertain about the situation – similar to the present case – where the contracting authority contributes to the financing of the buildings or if it took the initiative for them. Nevertheless, in this case, 'the contract can no longer be treated in the same way as a concession if the exploitation by the purchaser relates solely to the works of which it is the owner' (Llorens, F., and Soler-Couteaux, P., 'La vente de terrains, la concession de travaux publics et le marché public de travaux: la vision de la CJUE (à propos de l'arrêt Helmut Müller)', Contrats et marchés publics, Les revues Jurisclasseur, May 2010, indicator 5). For a criticism of this view, see Durviaux, A.-L., 'Droit européen des marchés publics et autres contrats publics', RTD eur., 2011, p. 423 to 447, sp. n° 13. For a strict interpretation, see also Fatôme, E., and Richer, L., 'Concession de travaux et droit d'exploitation', AJDA, 2012, p. 682: 'Therefore, as the right to exploit a property constitutes an attribute of the right of ownership of that property, it seems logical that, for a contract to be regarded as a works concession, that contract must provide that once completed by the contractual partner, the work becomes the property of the contracting authority'. As was explained above, I do not, on the other hand, share the view taken by Mr Jääskinen regarding the effect of the indefinite duration of the contract on the classification of the transaction.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Fourth Chamber)

21 December 2011 (*)

(Reference for a preliminary ruling – Protection of the European Union's financial interests – Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 2988/95 – Article 3 – Structural Funds – Regulation (EEC) No 2052/88 – Regulation (EEC) No 4253/88 – Contracting authority in receipt of a subsidy from the Structural Funds – Failure to comply with public procurement rules by the recipient of an ERDF subsidy – Basis for the obligation to recover European Union subsidies in the case of an irregularity – Concept of 'irregularity' – Concept of 'continuous irregularity' – Conditions for recovery – Limitation period – Longer national limitation periods – Principle of proportionality)

In Case C-465/10,

REFERENCE for a preliminary ruling under Article 267 TFEU from the Conseil d'État (France), made by decision of 5 July 2010, received at the Court on 27 September 2010, in the proceedings

Ministre de l'Intérieur, de l'Outre-mer, des Collectivités territoriales et de l'Immigration

v

Chambre de commerce et d'industrie de l'Indre,

THE COURT (Fourth Chamber),

composed of J.-C. Bonichot, President of the Chamber, K. Schiemann, L. Bay Larsen, C. Toader (Rapporteur) and E. Jarašiūnas, Judges, Advocate General: E. Sharpston,

Registrar: A. Calot Escobar,

having regard to the written procedure,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– the French Government, by G. de Bergues and B. Cabouat, acting as Agents,

– the Polish Government, by M. Szpunar, acting as Agent,

– the European Commission, by A. Steiblytė and J.-P. Keppenne, acting as Agents,

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 15 September 2011,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This reference for a preliminary ruling essentially concerns the interpretation of Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 2988/95 of 18 December 1995 on the protection of the European Communities' financial interests (OJ 1995 L 312, p. 1) and Council Regulation (EEC) No 4253/88 of 19 December 1988, laying down provisions for implementing Regulation (EEC) No 2052/88 as regards coordination of the activities of the different Structural Funds between themselves and with the operations of the European Investment Bank and the other existing financial instruments (OJ 1998 L 374, p. 1), as amended by Council Regulation (EEC) No 2082/93 of 20 July 1993 (OJ 1993 L 193, p. 20) (‘Regulation No 4253/88’).

2 The reference has been made in proceedings between the Ministre de l’Intérieur, de l’Outre-mer, des Collectivités territoriales et de l’Immigration (Ministry for the interior, overseas territories, local authorities and immigration) and the Chambre de commerce et d’industrie de l’Indre (Chamber of Commerce and Industry for the Indre département) (‘the CCI de l’Indre’) concerning, inter alia, the reimbursement by the latter of a subsidy which it received from the European Regional Development Fund (ERDF) (‘the ERDF subsidy’).

Legal context

Legislation governing the Structural Funds

3 Article 7(1) of Council Regulation (EEC) No 2052/88 of 24 June 1988 on the tasks of the Structural Funds and their effectiveness and on coordination of their activities between themselves and with the operations of the European Investment Bank and the other existing financial instruments (OJ 1988 L 185, p. 9), as amended by Council Regulation (EEC) No 2081/93 of 20 July 1993 (OJ 1993 L 193, p. 5) (‘Regulation No 2052/88’) provides:

‘Compatibility and checks

1. Measures financed by the Structural Funds or receiving assistance from the [European Investment Bank (EIB)] or from another existing financial instrument shall be in conformity with the provisions of the Treaties, with the instruments adopted pursuant thereto and with Community policies, including those concerning … the award of public contracts …’

4 Article 23 of Regulation No 4253/88 provides:

‘Financial control

‘1. In order to guarantee completion of operations carried out by public or private promoters, Member States shall take the necessary measures in implementing the operations:

– to verify on a regular basis that operations financed by the Community have been properly carried out,

– to prevent and to take action against irregularities,

– to recover any amounts lost as a result of an irregularity or negligence. Except where the Member State and/or the intermediary and/or the promoter provide proof that they were not responsible for the irregularity or negligence, the Member States shall be liable in the alternative for reimbursement of any sums unduly paid …

Member States shall inform the Commission of the measures taken for those purposes and, in particular, shall notify the Commission of the description of the management and control systems established to ensure the efficient implementation of operations. They shall regularly inform the Commission of the progress of administrative and judicial proceedings.

5 Article 8 of Commission Decision 94/1060/EC of 16 December 1994 on the approval of the Single Programming Document for Community structural assistance in the region of Centre concerned by Objective 2 in France (OJ 1994 L 384, p. 83) provides:

‘The Single Programming Document shall be implemented in accordance with Community law, and in particular … the Community Directives on the coordination of procedures for the award of contracts.’

Directive 92/50/EEC

6 Article 1(a)(i) of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), as amended by Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993 (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 1) ('Directive 92/50'), defines 'public service contracts' as being in principle contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between a service provider and a contracting authority, while the first subparagraph of Article 1(b) of the directive states that the State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or more of such authorities or bodies governed by public law are regarded in principle as 'contracting authorities'.

7 Article 7(1) of Directive 92/50 provides that the directive is to apply to public service contracts, the estimated value of which, net of VAT, is not less than EUR 200 000.

Regulation No 2988/95

8 According to the third and fifth recitals in the preamble to Regulation No 2988/95, 'acts detrimental to the Communities' financial interests must … be countered in all areas', and, in that regard, 'irregular conduct, and the administrative measures and penalties relating thereto, are provided for in sectoral rules in accordance with this Regulation'.

9 Article 1 of Regulation No 2988/95 provides:

'1. For the purposes of protecting the European Communities' financial interests, general rules are hereby adopted relating to homogenous checks and to administrative measures and penalties concerning irregularities with regard to Community law.

2. "Irregularity" shall mean any infringement of a provision of Community law resulting from an act or omission by an economic operator, which has, or would have, the effect of prejudicing the general budget of the Communities or budgets managed by them, either by reducing or losing revenue accruing from own resources collected directly on behalf of the Communities, or by an unjustified item of expenditure.'

10 Article 3 of Regulation No 2988/95 provides:

'1. The limitation period for proceedings shall be four years as from the time when the irregularity referred to in Article 1(1) was committed. However, the sectoral rules may make provision for a shorter period which may not be less than three years.

In the case of continuous or repeated irregularities, the limitation period shall run from the day on which the irregularity ceases. In the case of multiannual programmes, the limitation period shall in any case run until the programme is definitively terminated.

The limitation period shall be interrupted by any act of the competent authority, notified to the person in question, relating to investigation or legal proceedings concerning the irregularity. The limitation period shall start again following each interrupting act.

3. Member States shall retain the possibility of applying a period which is longer than that provided for in [paragraph] 1 …'

11 Article 4(1) and (4) of the Regulation states:

1. As a general rule, any irregularity shall involve withdrawal of the wrongly obtained advantage:

– by an obligation to pay or repay the amounts due or wrongly received,

4. The measures provided for in this Article shall not be regarded as penalties.'

The facts in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

12 On 5 December 1995, the CCI de l'Indre applied for an ERDF subsidy from the préfet de l'Indre (prefect of Indre) in order to implement an operation entitled 'Objectif Entreprises' designed to search for French and foreign investors who might be inclined to move to the Département of Indre.

13 That application led to the signing on 20 December 1996 of an agreement between the préfet de l'Indre and the CCI de l'Indre allocating an ERDF subsidy totalling FRF 400 000 (EUR 60 979.60). The agreement included, inter alia, references to Regulations Nos 2081/93 and 2082/93. The aid was paid in two instalments, the first, of FRF 100 000 on 17 December 1997, and, the second, of FRF 300 000 on 8 December 1998.

14 It is also apparent from the order for reference that the CCI de l'Indre received two national subsidies for that same operation. Other local authorities also provided additional funding for the operation.

15 The execution of operation 'Objectif Entreprises' led to an audit pursuant to a letter of engagement from the préfet de le région Centre (prefect of the Centre region) on 9 May 2000. That audit, carried out at the CCI's premises on 14 June 2000, resulted in the adoption of a report dated 14 March 2001, which was communicated to the CCI de l'Indre on 18 July 2001. That report, entitled 'Audit sur l'utilisation des Fonds structurels européens' (Audit on the use of European Structural Funds) concluded, in particular, that the CCI de l'Indre had not complied with public procurement legislation when it awarded the contract for implementation of the operation to the company DDB-Needham.

16 In that regard, the report stated that the CCI de l'Indre had organised a tendering procedure which was published in the Bulletin officiel des annonces des marchés publics (BOAMP) of 4 November 1995. It is also apparent from the report that the CCI de l'Indre's Public Procurement Board, meeting on 8 December 1995, decided to award the contract in question to DDB-Needham, stating that its tender was to be chosen in preference to the only other admissible tender because the content of the project was good and because of the lower cost proposed by that company.

17 However, the report found, first, that the contract concluded between the CCI de l'Indre and DDB-Needham did not include a date of signature and, secondly, that a note summarising the project case-file had been addressed to the préfet de l'Indre by the CCI de l'Indre on 27 September 1995 stating that 'the [CCI] has chosen the agency DDB-Needham'.

18 The report thus concluded that 'those factors suggest that the subsequent tendering procedure had the sole purpose of putting on a formal footing the legal situation already existing under the (undated) contract'. Since the discrepancies between the dates entailed, de facto, an irregularity, the report stated that had the public procurement rules been complied with, in particular regarding publication in the Official Journal of the European Communities, it might have been possible to elicit a tender at a lower price. Consequently, the authors of the report considered that that possibility gave grounds for demanding repayment of the total amount of the ERDF subsidy.

19 By decision of 23 January 2002 the préfet de l'Indre told the CCI de l'Indre that, given that the public procurement rules had not been complied with when recruiting the service provider responsible for implementing the operation 'Objectif Entreprises', the subsidies, in particular those obtained from the ERDF, had to be reimbursed.

20 The CCI de l'Indre applied to have set aside the orders for payment made by the préfet de l'Indre which corresponded to the amounts claimed. That application was dismissed by an implied decision of the Trésorier-payeur general (paymaster).

21 The CCI de l'Indre therefore brought actions seeking, inter alia, annulment of the préfet de l'Indre's decision of 23 January 2002 before the Tribunal administratif de Limoges (Administrative Court, Limoges), which rejected the actions by judgments of 3 June 2004.

22 On appeal by the CCI de l'Indre, the Cour administrative d'appel de Bordeaux (Administrative Court of Appeal, Bordeaux), by a judgment of 12 June 2007, annulled the judgments and, inter alia, the préfet de l'Indre's decision of 23 January 2002 and the orders for payment made by him. In that regard, that court found that the prefect's department had been informed, by a letter addressed to it on 27 September 1995 by the CCI de l'Indre, that the CCI had chosen to engage the services of DDB-Needham. That department would therefore have known of that choice before the tendering procedure was launched since, first, the Public Procurement Board that proposed that DDB-Needham's tender be accepted had met on 8 December 1995 and, secondly, the contract had been signed on 26 May 1996 in the presence of the prefect.

23 While recognising that the CCI de l'Indre had failed to comply with the tendering rules applicable to it when awarding the contract, which had, moreover, not been published in the Official Journal of the European Communities, the Cour administrative d'appel de Bordeaux nevertheless found that the agreement concluded between the préfet de l'Indre and the CCI de l'Indre allocating the ERDF subsidy made no reference to awarding a contract, that the agreement did not require all documents to be submitted so that there could be verification of whether the public procurement rules had been complied with, and, lastly, that Article 4 of Regulation No 2988/95 had as neither its object nor effect to allow national authorities to withdraw aid financed by Community funds outside the situations provided for by national law.

24 The Cour administrative d'appel de Bordeaux therefore concluded, first, that none of the provisions relied upon by the defendant authority, nor any of the terms of the agreement of 20 December 1996 on the ERDF subsidy, made the granting of the subsidy subject to a condition that any contract that might be concluded by the CCI de l'Indre to implement the operation should comply with the public procurement rules. Secondly, the court held that, since the public authorities had known from 27 September 1995 that DDB-Needham had been chosen, in this instance before the tendering procedure was launched, the subsidies that were subsequently granted cannot be considered to have been implicitly conditional upon compliance with such a condition.

25 By application brought on 16 August 2007 before the Conseil d'État, the ministre de l'Intérieur, de l'Outre-mer, des Collectivités territoriales et de l'Immigration appealed against the judgment of 12 June 2007 of the Cour administrative d'appel de Bordeaux.

26 In those circumstances, the Conseil d'État decided to stay the proceedings and refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'1. Concerning the existence of a legal basis creating an obligation to recover the aid paid to the CCI:

Where a contracting authority that receives subsidies paid from the ERDF has failed to comply with one or more public procurement rules in the implementation of the subsidised operation, when it is not otherwise disputed that that operation is eligible for that fund and that it has been implemented, is there a provision of Community law, in particular in [Regulation] (EEC) No 2052/88 … and [Regulation] (EEC) No 4253/88 …, that creates an obligation to recover subsidies? If such an obligation exists does it apply to any failure to comply with the public procurement rules, or only to some of them? In the latter case, which?

2. If the answer to the first question is at least partly affirmative, then so far as the procedures for recovering unduly paid aid are concerned:

(a) Does the failure, by a contracting authority that receives aid from the ERDF, to observe one or more rules relating to public procurement for the choice of a service provider responsible for implementing the subsidised operation constitute an irregularity within the meaning of Regulation No 2988/95? Does the fact that the competent national authority could not have been unaware, at the time when it decided to grant the aid applied for from the ERDF, that the recipient operator had failed to comply with the public procurement rules in recruiting, before the aid had even been allocated, the provider responsible for implementing the operation financed by the authority affect the characterisation as an irregularity within the meaning of Regulation No 2988/95?

(b) In case of an affirmative answer to question 2(a), and, given that, as the Court of Justice held in Joined Cases C-278/07 to C-280/07 Josef Vosding Schlacht, Kühl- und

Zerlegebetrieb and Others [2009] ECR I-457, the limitation period referred to in Article 3 of Regulation No 2988/95 is applicable to administrative measures such as the recovery of aid unduly paid to an operator as a result of irregularities it committed:

– should the starting point for the limitation period be set at the date of payment of the aid to the recipient or at that of the recipient's use of the subsidy received to pay the provider recruited in disregard of one or more of the public procurement rules?

– should that period be regarded as interrupted by the transmission, by the competent national authority to the recipient of the subsidy, of an audit report finding that there was a failure to comply with the public procurement rules and recommending, as a result, that the national authority obtain repayment of the sums paid?

– When a Member State makes use of the possibility afforded by Article 3(3) of Regulation No 2988/95 to apply a longer limitation period for proceedings, in particular where, in France, the ordinary limitation period at the material time is applicable, as set out at Article 2262 of the Civil Code which provides that "all actions, both in rem and in personam, are time-barred after 30 years …", must the compatibility of such a limitation period with Community law, in particular with the principle of proportionality, be determined in the light of the maximum limitation period for proceedings according to the national legislation providing the legal basis for the national administration's demand for recovery or in the light of the period in fact applied in the particular case?

(c) In the case of a negative answer to question 2(a), with regard to payment of aid such as that at issue in the main proceedings, do the financial interests of the Community prevent the court from applying the national rules relating to the withdrawal of decisions creating rights, according to which, except in cases of non-existence, acquisition by fraud or the recipient's request, the administration may withdraw an individual decision creating rights, if it is illegal, only within a period of four months following the date that decision was taken, an administrative decision being none the less capable, in particular when it concerns payment of aid, of being coupled with conditions subsequent, the fulfilment of which allows the withdrawal of the aid in question without any limitation condition – the Conseil d'État having held that that national rule must be interpreted to the effect that it could not be relied on by the recipient of an aid wrongly attributed in application of Community legislation unless it was in good faith?'

Consideration of the questions referred

27 By its first question the referring court asks, in essence, whether, in circumstances such as those at issue in the case in the main proceedings, the third indent of Article 23(1) of Regulation No 4253/88, read in conjunction with Article 7(1) of Regulation No 2052/88, constitutes a legal basis allowing national authorities to recover, from the recipient, the whole of a subsidy granted from the ERDF on the ground that, in its capacity as 'contracting authority' within the meaning of Directive 92/50, the recipient has not complied with the requirements of that directive so far as concerns the award of a public service contract, the purpose of which was the implementation of the operation for which the recipient was granted the subsidy.

28 It should be noted that, in the case in the main proceedings, it is common ground that the CCI de l'Indre was a contracting authority, that the value of the public service contract in question exceeded the EUR 200 000 threshold laid down by Article 7 of Directive 92/50 and that, when awarding the contract, the CCI de l'Indre did not comply with the public procurement rules for that type of contract laid down by Directive 92/50, in particular since it had already chosen the contractor before the publication of the contract notice and since, in addition, the notice was not published in the Official Journal of the European Communities.

29 In that regard, Community funding of a project is, under Article 7(1) of Regulation No 2052/88, conditional upon the recipient complying with procedures for the award of 'public service contracts', within the meaning of Directive 92/50, when that recipient is a 'contracting authority', within the meaning of that directive, and the public contract through which the recipient intends to implement the project exceeds the threshold laid down in Article 7 of Directive 92/50 (see, to that effect, Case C-44/96 Mannesmann Anlagenbau Austria and Others [1998] ECR I-73, paragraphs 48 and 49).

30 Pursuant to Article 23(1) of Regulation No 4253/88, the Member States are to take, in order to guarantee completion of operations carried out by public or private promoters, the necessary measures in implementing the operations to verify on a regular basis that operations financed by the European Union have been properly carried out, to prevent and to take action against irregularities and to recover any amounts lost as a result of an irregularity or negligence (see Joined Cases C-383/06 to C-385/06 Vereniging Nationaal Overlegorgaan Sociale Werkvoorziening and Others [2008] ECR I-1561, paragraph 37).

31 Since it is clear from Article 7(1) of Regulation No 2052/88 that measures financed from the European Union budget must be carried out in full compliance with the directives on public procurement, the infringement by the recipient of a European Union subsidy, in its capacity as contracting authority, of the rules laid down in Directive 92/50 for the purpose of implementing the subsidised operation constitutes an irregularity as referred to in Article 23(1) of Regulation No 4253/88 and the behaviour of the recipient must be classified, as the case may be, as 'an irregularity' or 'negligence', within the meaning of that provision.

32 Pursuant to the first subparagraph of Article 23(1) of Regulation No 4253/88, read in conjunction with Article 7(1) of Regulation No 2052/88, where an examination of an operation financed by the ERDF reveals a breach of the conditions laid down for the implementation of that operation, in the present case the condition that European Union legislation on public procurement be complied with when the recipient of the funding is a contracting authority, the Member State which has granted financial assistance from the ERDF may, in order to prevent and to take action against irregularities, revoke that assistance and require repayment thereof from the recipient (see, to that effect, Case C-271/01 COPPI [2004] ECR I-1029, paragraph 48).

33 In that regard, Regulation No 4253/88 is the relevant legal basis for recovery and not Regulation No 2988/95 which merely lays down general rules for supervision and penalties for the purpose of safeguarding the European Union's financial interests. Recovery must therefore be carried out on the basis of Article 23(1) of Regulation No 4253/88 (see Vereniging Nationaal Overlegorgaan Sociale Werkvoorziening and Others, paragraph 39).

34 It must however be recalled that the exercise of any discretion, by the Member State in question, to decide whether or not it would be expedient to demand repayment of European Union funds unduly or irregularly granted would be inconsistent with the duty imposed on its authorities by the first subparagraph of Article 23(1) of Regulation No 4253/88 to recover any amounts unduly or irregularly paid (see Vereniging Nationaal Overlegorgaan Sociale Werkvoorziening and Others, paragraph 38).

35 It follows that Article 23(1) of Regulation No 4253/88 requires the Member States to recover any amounts lost as a result of an irregularity or negligence without there being any need for authority to do so under national law (see Vereniging Nationaal Overlegorgaan Sociale Werkvoorziening and Others, paragraph 40).

36 On that point, it should be noted, as the French Government has pointed out, that, because of such an irregularity, the wrongly received amounts can be considered to be 'lost as a result of an irregularity or negligence' by the recipient, within the meaning of that provision. While referring to the obligation to recover any 'amounts lost as a result of an irregularity or negligence', Article 23(1) of Regulation No 4253/88 goes on to state that, except where the Member State and/or the intermediary and/or the promoter provide proof that they were not responsible for the irregularity or negligence, the Member State shall be liable in the alternative for reimbursement of 'any sums unduly paid'. That provision thus equates those two concepts.

37 In the case in the main proceedings, the question also arises whether, where, in the context of implementing an operation, the recipient of a subsidy, in its capacity as contracting authority, has failed to comply with the rules applicable to public procurement, the national authority may, on the basis of the third indent of Article 23(1) of Regulation No 4253/88, request repayment of the whole of the subsidy even though the operation, partially financed by the ERDF, has already been implemented.

38 In that regard, it must be noted, first, that the infringement of obligations whose observance is of fundamental importance to the proper functioning of a Community system, such as the obligations resulting from Directive 92/50 concerning the implementation of projects financed by the ERDF, may be penalised by forfeiture of a right conferred by European Union legislation (see, to that effect, Case C-104/94 Cereol Italia [1995] ECR I-2983, paragraph 25; Case C-500/99 P Conserve Italia v Commission [2002] ECR I-867, paragraphs 100 to 102; and order of 16 December 2004 in Case C-222/03 P AIPO v Commission, paragraph 53).

39 Secondly, the recovery of sums lost as a result of an irregularity or negligence does not apply only where the operation being financed by Structural Funds has not been carried out in whole or in part (see, to that effect, Case C-240/03 P Comunità montana della Valnerina v Commission [2006] ECR I-731, paragraph 77).

40 Although it certainly cannot be ruled out, as the Commission has stated, that, in accordance with the principle of proportionality, the finding of a minor irregularity should lead only to a partial reimbursement of the amounts paid, it must nevertheless be made clear that, in any event, where, in the context of a project financed by the ERDF, the recipient is found to have infringed one of the fundamental obligations laid down by Directive 92/50, for example by having decided to award a public service contract before the launch of the tendering procedure and by having, in addition, failed to publish a notice in the Official Journal of the European Union, only the possibility that such an irregularity may be penalised by the complete cancellation of the aid can produce the deterrent effect required to ensure the proper management of Structural Funds (see, by analogy, Conserve Italia v Commission, paragraph 101).

41 In the light of the foregoing, the answer to the first question is that, in circumstances such as those at issue in the case in the main proceedings, the third indent of Article 23(1) of Regulation No 4253/88, read in conjunction with Article 7(1) of Regulation No 2052/88, constitutes a legal basis enabling national authorities to recover from the recipient – without there being any need for authority to do so under national law – the whole of a subsidy granted from the ERDF on the ground that, in its capacity as ‘contracting authority’, within the meaning of Directive 92/50, the recipient has not complied with the requirements of that directive so far as concerns the award of a public service contract whose purpose was the implementation of the operation for which the recipient was granted the subsidy.

Question 2(a)

42 By question 2(a), the referring court asks, in essence, whether the failure, by a contracting authority entitled to an ERDF subsidy, to observe the public procurement rules laid down by Directive 92/50 when awarding the contract whose purpose is to implement the subsidised operation constitutes an ‘irregularity’, within the meaning of Article 1 of Regulation No 2988/95 and, if so, whether the fact that the competent national authority could not have been unaware, when the subsidy was granted, that the recipient had already decided which provider it would entrust with the implementation of the subsidised operation influences that classification.

43 Under Article 1 of Regulation No 2988/95, ‘irregularity’ means any infringement of a provision of European Union law resulting from an act or omission by an economic operator, which has, or would have, the effect of prejudicing the general budget of the European Union or budgets managed by it, either by reducing or losing revenue accruing from own resources collected directly on behalf of the European Union, or by an unjustified item of expenditure.

44 The concept of ‘irregularity’, within the meaning of Regulation No 2988/95, refers to the infringement of a provision of European Union law resulting from an act or omission by an economic operator; consequently the rule concerning the limitation period laid down in the first subparagraph of Article 3(1) of that regulation is not intended to apply to proceedings in respect of irregularities resulting from errors on the part of the national authorities granting a financial advantage in the name and on behalf of the European Union budget (see, to that effect, Case C-281/07 Bayerische Hypotheken- und Vereinsbank [2009] ECR I-91, paragraphs 20 to 22).

45 In circumstances such as those at issue in the case in the main proceedings, notwithstanding its status as a legal person governed by public law, the CCI de l'Indre, as a recipient of a subsidy from the European Union budget, can be treated, for the purposes of applying Regulation No 2988/95, as an economic operator which is alleged to have infringed a provision of European Union law. In that regard, it is common ground that the alleged infringement of the public procurement rules laid down by Directive 92/50 results from an act of the CCI de l'Indre and not of the authority that granted it the ERDF subsidy in the name and on behalf of the European Union budget.

46 Since, as is clear, in particular, from Article 7(1) of Regulation No 2052/88, the Structural Funds cannot be used to finance operations carried out in breach of Directive 92/50, the breach by the recipient of an ERDF subsidy, in its capacity as contracting authority, of procurement rules on public service contracts for the purpose of implementing a subsidised operation involves an unjustified item of expenditure and thus prejudices the European Union budget.

47 Indeed, it should be noted that even irregularities having no specific financial impact may be seriously prejudicial to the financial interests of the European Union (see Case C-199/03 Ireland v Commission [2005] ECR I-8027, paragraph 31).

48 As regards the fact that the competent authorities were informed by the recipient of the subsidy of its choice of contractor even before the launch of the tendering procedure for awarding the public contract in question, it does not, as such, have any effect on the classification of 'irregularity', within the meaning of Article 1, second subparagraph, of Regulation No 2988/95 (see, by analogy, Case C-94/05 Emsland-Stärke [2006] ECR I-2619, paragraph 62).

49 In the light of the foregoing, the answer to question 2(a) is that the failure, by a contracting authority that receives an ERDF subsidy, to comply with the public procurement rules laid down by Directive 92/50 when awarding the contract whose purpose is to implement the subsidised operation constitutes an 'irregularity', within the meaning of Article 1 of Regulation No 2988/95, even if the competent national authority could not have been unaware, when the subsidy was granted, that the recipient had already decided which provider it would entrust with the implementation of the subsidised operation.

Question 2(b), first and second indents

50 By the first and second indents of question 2(b), the referring court seeks, in essence, to ascertain, in circumstances where, in its capacity as contracting authority, the recipient of an ERDF subsidy has not complied with the public procurement rules of Directive 92/50 when awarding the contract whose purpose is to implement the subsidised operation, from what point the limitation period laid down by the first subparagraph of Article 3(1) of Regulation No 2988/95 begins to run and whether that limitation period is interrupted, for the purposes of the third subparagraph of Article 3(1), by the transmission to the recipient of the subsidy of an audit report finding there to have been a failure to comply with the public procurement rules and recommending, as a result, that the national authority demand repayment of the sums paid.

51 It should be recalled that Article 1(1) of Regulation No 2988/95 introduces general rules 'relating to homogenous checks and to administrative measures and penalties concerning irregularities with regard to Community law', in order, as is clear from the third recital in the preamble to the regulation, to counter in all areas 'acts detrimental to the Communities' financial interests'.

52 By adopting Regulation No 2988/95, and in particular the first subparagraph of Article 3(1) thereof, the European Union legislature intended to establish a general rule on limitation which was applicable in that area and by which it intended, first, to define a minimum period applied in all the Member States and, secondly, to waive the possibility of recovering sums wrongly received from the European Union budget after the expiry of a four-year period after the irregularity affecting the payments at issue was committed (Case C-131/10 Corman [2010] ECR I-0000, paragraph 39, and Joined Cases C-201/10 and C-202/10 Ze Fu Fleischhandel and Vion Trading [2011] ECR I-0000, paragraph 24).

53 That limitation rule is applicable to the irregularities referred to in Article 4 of Regulation No 2988/95 which are detrimental to the European Union's financial interests (see Case C-278/02 Handlbauer [2004] ECR I-6171, paragraph 34, and Josef Vosding Schlacht-, Kühl- und Zerlegebetrieb and Others, paragraph 22).

54 In the case in the main proceedings and in the light of the circumstances of that case, the referring court seeks to ascertain, as regards the determination of the point at which the limitation period begins to run, whether it is the date on which the aid was paid to the recipient or the date on which the recipient used the subsidy to pay the provider recruited in disregard of the rules governing the award of public service contracts laid down by Directive 92/50.

55 In that regard, since funds from the European Union budget cannot be used for operations carried out in breach of the provisions of Directive 92/50, it must be held that, in circumstances such as those at issue in the case in the main proceedings, the funds granted to the recipient are unduly received from the point when the recipient breaches those provisions.

56 In respect of such a breach of the tendering rules laid down by Directive 92/50, which was adopted in order to eliminate barriers to the freedom to provide services and to protect the interests of traders established in a Member State who wish to offer services to contracting authorities established in another Member State (see, in particular, Case C-19/00 SIAC Construction [2001] ECR I-7725, paragraph 32), it should be recalled that the adverse effect on the freedom to provide services arising from the infringement of Directive 92/50 must be found to subsist throughout the entire performance of the contracts concluded in breach of the directive (see Joined Cases C-20/01 and C-28/01 Commission v Germany [2003] ECR I-3609, paragraph 36, and Case C-503/04 Commission v Germany [2007] ECR I-6153, paragraph 29).

57 Indeed, although it is true that certain provisions of the public procurement directives permit the Member States to preserve the effects of contracts concluded in breach of those directives and thus seek to protect the legitimate expectations of the parties to such contracts, the effect of those provisions nevertheless cannot be, unless the scope of the FEU Treaty provisions establishing the internal market is to be reduced, that the contracting authority's conduct vis-à-vis the European Union budget is regarded as in conformity with European Union law following the conclusion of such contracts (see, to that effect, Joined Cases C-20/01 and C-28/01 Commission v Germany, paragraph 39, and Case C-503/04 Commission v Germany, paragraph 33).

58 It follows that, in circumstances such as those at issue in the case in the main proceedings, the infringement by a recipient of an ERDF subsidy of the rules laid down by Directive 92/50 for the purpose of implementing the subsidised operation, which infringement involves an unjustified item of expenditure and thus prejudices the European Union budget, continues throughout the entire period of performance of the contract unlawfully concluded between the provider and the recipient of the subsidy, with the result that such an irregularity must be considered to be a 'continuous irregularity', within the meaning of the second subparagraph of Article 3(1) of Regulation No 2988/95.

59 In accordance with that provision, the limitation period applicable to the recovery of a subsidy wrongly paid to the recipient runs from the day on which the irregularity ceased. Consequently, in circumstances such as those at issue in the case in the main proceedings, since the contract to implement the operation subsidised by the ERDF was not rescinded but was performed, the limitation of four years laid down by the first subparagraph of Article 3(1) of Regulation No 2988/95 begins to run from the day on which the performance of the unlawfully awarded public contract is completed.

60 As regards the issue of whether the transmission of an audit report finding that public procurement rules were infringed constitutes an act of investigation or legal proceedings concerning the irregularity such as to interrupt the limitation period pursuant to the third subparagraph of Article 3(1) of Regulation No 2988/95, it should be recalled that, in general, limitation periods fulfil the function of ensuring legal certainty and that such a function would not be wholly fulfilled if the limitation period referred to in Article 3(1) of Regulation No 2988/95 could be interrupted by any act relating to a general check by the national authorities which bears no relation to any suspicion concerning the existence of irregularities regarding sufficiently precisely circumscribed transactions (Handlbauer, paragraph 40).

61 However, when the national authorities send a person a report drawing attention to an irregularity in which that person is said to have played a part in connection with a specific operation, ask the person for further information concerning that operation or apply a penalty to the person in connection with that operation, those authorities adopt acts relating to investigation or legal proceedings concerning the irregularity which are sufficiently specific for the purposes of the third subparagraph of Article 3(1) of Regulation No 2988/95 (Case C-367/09 SGS Belgium and Others [2010] ECR I-0000, paragraph 69).

62 In the light of the foregoing, the answer to question 2(b), first and second indents, is that, in circumstances such as those at issue in the main proceedings, where, in its capacity as contracting authority, the recipient of an ERDF subsidy has not complied with the public procurement rules of Directive 92/50 when awarding the contract whose purpose is to implement the subsidised operation:

– the irregularity in question must be considered to be a ‘continuous irregularity’, within the meaning of the second subparagraph of Article 3(1) of Regulation No 2988/95, and, consequently, the limitation period of four years laid down by that provision to recover the subsidy wrongly paid to the recipient begins to run from the day on which the performance of the unlawfully awarded public contract is completed;

– the transmission to the recipient of the subsidy of an audit report finding there to have been a failure to comply with the public procurement rules and recommending, as a result, that the national authority demand repayment of the sums paid constitutes a sufficiently specific act relating to investigation or legal proceedings concerning the ‘irregularity’, within the meaning of the third subparagraph of Article 3(1) of Regulation No 2988/95.

Question 2(b), third indent

63 By question 2(b), third indent, the referring court asks, in essence, whether, in the light of the principle of proportionality, a Member State may apply a limitation period of 30 years to the recovery of an advantage wrongly obtained from the European Union budget as a longer limitation period for the purposes of Article 3(3) of Regulation No 2988/95.

64 Under the possibility provided for in that provision, the Member States retain wide discretion with regard to the fixing of longer limitation periods which they intend to apply in cases involving an irregularity that is detrimental to the European Union’s financial interests (Corman, paragraph 54).

65 However, in light of the objective of protecting the European Union’s financial interests, an objective for which the European Union legislature considered that a limitation period of four, or indeed even three, years was already in itself sufficient to enable the national authorities to bring proceedings in respect of an irregularity detrimental to those financial interests and capable of leading to the adoption of a measure such as recovery of a wrongly obtained advantage, it is apparent that to grant those authorities a period of 30 years goes beyond what is necessary for a diligent public service (Ze Fu Fleischhandel and Vion Trading, paragraph 43).

66 The answer to the third indent of question 2(b) is therefore that, where the Member States exercise the right afforded them by Article 3(3) of Regulation No 2988/95, the principle of proportionality precludes application of a 30-year limitation period to the recovery of an advantage wrongly obtained from the European Union budget.

Question 2(c)

67 This question was referred only in the event that question 2(a) was answered in the negative.

68 In view of the answer given to question 2(a), it is not necessary to answer question 2(c) referred by the national court.

Costs

69 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby rules:

1. In circumstances such as those at issue in the case in the main proceedings, the third indent of Article 23(1) of Council Regulation (EEC) No 4253/88 of 19 December 1998 laying down provisions for implementing Regulation (EEC) No 2052/88 as regards coordination of the activities of the different Structural Funds between themselves and with the operations of the European Investment Bank and the other existing financial instruments, as amended by Council Regulation (EEC) No 2082/93 of 20 July 1993, read in conjunction with Article 7(1) of Council Regulation (EEC) No 2052/88 of 24 June 1988 on the tasks of the Structural Funds and their effectiveness and on coordination of their activities between themselves and with the operations of the European Investment Bank and the other existing financial instruments, as amended by Council Regulation (EEC) No 2081/93 of 20 July 1993, constitutes a legal basis enabling national authorities to recover from the recipient – without there being any need for authority to do so under national law – the whole of a subsidy granted from the European Regional Development Fund (ERDF) on the ground that, in its capacity as 'contracting authority', within the meaning of Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts, as amended by Council Directive 93/36/EEC of 14 June 1993, the recipient has not complied with the requirements of that directive so far as concerns the award of a public service contract whose purpose was the implementation of the operation for which the recipient was granted the subsidy.

2. The failure, by a contracting authority that receives an ERDF subsidy, to comply with the public procurement rules laid down by Directive 92/50 when awarding the contract whose purpose is to implement the subsidised operation constitutes an 'irregularity', within the meaning of Article 1 of Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 2988/95 of 18 December 1995 on the protection of the European Communities' financial interests, even if the competent national authority could not have been unaware, when the subsidy was granted, that the recipient had already decided which provider it would entrust with the implementation of the subsidised operation.

3. In circumstances such as those at issue in the main proceedings, where, in its capacity as contracting authority, the recipient of an ERDF subsidy has not complied with the public procurement rules of Directive 92/50 when awarding the contract whose purpose is to implement the subsidised operation:

   – the irregularity in question must be considered to be a 'continuous irregularity', within the meaning of the second subparagraph of Article 3(1) of Regulation No 2988/95, and, consequently, the limitation period of four years laid down by that provision to recover the subsidy wrongly paid to the recipient begins to run from the day on which the performance of the unlawfully awarded public contract is completed;

   – the transmission to the recipient of the subsidy of an audit report finding there to have been a failure to comply with the public procurement rules and recommending, as a result, that the national authority demand repayment of the sums paid constitutes a sufficiently specific act relating to investigation or legal proceedings concerning the 'irregularity', within the meaning of the third subparagraph of Article 3(1) of Regulation No 2988/95.

4. Where the Member States exercise the right afforded them by Article 3(3) of Regulation No 2988/95, the principle of proportionality precludes application of a 30-year limitation period to the recovery of an advantage wrongly obtained from the European Union budget.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL
Sharpston
delivered on 15 September 2011 (1)

Case C-465/10

Ministre de l'Intérieur, de l'Outre-mer et des Collectivités territoriales
v
Chambre de commerce et d'industrie de l'Indre

(Reference for a preliminary ruling from the Conseil d'État (France))

(Protection of the financial interests of the European Union – Subsidies awarded under the European Regional Development Fund – Failure of the recipient to comply with public procurement procedures – Obligation to recover subsidies in the case of an irregularity – Limitation periods)

1. This reference for a preliminary ruling from the French Conseil d'État (Council of State) concerns the interpretation of Regulation No 2052/88, (2) Regulation No 4253/88 (3) and Regulation No 2988/95. (4) At the material time those instruments ('the applicable regulations') were among those governing the European Union's Structural Funds. (5) The Structural Funds (6) are the European Union's main instruments for supporting social and economic development in the Member States. They account for over one third of the EU budget.

2. The referring court asks, first, whether EU law requires the recovery of sums awarded from the ERDF where the recipient (which is a contracting authority (7)) uses the subsidy to carry out an assisted operation in breach of the EU public procurement procedures. Second, it requests guidance on the application of the limitation period in Article 3 of Regulation No 2988/95 in respect of such recovery.

Legal Framework

Regulation No 2052/88

3. Amongst the stated objectives of Regulation No 2052/88 is that of increasing the efficiency of the Structural Funds and coordinating their activities. (8)

4. Article 3(5) requires the Council to adopt the provisions necessary for ensuring coordination between the different Funds on the one hand, and between them and the European Investment Bank ('the EIB') and the other existing financial instruments, on the other.

5. Article 7 is entitled 'Compatibility and checks'. It states, in so far as is relevant:

'1. Measures financed by the Structural Funds … shall be in conformity with the provisions of the Treaties, with the instruments adopted pursuant thereto and with Community policies, including those concerning … the award of public contracts ...

2. Without prejudice to the Financial Regulation, the provisions referred to in Article 3(4) and (5) shall lay down harmonised rules for strengthening checks on structural operations ...'

Regulation No 4253/88

6. Council Regulation No 4253/88 lays down provisions for implementing Regulation No 2052/88 as regards coordination of the activities of the Funds.

7. The sixth recital in the preamble to Regulation No 2082/93, (9) which amended Regulation No 4253/88, states that:

'… in application of the principle of subsidiarity, and without prejudice to the Commission's powers, particularly its responsibility for the management of the Community's financial resources, implementation of the forms of assistance contained in the Community support frameworks should be primarily the responsibility of the Member States at the appropriate territorial level according to the specific needs of each Member State'.

8. Article 23(1) of Regulation No 4253/88 provides as follows:

'1. In order to guarantee completion of operations carried out by public or private promoters, Member States shall take the necessary measures in implementing the operations:

– to verify on a regular basis that operations financed by the Community have been properly carried out,

– to prevent and to take action against irregularities,

– to recover any amounts lost as a result of an irregularity or negligence. Except where the Member State and/or the intermediary and/or the promoter provide proof that they were not responsible for the irregularity or negligence, the Member States shall be liable in the alternative for reimbursement of any sums unduly paid. For global loans, the intermediary may, with the agreement of the Member State and the Commission, take up a bank guarantee or other insurance covering this risk.

Member States shall inform the Commission of the measures taken for those purposes and, in particular, shall notify the Commission of the description of the management and control systems established to ensure the efficient implementation of operations. They shall regularly inform the Commission of the progress of administrative and judicial proceedings.

9. Article 24 states:

'Reduction, suspension and cancellation of assistance

1. If an operation or measure appears to justify neither part nor the whole of the assistance allocated, the Commission shall conduct a suitable examination of the case in the framework of the partnership, in particular requesting that the Member State or authorities designated by it to implement the operation submit their comments within a specified period of time.

2. Following this examination, the Commission may reduce or suspend assistance in respect of the operation or a measure concerned if the examination reveals an irregularity or a significant change affecting the nature or conditions for the implementation of the operation or measure for which the Commission's approval has not been sought.

3. Any sum received unduly and to be recovered shall be repaid to the Commission. Interest on account of late payment shall be charged on sums not repaid ...'

Regulation No 2988/95

10. Regulation No 2988/95 sets out a number of general rules regarding checks, administrative measures and penalties for irregularities where payments are made to recipients under Community policies. Previously there were no common rules defining such irregularities.

11. The third, fourth and fifth recitals in the preamble to Regulation No 2988/95 are particularly relevant. The third recital indicates that detailed rules governing the administration and monitoring of Community expenditure are the subject of differing detailed provisions according to the Community policies concerned, but that acts detrimental to the Communities' financial interests must be countered in all areas. (10) The fourth recital states that a common set of legal rules for all areas covered by Community policies is needed in order effectively to combat fraud committed against the Communities' financial interests. The fifth recital recalls that irregularities, and the administrative measures and penalties relating thereto, are provided for in sectoral rules in accordance with Regulation No 2988/95. Finally, as is clear from the 14th recital, Regulation No 2988/95 is sufficiently broad in its horizontal scope for it to require to be based on Article 235 EC and Article 203 EAEC.

12. Article 1 of Regulation No 2988/95 states:

'1. For the purposes of protecting the European Communities' financial interests, general rules are hereby adopted relating to homogenous checks and to administrative measures and penalties concerning irregularities with regard to Community law.

2. "Irregularity" shall mean any infringement of a provision of Community law resulting from an act or omission by an economic operator, which has, or would have, the effect of prejudicing the general budget of the Communities or budgets managed by them, either by reducing or losing revenue accruing from own resources collected directly on behalf of the Communities, or by an unjustified item of expenditure.'

13. The relevant provisions of Article 2 are the following:

'1. Administrative checks, measures and penalties shall be introduced in so far as they are necessary to ensure the proper application of Community law. They shall be effective, proportionate and dissuasive so that they provide adequate protection for the Communities' financial interests.

3. Community law shall determine the nature and scope of the administrative measures and penalties necessary for the correct application of the rules in question, having regard to the nature and seriousness of the irregularity, the advantage granted or received and the degree of responsibility.

4. Subject to the Community law applicable, the procedures for the application of Community checks, measures and penalties shall be governed by the laws of the Member States.'

14. Article 3 provides, inter alia:

'1. The limitation period for proceedings shall be four years as from the time when the irregularity referred to in Article 1(1) was committed. However, the sectoral rules may make provision for a shorter period which may not be less than three years.

In the case of continuous or repeated irregularities, the limitation period shall run from the day on which the irregularity ceases. In the case of multiannual programmes, the limitation period shall in any case run until the programme is definitively terminated.

The limitation period shall be interrupted by any act of the competent authority, notified to the person in question, relating to investigation or legal proceedings concerning the irregularity. The limitation period shall start again following each interrupting act.

However, limitation shall become effective at the latest on the day on which a period equal to twice the limitation period expires without the competent authority having imposed a penalty, except where the administrative procedure has been suspended in accordance with Article 6(1). [(11)]

3. Member States shall retain the possibility of applying a period which is longer than that provided for in paragraphs 1 and 2 respectively.'

15. Article 4 provides that, as a general rule, where an economic operator has wrongly obtained an advantage through an irregularity, that advantage is to be withdrawn (either by way of payment or repayment of the amounts due or wrongly received or through total or partial forfeiture of a security).

16. Article 5 provides for the possibility of applying administrative penalties in cases of intentional irregularities or those caused by negligence.

Regulation No 1083/2006

17. Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006, (12) which has also been referred to in the written observations to the Court, (13) defines an 'irregularity' as '… any infringement of a provision of Community law resulting from an act or omission by an economic operator which has, or would have, the effect of prejudicing the general budget of the European Union by charging an unjustified item of expenditure to the general budget'.

National legislation

18. At the material time, Article 2262 of the French Civil Code provided: 'All actions, whether in rem or in personam, shall be time-barred after 30 years …'.

Facts, procedure and questions referred

19. It appears from the national file that on 5 December 1995 the Chambre de commerce et d'industrie du département de l'Indre (Chamber of Commerce and Industry for the Indre département, 'the CCI') submitted a request for financial assistance to the prefect of that département ('the prefect') to fund an operation known as 'Objectif Entreprises' ('the operation'). The purpose of the operation was to conduct research to ascertain whether French and foreign undertakings might wish to invest and establish themselves in the Indre département. The CCI decided to engage a firm to carry out the operation on its behalf.

20. In answer to written questions put by the Court pursuant to Article 54a of its Rules of Procedure, the French Government made further information and certain documents available. It thus appears that the CCI informed the prefect by letter of 27 September 1995 that it wished to employ the firm DDB-Needham to carry out the operation. That letter was sent before a call for tenders was published in the national official journal (the Bulletin officiel des annonces des marchés publics) on 4 November 1995.

21. Following examination of the tenders submitted, DDB-Needham was selected on 8 December 1995, on the ground that the quality of the services offered was higher, and the cost lower, than those of competing firms.

22. On 29 May 1996 the CCI entered into a contract with DDB-Needham for services to be provided over a three-year period. The fees were FF 3 895 380 (EUR 600 000) for 1996 and approximately FF 2 725 560 (EUR 420 000) for 1997 and for 1998.

23. Under an agreement signed on 20 December 1996 (which refers to Regulation No 2081/93 and Regulation No 2082/93 (14)) the CCI received FF 400 000 (EUR 60 979.60) from the ERDF in support of the operation. Two amounts from national funds were also awarded to the CCI for the same purpose. However, it is only the subsidy from the ERDF that is in issue in the current proceedings.

24. The CCI was informed by letter of 9 May 2000 that the operation was to be the subject of an audit conducted by the prefect of the Centre region ('the prefect of the region'). The report, entitled Audit sur l'utilisation des fonds structurels européens ('the audit report'), was signed by the prefect of the region and the regional trésorerie générale (finance department) on 14 March 2001. It was communicated to the CCI on 18 July 2001.

25. The following irregularities were identified in the audit report. First, the contract had been awarded to DDB-Needham in breach of the EU public procurement procedures. In particular, the CCI had communicated its choice of DDB-Needham to the prefect before the call for tenders was published. Furthermore, there was nothing indicating that notice of the qualifying contracts relating to the operation had been published in the Official Journal of the European Communities (as it was at that time). Second, the contract was signed but not dated.

26. On 23 January 2002 the prefect of the region notified the CCI that an order had been issued requiring, inter alia, repayment of the ERDF subsidy as a result of its failure to comply with the EU public procurement procedures in respect of the implementation of the operation.

27. The CCI's challenge to that order was dismissed by implied decision of the regional Trésorier-payeur général (paymaster).

28. On 3 June 2004 the CCI's application to the tribunal administratif de Limoges (Administrative Court, Limoges) for annulment of the order of the prefect of the region and the decision of the Trésorier-payeur général was rejected.

29. The cour administrative d'appel de Bordeaux (Adminstrative Court of Appeal, Bordeaux) annulled the judgment of the tribunal administratif de Limoges on 12 June 2007. It considered that there was no express provision in the agreement confirming that the CCI was subject to the EU public procurement procedures, nor was there any provision of EU law providing a legal basis for recovery of the funds in question.

30. The ministre de l'Intérieur, de l'Outre-mer et des Collectivités territoriales (Ministry for the interior overseas territories and local authorities) appealed against that ruling to the Conseil d'État, which has stayed the proceedings and referred the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'1. Concerning the existence of a legal basis creating an obligation to recover the aid paid to the CCI:

Where a recipient of subsidies paid from the ERDF has failed to comply with one or more public procurement procedures in the implementation of the subsidised operation, when it is not otherwise disputed that the project is eligible for that fund and that it has been implemented, is there a provision of European Union law, in particular in [Regulation No 2052/88] and [Regulation No 4253/88], that creates an obligation to recover those subsidies? If such an obligation exists does it apply to any failure to comply with the public procurement procedures, or only to some of them? In the latter case, which?

2. If the answer to the first question is at least partly affirmative:

(a) Does the failure, by a recipient entitled to aid from the ERDF, to observe one or more rules relating to public procurement for the choice of a service provider responsible for implementing the subsidised operation constitute an irregularity within the meaning of Regulation No 2988/95? Does the fact that the competent national authority could not have been unaware, at the time when it decided to grant the aid applied for from the ERDF, that the recipient had failed to comply with the public procurement procedures in recruiting, before the aid had even been allocated, the provider responsible for implementing the operation financed by the recipient affect the characterisation as an irregularity within the meaning of Regulation No 2988/95?

(b) In case of an affirmative answer to question 2(a), and, given that, as the Court of Justice held in Josef Vosding Schlacht-, Kühl- und Zerlegebetrieb and Others [(15)], the limitation period referred to in Article 3 of Regulation No 2988/95 is applicable to administrative measures such as the recovery of unduly paid subsidies to a recipient as a result of irregularities it committed:

– Should the starting point for the limitation period be set at the date of payment of the aid to the recipient or at the date on which he used the subsidy received to pay the provider recruited in disregard of one or more of the public procurement procedures?

– Should that period be regarded as interrupted by the transmission, by the competent national authority to the recipient of the subsidy, of an auditor's report finding that there was a failure to comply with the public procurement procedures and recommending, as a result, that the national authority obtain repayment of the sums paid?

– When a Member State makes use of the possibility afforded by Article 3(3) of Regulation No 2988/95 to apply a longer limitation period for proceedings, in particular where, in France, [the ordinary limitation period at the material time is 30 years], must the compatibility of such a limitation period with European Union law, in particular with the principle of proportionality, be determined in the light of the maximum limitation period for proceedings according to the national legislation providing the legal basis for the national administration's demand for recovery or in the light of the period in fact applied in the particular case?

(c) In case of a negative answer to question 2(a), with regard to payment of aid such as that at issue in the main proceedings, do the financial interests of the European Union prevent the court from applying the national rules relating to the withdrawal of decisions creating rights, according to which, except in cases of non-existence, acquisition by fraud or the recipient's request, the administration may withdraw an individual decision creating rights, if it is illegal, only within a period of four months following the date that decision was taken, an administrative decision being none the less capable, in particular when it concerns payment of aid, of being coupled with conditions subsequent, the fulfilment of which allows the withdrawal of the aid in question without any limitation condition – the Conseil d'État having held that that national rule must be interpreted to the effect that it could not be relied on by the recipient of an aid wrongly attributed in application of EU legislation unless it was in good faith?'

31. Written observations have been submitted by the French and Polish Governments and the Commission. No hearing was requested and none has been held.

Assessment

Preliminary observations

32. Before commencing the analysis certain preliminary remarks are in order.

33. First, it is common ground in the main proceedings that the operation was eligible for financial support from the ERDF.

34. Second, there is no dispute before the national court that the contract between the CCI and DDB-Needham falls within the scope of Directive 92/50/EEC. (16) Its value is above the threshold of EUR 200 000 laid down in Article 7 of that directive and it covers services listed in Annex IA. Consequently the CCI, as a contracting authority for the purposes of Directive 92/50/EEC, should have published the requisite notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities. (17)

35. Third, as regards the applicable regulations, Regulation No 2988/95 introduced a general framework for administrative measures and penalties concerning irregularities with regard to EU law, in order to counter 'acts detrimental to the [Union's] financial interests … in all areas.' (18) That Regulation is to be read in conjunction with the specific EU legislation which applies in the present matter, namely Regulation No 2052/88 (19) and Regulation No 4253/88. (20)

36. Article 4(1) of Regulation No 2988/95 provides, as a general rule, that any irregularity shall 'involve' (that is, as I understand it, 'lead to' (21)) withdrawal of the wrongly obtained advantage. More specifically, Article 23(1) of Regulation No 4253/88 requires the Member States to take the necessary measures to verify that operations financed by the Structural Funds have been properly carried out, to prevent and to take action against irregularities and to recover any amounts lost as the result of an irregularity or negligence. (22)

37. Fourth, shared management – that is, cooperation between the Member States and the Commission – is the method that the EU legislator has chosen to implement the budget in respect of the Structural Funds. However, implementation of assistance under the Funds is primarily the responsibility of the Member States.

38. Furthermore, as is clear from Article 280 EC (now Article 325 TFEU), both the European Union and the Member States are obliged to take measures to counter fraud and any other illegal activities that affect the EU's financial interests.

39. Moreover, the Court has held that, in carrying out their obligations, the Member States do not have any discretion to decide whether it would be expedient to demand repayment of European Union funds unduly or irregularly paid. (23)

40. Fifth, the Court has ruled that Article 23(1) of Regulation No 4253/88 requires the Member States to recover any amounts 'lost' as the result of an irregularity, without there being any need for authority to do so under national law. (24)

41. Sixth, for the purposes of Article 24 of Regulation No 4253/88, no distinction of a quantitative or qualitative nature is to be drawn concerning the irregularities which may give rise to reductions in assistance. (25) Whether an irregularity causes major loss, or whether an irregularity is of a 'technical nature' are alike immaterial. An irregularity is an irregularity. (26)

42. Finally, in the present case, it is not disputed that the operation (Objectif Entreprises) was actually carried out. On that basis, the parties submitting observations to the Court agree that the subsidy in question cannot, strictly speaking, be regarded as 'lost' within the meaning of the third indent of Article 23(1) of Regulation No 4253/88.

Questions 1 and 2a

43. It is appropriate to consider questions 1 and 2a together. Both concern the meaning of an 'irregularity' and whether the applicable regulations require Member States to recover sums paid from the Funds.

44. In question 1, the referring court asks in essence whether Member States are obliged to recover sums awarded from the ERDF where the recipient failed to respect the EU public procurement procedures when it engaged a firm to carry out the subsidised operation. The national court asks also whether such an obligation, if it exists, applies to every failure to comply with those rules. If so, it then asks whether such a failure constitutes an irregularity for the purposes of Regulation No 2988/95.

45. The French Government submits that Article 23(1) of Regulation No 4253/88 should be interpreted consistently with both Regulation No 2052/88 and Regulation No 2988/95.

46. France contends further that the basis for recovery of the subsidy is not the third indent of Article 23(1) of Regulation No 4253/88, because the funds at issue cannot be considered as 'lost' for the purposes of that provision. Rather, the legal basis for recovery should be deemed to be the second indent of Article 23(1) ('to prevent and to take action against irregularities'). France submits further that the Court's case-law concerning Article 24 of Regulation No 4253/88 should apply by analogy: therefore, the funds at issue should be considered as unduly paid.

47. Poland submits that, in cases such as the present, it is necessary to take account of the objective of Article 23(1) of Regulation No 4253/88, namely to guarantee completion of operations which receive financial assistance from the Funds. Each case should be assessed on its merits. Poland contends that Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006 (27) should apply by analogy to the interpretation of Article 23(1) of Regulation No 4253/88. Thus, in order for an irregularity to arise as the result of an infringement of EU law, that infringement must have the effect of prejudicing the European Union's budget by charging an unjustified item of expenditure to it.

48. Poland argues that a public procurement procedure in which there is no call for tenders has such an effect; and the Member State should therefore take action to recover the sums paid. However, Poland considers that an infringement of the EU public procurement procedures which has no effect on the European Union's budget does not result in an irregularity for the purposes of Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006. Consequently, such an infringement cannot be an irregularity for the purposes of Article 23(1) of Regulation No 4253/88.

49. The Commission takes the view that the applicable regulations should be interpreted in conjunction with each other. The fact that the sums at issue were not 'lost' is irrelevant to the question whether Article 23(1) of Regulation No 4253/88 provides a legal basis for recovery of the ERDF subsidy.

50. Like the French Government and the Commission, I consider that the applicable regulations should be construed together.

51. Since Article 2(7) of Regulation No 1083/2006 did not apply at the material time, it may be disregarded for present purposes.

52. The term 'irregularity' is not defined in Regulation No 2052/88 or Regulation No 4253/88.

53. However, if the applicable regulations are to be interpreted in conjunction with each other, 'irregularity' must be construed consistently – that is, in the same way in each regulation.

54. Article 7(1) of Regulation No 2052/88 provides that measures financed by the Structural Funds must be in conformity with the Treaties and with Community policies, in particular those concerning the award of public contracts.

55. Article 1(2) of Regulation No 2988/95 states that an irregularity is 'any infringement of a provision of Community law resulting from an act or omission by an economic operator' which has '… the effect of prejudicing the general budget of the Communities or budgets managed by them' … 'by reducing or losing revenue accruing from own resources collected directly on behalf of the Communities, or by an unjustified item of expenditure'.

56. In the present matter the infringement of Community law (now EU law) is not in dispute. It is acknowledged that the CCI (an 'economic operator' for the purposes of Article 1(2) of Regulation No 2988/95 and a 'contracting authority' within the meaning of Directive 92/50/EEC) failed to respect the EU public procurement procedures in awarding the contract to carry out the operation 'Objectif Entreprises'.

57. It follows that the operation financed by the ERDF subsidy failed to comply with Article 7(1) of Regulation No 2052/88.

58. Does that infringement of EU law have the effect of prejudicing the general budget of the European Union or the budgets (such as the Structural Funds) managed by the EU for the purposes of Article 1(2) of Regulation No 2988/95?

59. The legislature's intention in enacting Article 7(1) of Regulation No 2052/88 seems to have been to ensure that expenditure incurred by the European Union in the context of the Structural Funds is strictly limited to operators who comply with the rules of EU law and is not used to finance conduct that is contrary thereto. (28)

60. It follows that expenditure incurred in contravention of EU law would naturally be regarded as prejudicial to the EU budget.

61. In Commission v Ireland (29) the Court considered the Commission's powers under Article 24 of Regulation No 4253/88 to recover sums awarded to Ireland under the European Social Fund ('the ESF'). The Irish authorities conceded that an irregularity (albeit unintentional) had occurred in so far as the audit trail regarding the funds in issue was not in accordance with the ESF best practice. (30) The irregularity had not led to any undue financing or over-financing by the Community in that case. None the less the Commission sought, pursuant to Article 24 of Regulation No 4253/88, to reduce the amount of financial assistance originally granted.

62. The Court rejected Ireland's contention that irregularities of a 'technical' nature were not prejudicial to the EU budget. The Court held that even irregularities having no specific financial impact could be seriously prejudicial to the financial interests of the European Union and to compliance with EU law and for that reason justify the application of financial corrections on the part of the Commission. (31)

63. In Vereniging Nationaal Overlegorgaan Sociale Werkvoorziening, (32) the Court emphasised that Articles 23 and 24 of Regulation No 4253/88 should be construed together.

64. I therefore consider that the Court's approach in Commission v Ireland should apply by analogy to the interpretation of Article 23 of Regulation No 4253/88.

65. Thus, even irregularities that have no specific financial impact and are not quantifiable as such are none the less to be considered to be seriously prejudicial to the financial interests of the EU.

66. Does the prejudice to the EU budget (or budgets managed by the EU) here result in a loss of revenue or in charging an unjustified item of expenditure?

67. In the present matter there are no details of the specific financial cost of the irregularity. It may in fact be impossible to assess. (33)

68. None the less it may reasonably be supposed that, had the CCI as the contracting authority complied with the EU public procurement procedures, the overall cost of financing the operation might perhaps have been less. To that extent, payment of the ERDF subsidy could be regarded as having resulted in an unjustified item of expenditure under Article 1(2) of Regulation No 2988/95.

69. Thus, in my view, it follows both from the language and the purpose of the applicable regulations and from the Court's judgment in Commission v Ireland, applied by analogy, that a failure to comply with Article 7(1) of Regulation No 2052/88 has the effect of prejudicing the budget of the European Union or the budgets of the Structural Funds by permitting an unjustified item of expenditure and is therefore an irregularity for the purposes of Article 1(2) of Regulation No 2988/95 and Article 23 of Regulation No 4253/88.

70. In such circumstances Member States are obliged to take action for recovery of the sums unduly paid.

71. Does that mean that they must pursue the recipient for the full amount of the subsidy?

72. Article 2(1) of Regulation No 2988/95 requires Member States to introduce administrative measures '… in so far as they are necessary to ensure the proper application of Community law …'. Such measures must be 'effective, proportionate and dissuasive' in order to provide adequate protection for the European Union's financial interests. Article 2(3) states that EU law 'shall determine the nature and scope of administrative measures necessary for the correct application of the rules in question, having regard to the nature and seriousness of the irregularity, the advantage granted or received and the degree of responsibility'. (34)

73. In order to safeguard the EU budget (and the individual budgets managed by the European Union, such as the Structural Funds) the Member States are under an obligation to recover sums paid in the event of an irregularity. Under Article 4(1) of Regulation No 2988/95, the general rule is that any irregularity shall lead to the withdrawal of the wrongly obtained advantage. (35) In discharging that obligation, Member States should therefore proceed to seek recovery of the sum that represents 'the wrongly obtained advantage'. That may require repayment of the full subsidy originally granted; or it may only require partial repayment, involving a lesser amount. (36)

74. The facts found by the national court show that all the relevant steps in selecting the service provider to carry out Objectif Entreprises took place before the subsidy was awarded. (37) The particular nature of the irregularity that arose (failure to run a tendering process in accordance with the relevant EU rules) means, however, that it is impossible to identify and calculate a specific loss 'caused' by the irregularity. The service provider initially identified and subsequently selected appears to have been the one offering the best value for money within the national tendering procedure that was carried out. However, had the contract been duly advertised under the EU public procurement procedures, service providers from other Member States might have been interested and might perhaps have put in tenders that represented better value for money. How much (if at all) better, no one can say. Moreover, since the operation was financed partly from the ERDF and partly from national funds, it is not possible to say how much of any (hypothetical) resulting saving would have been credited to the EU budget and how much to the national budget.

75. All that can be said with certainty is that the operation for which the advantage was afforded did indeed take place; but that it might perhaps have cost less if the EU public procurement procedures had been respected; that the service provider selected might not have been the same; and that there might have been a corresponding reduction in the amounts chargeable to the national budget and to the EU budget.

76. In such circumstances, what is the national court to do?

77. In theory, there are three possibilities: to recover nothing, to recover the subsidy in full, or to recover some intermediate amount that is commensurate with the loss caused to the EU budget by the failure to respect the EU public procurement procedures.

78. For the reasons that I have just given, I would rule out the third option in the present case.

79. That leaves nil recovery or recovery in full.

80. Nil recovery seems to me to be incompatible with the principles underpinning the Court's case-law thus far. (38) It would send entirely the wrong message, in terms of the obligation for recipients of EU funds to respect the rules governing the grant of such funds.

81. It is true that recovery in full may seem, in the circumstances of this case, a harsh result. There may, in reality, have been little or no actual detriment to the EU budget. However, it seems to me that there are nevertheless at least three cogent reasons for concluding that the subsidy should indeed be recovered in full.

82. First, under Article 2(3) of Regulation No 2988/95 the national authorities in executing their obligation to recover the sums in question are required to have regard, inter alia, to the nature and seriousness of the irregularity and the degree of responsibility involved. In the present case, the prior information communicated to the prefect indicating a total failure to respect the EU public procurement procedures must, it seems to me, be a very significant factor to be taken into account.

83. Second, the EU public procurement procedures are intended to be applied to all contracts above the threshold value precisely in order to open up those contracts to potential service providers from other Member States. It is of course to be hoped that that process will (often) result in better value for money than would be the case were a purely national tendering procedure to take place. But that is only part of the story. An equally important element is that following the procedures enhances the proper functioning of the single market.

84. Third, in the circumstances of this case a choice between nil recovery and full recovery is unavoidable. Applying Article 2(1) of Regulation No 2988/95 (which requires that the measures to ensure the proper application of [EU] law should be 'effective, proportionate and dissuasive'), nil recovery would be neither effective nor dissuasive. Recovery in full is both effective and dissuasive. Since partial recovery is here not an option, recovery in full is also proportionate.

85. The referring court wonders, however, whether classification as an irregularity could be affected by the fact that the prefect must have been aware, when he granted the ERDF subsidy to the CCI, that there had been a failure to comply with the EU public procurement procedures in selecting the service provider.

86. In Emsland-Stärke (39) the Court held that the fact that the competent national authority was informed of an irregularity does not in itself mean that the irregularity in question cannot be described as an irregularity ‘caused by negligence’ or ‘intentional’ within the meaning of Article 5(1) of Regulation No 2988/95. By the same token, therefore, such a circumstance cannot alter the classification of the conduct in question as an irregularity for the purposes of Article 23(1) of Regulation No 4253/88.

87. In my view, the answer to the first question and question 2a should therefore be that where a recipient of subsidies from the Structural Funds which is a contracting authority for the purposes of the EU public procurement procedures, fails to comply with those procedures in selecting a service provider to conduct an operation funded in whole or in part from those Funds, the second indent of Article 23(1) of Regulation No 4253/88 requires Member States to take action for recovery of the subsidies in question. In such circumstances the conduct of the recipient constitutes an irregularity within the meaning of Article 1(2) of Regulation No 2988/95.

Question 2b

88. Question 2b concerns the interpretation of Article 3 of Regulation No 2988/95.

89. The referring court asks three questions concerning the limitation period applicable in the circumstances of the main proceedings. First, when did it start? Second, was it interrupted by the communication of the audit report to the CCI by the prefect of the region? Third, what are the criteria for determining the maximum length of the limitation period for the purposes of Article 3(3) of Regulation No 2988/95?

90. The Commission submits that the limitation period started when the CCI decided to award the contract to DDB-Needham in breach of the EU public procurement procedures or, in the alternative, when it decided which type of procedure to follow and whether to call for tenders.

91. France contends that the period started when the CCI paid DDB-Needham under the contract. That payment constituted the irregularity for the purposes of the legislation in issue, since the CCI could have chosen to run a proper procurement procedure at any point up until then.

92. The Polish Government submits that the limitation period started from the date of payment of the ERDF subsidy to the CCI. Poland argues that an infringement of the EU public procurement procedures becomes an irregularity within the meaning of Article 1(2) of Regulation No 2988/95 only at the point when the EU budget is prejudiced. Such a prejudice occurs when funds are paid out under the budget. Poland contends further that the amount to be recovered is equivalent to the difference between the amount paid following the non-compliant procedure and the amount that would have been paid if the service provider had been chosen in conformity with the EU public procurement procedures. (40)

93. Regulation No 4253/88 does not lay down any rules concerning the limitation period applicable to an action for the recovery of sums unduly awarded. In my view, the period set out in Article 3(1) of Regulation No 2988/95 must therefore apply. (41)

94. According to that provision, read in conjunction with Article 1(1) and (2) of the same regulation, the limitation period starts when the irregularity resulting from the act or omission of the recipient of the subsidy has the effect of prejudicing the European Union’s budget (or budgets managed by the EU, such as the Structural Funds) by, inter alia, incurring unjustified expenditure.

95. That happened when the ERDF subsidy was awarded to the CCI. The date of the agreement to award the subsidy (20 December 1996) thus marked the beginning of the limitation period for the purposes of Article 3(1) of Regulation No 2988/95. That was the point at which expenditure by the ERDF was committed. At that stage, the irregularities in the procurement procedure – namely, the fact that the CCI had chosen DDB-Needham without publishing a call for tenders in the Official Journal of the European Communities and had indicated its intention to choose that firm even before publishing any call for tenders – had already arisen. (42)

96. As to the second question – whether the limitation period was interrupted by the communication of the auditor’s report by the prefect of the region to the CCI – it is clear from the third subparagraph of

Article 3(1) of Regulation No 2988/95 that the limitation period is interrupted by any act of the competent national authority, notified to the person in question, relating to investigation or legal proceedings concerning the irregularity, and starts again following each interrupting act. (43)

97. The communication of the audit report constituted an act of a competent national authority concerning the investigation of an irregularity. (44) The audit report was, in my view, sufficiently specific and precise to interrupt the limitation period for proceedings within the meaning of the third subparagraph of Article 3(1) of Regulation No 2988/95. (45)

98. The third question is: what criteria determine the maximum length of the limitation period?

99. As the Court acknowledged in Ze Fu Fleischhandel, (46) the Member States enjoy a discretion under Article 3(3) of Regulation No 2988/95 to fix a longer limitation period than the four years provided for in Article 3(1) of that regulation.

100. However, the Court went on to hold that 'in light of the objective of protecting the European Union's financial interests, an objective for which the European Union legislature considered that a limitation period of four, or indeed even three, years was already in itself sufficient to enable the national authorities to bring proceedings in respect of an irregularity detrimental to those financial interests and capable of leading to the adoption of a measure such as recovery of a wrongly received advantage, it is apparent that to grant those authorities a period of 30 years goes beyond what is necessary for a diligent public service'. (47)

101. In my view the Court's reasoning in Ze Fu Fleischhandel should apply by analogy to the present matter.

102. It follows that, if the Member State concerned exercises the discretion which it enjoys under Article 3(3) of Regulation No 2988/95, the principle of proportionality nevertheless precludes application of a 30-year limitation period to proceedings relating to the repayment of wrongly received funds.

Question 2c

103. Question 2c asks essentially whether, where there is no irregularity for the purposes of Article 1(2) of Regulation No 2988/95, any issue of recovery should be governed by national law or whether the European Union's financial interest in recovering funds precludes the national judge from applying national rules on the withdrawal of decisions creating rights.

104. Since I am of the view that the issue is governed by European Union law, it follows that national law does not apply, and there is no need to answer this part of the question.

Conclusion

105. Accordingly, I am of the opinion that, in answer to the questions referred by the French Conseil d'État, the Court should rule as follows:

Where a recipient of subsidies from the Structural Funds which is a contracting authority for the purposes of the EU public procurement procedures, fails to comply with those procedures in selecting a service provider to conduct an operation funded in whole or in part from those Funds:

– The second indent of Article 23(1) of Council Regulation (EEC) No 4253/88 of 19 December 1988 laying down provisions for implementing Regulation No 2052/88 as regards coordination of the activities of the different Structural Funds between themselves and with the operations of the European Investment Bank and the other existing financial instruments, as amended by Council Regulation (EEC) No 2082/93 of 20 July 1993, requires Member States to take action for recovery of the subsidies in question.

– The conduct of the recipient constitutes an irregularity within the meaning of Article 1(2) of Council Regulation (EC, Euratom) No 2988/95 of 18 December 1995 on the protection of the European Communities' financial interests.

– The fact that the competent national authority could not have been unaware of the irregularity cannot alter the classification of the conduct in question as an irregularity for the purposes of Article 23(1) of Regulation No 4253/88.

– The limitation period starts on the date that the ERDF subsidy was awarded to the recipient for the purposes of Article 3(1) of Regulation No 2988/95.

– An audit report communicated by the competent national authority is sufficiently specific and precise to interrupt the limitation period for the purposes of Article 3(1) of Regulation No 2988/95.

– If the Member State concerned exercises the discretion which it enjoys under Article 3(3) of Regulation No 2988/95, the principle of proportionality nevertheless precludes application of a 30-year limitation period to proceedings relating to repayment of wrongly received refunds.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Third Chamber)

10 May 2012 (*)

(Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations — Directive 2004/18/EC — Procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts — Contract for the supply, installation and maintenance of dispensing machines for hot drinks, and the supply of tea, coffee and other ingredients — Article 23(6) and 23(8) — Technical specifications — Article 26 — Conditions for performance of the contract — Article 53(1) — Criteria for award of the contracts — Most economically advantageous tender — Products derived from organic agriculture and fair trade — Use of labels in the formulation of the technical specifications and the award criteria — Article 39(2) — Concept of 'additional information' — Article 2 — Principles for award of contracts — Principle of transparency — Articles 44(2) and 48 — Verification of the suitability and choice of participants — Minimum level of technical or professional abilities — Compliance with 'criteria of sustainability of purchases and socially responsible business')

In Case C-368/10,

ACTION under Article 258 TFEU for failure to fulfil obligations, brought on 22 July 2010,

European Commission, represented by C. Zadra and F. Wilman, acting as Agents, with an address for service in Luxembourg, applicant,

v

Kingdom of the Netherlands, represented by C. Wissels and M. de Ree, acting as Agents, defendant,

THE COURT (Third Chamber),

composed of K. Lenaerts, President of the Chamber, R. Silva de Lapuerta, E. Juhász, G. Arestis and D. Šváby (Rapporteur), Judges,

Advocate General: J. Kokott,

Registrar: M. Ferreira, Principal Administrator,

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 26 October 2011, after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 15 December 2011

gives the following

Judgment

1 By its application, the European Commission requests the Court to find that, because in a tendering procedure for a public contract for the supply and management of automatic coffee machines which was the subject of a contract notice published in the Official Journal of the European Union on 16 August 2008, the province of North Holland:

– inserted in the technical specifications a condition requiring the Max Havelaar and EKO labels or in any event labels based on similar or the same criteria;

– included, for appraising the ability of operators, criteria and evidence concerning sustainable purchasing and socially responsible business, and

– included, when formulating award criteria, a reference to the Max Havelaar and/or EKO labels, or in any event labels based on the same criteria, the Kingdom of the Netherlands failed to fulfil its obligations under, respectively, Article 23(6) and (8), Articles 2, 44(2) and 48(1) and (2) and Article 53(1) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114, and corrigendum OJ 2004 L 351, p. 44), as amended by Commission Regulation (EC) No 1422/2007 of 4 December 2007 (OJ 2007 L 317, p. 34) (‘Directive 2004/18’).

I – Legal context

2 Directive 2004/18 contains inter alia the following recitals in its preamble:

‘(2) The award of contracts concluded in the Member States on behalf of the State, regional or local authorities and other bodies governed by public law entities, is subject to the respect of the principles of the Treaty and in particular to the principle of freedom of movement of goods, the principle of freedom of establishment and the principle of freedom to provide services and to the principles deriving therefrom, such as the principle of equal treatment, the principle of non-discrimination, the principle of mutual recognition, the principle of proportionality and the principle of transparency. However, for public contracts above a certain value, it is advisable to draw up provisions of Community coordination of national procedures for the award of such contracts which are based on these principles so as to ensure the effects of them and to guarantee the opening-up of public procurement to competition. These coordinating provisions should therefore be interpreted in accordance with both the aforementioned rules and principles and other rules of the Treaty.

(5) Under Article 6 of the [EC] Treaty [corresponding to Article 11 TFEU], environmental protection conditions are to be integrated into the definition and implementation of the Community policies and activities referred to in Article 3 of that [EC] Treaty [corresponding, in essence, to Article 3 TFEU to Article 6 TFEU and Article 8 TFEU], in particular with a view to promoting sustainable development. This Directive therefore clarifies how the contracting authorities may contribute to the protection of the environment and the promotion of sustainable development, whilst ensuring the possibility of obtaining the best value for money for their contracts.

(29) The technical specifications drawn up by public purchasers need to allow public procurement to be opened up to competition. To this end, it must be possible to submit tenders which reflect the diversity of technical solutions. Accordingly, it must be possible to draw up the technical specifications in terms of functional performance and conditions, and, where reference is made to the European standard or, in the absence thereof, to the national standard, tenders based on equivalent arrangements must be considered by contracting authorities. To demonstrate equivalence, tenderers should be permitted to use any form of evidence. Contracting authorities must be able to provide a reason for any decision that equivalence does not exist in a given case. Contracting authorities that wish to define environmental conditions for the technical specifications of a given contract may lay down the environmental characteristics, such as a given production method, and/or specific environmental effects of product groups or services. They can use, but are not obliged to use appropriate specifications that are defined in eco-labels, such as the European Eco-label, (multi-)national eco-labels or any other eco-label providing the conditions for the label are drawn up and adopted on the basis of scientific information using a procedure in which stakeholders, such as government bodies, consumers, manufacturers, distributors and environmental organisations can participate, and providing the label is accessible and available to all interested parties. … The technical specifications should be clearly indicated, so that all tenderers know what the conditions established by the contracting authority cover.

(33) Contract performance conditions are compatible with this Directive provided that they are not directly or indirectly discriminatory and are indicated in the contract notice or in the contract documents. They may, in particular, be intended to favour on-site vocational training, the employment of people experiencing particular difficulty in achieving integration, the fight against unemployment or the protection of the environment. For instance, mention may be made, amongst other things, of the conditions — applicable during performance of the contract — to recruit long-term job-seekers or to implement training measures for the unemployed or young persons, to comply in substance with the provisions of the basic International Labour Organisation (ILO) Conventions, assuming that such provisions have not been implemented in national law, and to recruit more handicapped persons than are required under national legislation.

...

(39) Verification of the suitability of tenderers, in open procedures, and of candidates, in restricted and negotiated procedures with publication of a contract notice and in the competitive dialogue, and the selection thereof, should be carried out in transparent conditions. For this purpose, non-discriminatory criteria should be indicated which the contracting authorities may use when selecting competitors and the means which economic operators may use to prove they have satisfied those criteria. In the same spirit of transparency, the contracting authority should be required, as soon as a contract is put out to competition, to indicate the selection criteria it will use and the level of specific competence it may or may not demand of the economic operators before admitting them to the procurement procedure.

(46) Contracts should be awarded on the basis of objective criteria which ensure compliance with the principles of transparency, non-discrimination and equal treatment and which guarantee that tenders are assessed in conditions of effective competition. As a result, it is appropriate to allow the application of two award criteria only: “the lowest price” and “the most economically advantageous tender”.

To ensure compliance with the principle of equal treatment in the award of contracts, it is appropriate to lay down an obligation — established by case-law — to ensure the necessary transparency to enable all tenderers to be reasonably informed of the criteria and arrangements which will be applied to identify the most economically advantageous tender. It is therefore the responsibility of contracting authorities to indicate the criteria for the award of the contract and the relative weighting given to each of those criteria in sufficient time for tenderers to be aware of them when preparing their tenders. ...

Where the contracting authorities choose to award a contract to the most economically advantageous tender, they shall assess the tenders in order to determine which one offers the best value for money. In order to do this, they shall determine the economic and quality criteria which, taken as a whole, must make it possible to determine the most economically advantageous tender for the contracting authority. The determination of these criteria depends on the object of the contract since they must allow the level of performance offered by each tender to be assessed in the light of the object of the contract, as defined in the technical specifications and the value for money of each tender to be measured.

In order to guarantee equal treatment, the criteria for the award of the contract should enable tenders to be compared and assessed objectively. If these conditions are fulfilled, economic and qualitative criteria for the award of the contract, such as meeting environmental conditions, may enable the contracting authority to meet the needs of the public concerned, as expressed in the specifications of the contract. Under the same conditions, a contracting authority may use criteria aiming to meet social conditions, in response in particular to the needs — defined in the specifications of the contract — of particularly disadvantaged groups of people to which those receiving/using the works, supplies or services which are the object of the contract belong.’

3 According to Article 1(2)(c) of Directive 2004/18, public supply contracts are public contracts other than those referred to in point (b) of that subparagraph, having as their object the purchase, lease, rental or hire purchase, with or without option to buy, of products, and a public contract having as its object the supply of products and which also covers, as an incidental matter, siting and installation operations is to be considered a public supply contract. Under Article 7 of that directive, the directive is applicable to such a contract, unless it has been awarded in the defence field or by a central purchasing body, the value of which exclusive of value added tax is estimated to be equal to or greater than EUR 206 000 when it is awarded by a contracting authority not covered by Annex IV to the directive. That annex does not refer to provinces in relation to the Kingdom of the Netherlands.

4 Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 provides:

‘Principles of awarding contracts

Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way.’

5 Paragraph 1(b) of Annex VI to Directive 2004/18 defines the concept of ‘technical specification’, in relation to public supply contracts, as ‘a specification in a document defining the required characteristics of a product … such as quality levels, environmental performance levels, design for all conditions … and conformity assessment, performance, use of the product, safety or dimensions, including conditions relevant to the product as regards the name under which the product is sold, terminology, symbols, testing and test methods, packaging, marking and labelling, user instructions, production processes and methods and conformity assessment procedures.’

6 Article 23 of that directive provides:

‘1. The technical specifications as defined in point 1 of Annex VI shall be set out in the contract documentation …

2. Technical specifications shall afford equal access for tenderers and not have the effect of creating unjustified obstacles to the opening up of public procurement to competition.

3. ... the technical specifications shall be formulated:

...

b) or in terms of performance or functional conditions; the latter may include environmental characteristics. However, such parameters must be sufficiently precise to allow tenderers to determine the subject-matter of the contract and to allow contracting authorities to award the contract;

...

6. Where contracting authorities lay down environmental characteristics in terms of performance or functional conditions as referred to in paragraph 3(b) they may use the detailed specifications, or, if necessary, parts thereof, as defined by European or (multi-) national eco-labels, or by and any other eco-label, provided that:

– those specifications are appropriate to define the characteristics of the supplies or services that are the object of the contract, – the conditions for the label are drawn up on the basis of scientific information,

– the eco-labels are adopted using a procedure in which all stakeholders, such as government bodies, consumers, manufacturers, distributors and environmental organisations can participate, and,

– they are accessible to all interested parties.

Contracting authorities may indicate that the products and services bearing the eco-label are presumed to comply with the technical specifications laid down in the contract documents; they must accept any other appropriate means of proof, such as a technical dossier of the manufacturer or a test report from a recognised body.

8. Unless justified by the subject-matter of the contract, technical specifications shall not refer to a specific make or source, or a particular process, or to trade marks, patents, types or a specific origin or production with the effect of favouring or eliminating certain undertakings or certain products. Such reference shall be permitted on an exceptional basis, where a sufficiently precise and intelligible description of the subject-matter of the contract pursuant to paragraphs 3 and 4 is not possible; such reference shall be accompanied by the words "or equivalent".'

7 Article 26 of Directive 2004/18 provides:

'Conditions for performance of contracts

Contracting authorities may lay down special conditions relating to the performance of a contract, provided that these are compatible with Community law and are indicated in the contract notice or in the specifications. The conditions governing the performance of a contract may, in particular, concern social and environmental considerations.'

8 Article 39(2) of Directive 2004/18 states:

'Provided that it has been requested in good time, additional information relating to the specifications and any supporting documents shall be supplied by the contracting authorities or competent departments not later than six days before the deadline fixed for the receipt of tenders.'

9 Article 44(1) of Directive 2004/18, under the heading 'Verification of the suitability and choice of participants and award of contracts', provides that contracting authorities, after checking the suitability of the tenderers not excluded, in accordance with the criteria concerning, inter alia, professional and technical knowledge or ability referred to in Article 48 of the directive, are to award the contracts on the basis of the criteria referred to, in essence, in Article 53 of that directive. Pursuant to Article 44(2) of the directive:

'The contracting authorities may require candidates and tenderers to meet minimum capacity levels in accordance with Articles 47 and 48.

The extent of the information referred to in Articles 47 and 48 and the minimum levels of ability required for a specific contract must be related and proportionate to the subject-matter of the contract.

10 Article 48(1) of Directive 2004/18, entitled 'Technical and/or professional ability':

'The technical and/or professional abilities of the economic operators shall be assessed and examined in accordance with paragraphs 2 and 3.'

11 Pursuant to Article 48(2), evidence of the economic operators' technical abilities may be furnished by one or more of the following means according to the nature, quantity or importance, and use of the works, supplies or services. With regard to public supply contracts, points (a)(ii), (b) to (d) and (j) of that provision refer to the following elements:

– the submission of a list of the principal deliveries effected in the past three years;

– an indication of the technicians or technical bodies involved, which may not directly belong to the undertaking, especially those responsible for quality control;

– a description of the technical facilities and measures used by the supplier for ensuring quality and the undertaking's study and research facilities;

– where the products or services to be supplied are complex or, exceptionally, are required for a special purpose, a check carried out by or on behalf of the contracting authorities on the production capacities of the supplier and, if necessary, on the means of study and research which are available to it and the quality control measures it will operate;

– with regard to the products to be supplied, samples, descriptions and/or photographs, or certificates attesting the conformity of products to certain specifications or norms.

12 Under the aforementioned Article 48(6), the contracting authority is to specify, in the notice or in the invitation to tender, which references under paragraph 2 it wishes to receive.

13 Article 53 of Directive 2004/18 provides:

'Contract award criteria

1. ... [T]he criteria on which the contracting authorities shall base the award of public contracts shall be either:

a) when the award is made to the tender most economically advantageous from the point of view of the contracting authority, various criteria linked to the subject-matter of the public contract in question, for example, quality, price, technical merit, aesthetic and functional characteristics, environmental characteristics, running costs, cost-effectiveness, after-sales service and technical assistance, delivery date and delivery period or period of completion;

...'

II – The background to the action

A – The contract notice

14 On 16 August 2008, at the request of the province of Noord Holland in the Netherlands, a contract notice was published in the Official Journal of the European Union for the supply and management of automatic coffee machines as from 1 January 2009 ('the contract notice').

15 Section II, point 1.5 of that notice describes the contract as follows:

'The province of North Holland has a contract for the management of automatic coffee machines. The contract expires on 1 January 2009. The province intends to enter into a new contract from 1 January 2009 by means of a European tender procedure. An important aspect is the desire of the province of North Holland to increase the use of organic and fair trade products in automatic coffee machines.'

16 Section III, point 1 of the contract notice deals with the conditions relating to the contract. Following information concerning the deposits and guarantees, the main terms concerning financing and payment and the legal form of recourse to sub-contractors, point 1.4 of that section contains the word 'no' under the heading 'Other particular conditions to which the performance of the contract is subject'.

17 Section IV, point 2.1 of the contract notice states that the contract will be awarded to the most economically advantageous tender. It follows from paragraph 3.4 of the same section that the time-limit for receipt of tenders was set as 26 September 2008 at 12 noon.

B – The specifications

18 The contract notice referred to specifications, entitled ‘Call for tenders’, dated 11 August 2008 (‘the specifications’).

19 Under the heading ‘Context of the contract’ sub-chapter 1.3 of the specifications reproduces, in its first paragraph, the content of point 1.5 of section II of the contract notice. The second paragraph of that sub-chapter states as follows:

‘The tenders shall be evaluated both on the basis of qualitative and environmental criteria and on the basis of price.’

20 Sub-chapter 1.4 of the specifications describes the content of the contract, in summary form, as follows:

‘The province of North Holland places an order for the supply, installation and maintenance of semi-automatic (full-operational) machines for the dispensing of hot and cold drinks, on a hire basis. The province of North Holland also places an order for the supply of ingredients for the dispensing machines … Sustainability and functionality constitute important aspects.’

21 According to section 1.5 of the specifications, the contract concerned was to be of three years’ duration, capable of being extended by one year.

22 In accordance with sub-chapter 3.4 of the specifications, concerning the conditions for registration, the presentation of alternatives was not authorised. Interested parties and tenderers were obliged to carry out research concerning the relevant market conditions, inter alia by asking questions of the contracting authority which should produce responses in an information notice.

23 The information notice was defined in section 5 of sub-chapter 2.3 of the specifications as a document containing the replies to the questions posed by interested parties in addition to possible amendments to the specifications or to other contract documents, forming part of the specifications and taking precedence over the other parts thereof including the annexes. It was also laid down, in sections 3 and 5 of that sub-chapter, that the information notice would be published online on the province of North Holland’s tender procedure website, with all interested parties receiving notice by email as soon as replies were published on the site.

24 Sub-chapter 4.4 of the specifications was entitled ‘Suitability conditions/minimum conditions’. Those conditions were defined, in the introductory part of the specifications, as conditions to be satisfied by a tenderer in order that his tender could be taken into consideration, expressed either as grounds for exclusion or minimum conditions.

25 Sections 1 to 5 of the aforementioned sub-chapter 4.4 concerned, respectively, turnover, professional risk indemnity insurance, the tenderer’s experience, quality conditions and the evaluation of customer satisfaction.

26 Section 4 of the aforementioned sub-chapter 4.4, headed ‘Quality conditions’ contained a point 2, drafted as follows:

‘In the context of sustainable purchasing and socially responsible business the Province of North Holland requires that the supplier fulfil the criteria concerning sustainable purchasing and socially responsible business. In what way do you fulfil the criteria concerning sustainable purchasing and socially responsible business? It is also necessary to state in what way the supplier contributes to improving the sustainability of the coffee market and to environmentally, socially and economically responsible coffee production …’

27 That condition was reiterated in section 6, the last point of that same sub-chapter 4.4, which contained a summary, inter alia of ‘Quality standards’ in the following terms:

‘11. Sustainability of purchases and [socially responsible business: knock-out criterion]’.

28 Headed ‘Minimum condition 1: Schedule of conditions’, section 1 of sub-chapter 5.2 of the specifications referred back to a separate annex and laid down that the tenderers had to comply with the schedule of conditions as set out therein.

29 Annex A to the specifications, headed ‘Schedule of conditions’ contained inter alia the following points:

‘31 The province of North Holland uses the Max Havelaar and EKO labels for coffee and tea consumption. … [Assessment:] condition [.]

...

35 If possible, the ingredients should comply with the EKO and/or Max Havelaar labels. … [Maximum] 15 [points. Assessment:] preferred[.]’

30 According to the annexes and the general scheme of the specifications that point 35 relates to certain ingredients used for the preparation of drinks with the exception of tea and coffee, such as milk, sugar and cocoa (‘the ingredients’).

C – The information notice

31 On 9 September 2008, the province of North Holland published points 11 and 12 of the information notice provided for under sub-chapter 2.3 of the specifications. Those points relate to a question concerning points 31 and 35 of Annex A to the specifications, worded as follows: ‘Can we assume in respect of the stated labels “or equivalent” applies[?]’ The contracting authority replied as follows:

‘00011 ... [point] 31 ...

In so far as the criteria are equivalent or identical.

00012 ... [point] 35 ...

The ingredients may bear a label based on the same criteria.’

32 According to the notice published in the Official Journal of the European Union on 24 December 2008, the contract was awarded to the Netherlands company Maas International.

D – The EKO and MAX HAVELAAR labels

33 According to the Commission’s arguments, which are not disputed in that regard by the Kingdom of the Netherlands, the EKO and MAX HAVELAAR labels have the following characteristics.

1. The EKO label

34 The private Netherlands label EKO is granted to products made up of at least 95% of ingredients from organic agricultural production. It is administered by a foundation established under Netherlands private law which has the objective of promoting organic agriculture such as that covered, at the time of the facts in the main proceedings, by Council Regulation (EEC) No 2092/91 of 24 June 1991 on organic production of agricultural products and indications referring thereto on agricultural products and foodstuffs (OJ 1991 L 198, p. 1), as amended by Council Regulation (EC) No 392/2004 of 24 February 2004 (OJ 2004 L 65, p. 1) (‘Regulation No 2092/91’) and to combat fraud. That foundation was designated as the competent authority responsible for checking compliance with the obligations laid down by that regulation.

35 EKO is a trade mark registered at the Office for Harmonisation in the Internal Market (Trade Marks and Designs) (OHIM).

2. The MAX HAVELAAR label

36 The MAX HAVELAAR label is also a private label administered by a foundation established under Netherlands private law, in conformity with the rules laid down by an international umbrella organisation, the Fairtrade Labelling Organisation (FLO). It is used in a number of countries, including the Netherlands.

37 The label is intended to promote the marketing of fair trade products and certifies that the products in respect of which it is granted are purchased at a fair price and under fair conditions from organisations made up of small-scale producers in developing countries. In that regard, the grant of that label is based on compliance with four criteria: the price must cover all the costs; it must contain a premium compared to the market price; production must be subject to pre-financing and the importer must have long-term trading relationships with the producers. The FLO carries out both the audit and the certification.

38 MAX HAVELAAR is also a trade mark registered at OHIM.

III – The pre-litigation procedure and the procedure before the Court of Justice 39 The Commission sent a letter of formal notice to the Kingdom of the Netherlands on 15 May 2009. According to that letter, the specifications stipulated by the province of North Holland in the context of the contract at issue infringed Directive 2004/18 by imposing the MAX HAVELAAR and EKO labels, or labels based on comparable or identical criteria, in respect of the tea or coffee to be supplied, by using those labels as an award criterion for the ingredients and evaluating the technical and professional abilities of tenderers on the basis of suitability criteria which do not form part of the complete system provided for in that regard by that directive.

40 By letter of 17 August 2009, the Kingdom of the Netherlands admitted that the contract at issue contained lacunae with regard to that directive, which however did not have effect of disadvantaging certain economic operators who may be interested, while disputing a number of the Commission's complaints.

41 On 3 November 2009, the Commission sent the Netherlands a reasoned opinion in which it repeated the complaints already made, calling upon the Netherlands to take all the measures necessary to comply with that opinion within the period of two months from receipt thereof.

42 By letter of 31 December 2009, that Member State argued that there was no foundation for the position supported by the Commission.

43 Consequently, the Commission decided to bring the present action.

44 By order of the President of the Court of 11 February 2011, the Kingdom of Denmark was granted leave to intervene in support of the form of order sought by the Kingdom of the Netherlands. Note was taken of the withdrawal of that intervention by order of the Third Chamber of the Court of 14 November 2011.

IV – The action

45 The Commission submits three pleas in law in support of its action.

46 The first and third pleas concern the use of the labels EKO and MAX HAVELAAR in the context, first, of the technical specifications of the contract at issue concerning the coffee and tea to be supplied and, second, of the award criteria concerning the ingredients to be supplied. The first plea contains two parts, alleging, first, infringement of Article 23(6) of Directive 2004/18, regarding the use of the EKO label and, second, Article 23(8) of that directive regarding the use of the MAX HAVELAAR label. The third plea relates to the infringement of Article 53(1) of that directive and is based on two complaints, the Commission claiming that the latter provision precludes the use of labels and that the abovementioned labels were not linked to the subject-matter of the contract at issue.

47 The second plea refers to the compliance, by the tenderers, with the ‘criteria of sustainable purchasing and socially responsible business’. It is subdivided into three parts alleging the infringement, respectively, of Articles 44(2), first subparagraph, and 48 of Directive 2004/18, since that condition does not correspond to one of those linked to the subject-matter of the contract, and of the transparency obligation provided for in Article 2 of that directive, since the concepts ‘sustainable purchasing’ and ‘socially responsible business’ lacked sufficient clarity.

A – Preliminary observations

1. Applicability of Directive 2004/18

48 It must be noted, first, that the contract at issue, which consists in the making available, in the context of a hire contract, and in the maintenance of drinks dispensers and the supply of the products required for them to function, constitutes a public supply contract within the meaning of Article 1(2)(c) of Directive 2004/18.

49 Second, the estimate made by the Commission concerning the estimated value of the contract, that is EUR 760 000, is not disputed by the Kingdom of the Netherlands. It must therefore be held that the directive applies to that contract in the light of the thresholds laid down in Article 7 thereof.

2. Consideration of the scope of the conditions and of the preference referred to in the context of the first and third pleas

50 The parties disagree with regard to the meaning of the condition and of the preference mentioned, respectively, in points 31 and 35 of Annex A to the specifications. The Commission submits, with reference to those points, that that condition and preference refer to the fact that the products concerned are to bear the EKO and/or MAX HAVELAAR labels, or at least labels based on equivalent or identical criteria, if points 11 and 12 of the information notice are taken into consideration. According to the Kingdom of the Netherlands, it is apparent on the contrary from section II, point 1.5 of the contract notice and sub-chapter 1.3 of the specifications that the contracting authority required or expressed the preference that products of organic agricultural production and fair trade be supplied, the mentioning of those labels or of equivalent labels being only illustrative of the criteria to be complied with.

51 It must, first, be held that the specifications cannot be interpreted as proposed by the Kingdom of the Netherlands.

52 In that regard, it must be recalled that the meaning of the specifications must be determined by adopting the perspective of potential tenderers since the aim of the procedures for the award of public works contracts laid down in Directive 2004/18 is precisely to guarantee to potential tenderers established in the European Union access to public contracts of interest to them (see Case C-220/05 Auroux and Others [2007] ECR I-385, paragraph 53). Thus, in the present case, the specifications could be understood by the potential tenderers only as referring to the possession of the labels mentioned in the context of the requirement or preference in question.

53 That requirement and preference were stated in the annex to the specifications containing the ‘Requirements Schedule’ with which, in conformity with sub-chapter 5.2, section 1 of the specifications, the tenders had to comply, as it was drafted. Points 31 and 35 of that schedule referred explicitly and without reservation to the EKO and MAX HAVELAAR labels, to the exclusion of all alternatives, the submission of which was in any case prohibited under sub-chapter 3.4 of the specifications. In those circumstances, it cannot be conceded that the reference, which is lacking in clarity, to the effect that ‘[a]n important aspect is the desire of the province of North Holland to increase the use of organic and fair trade products in automatic coffee machines’ contained in section II, point 1.5, of the contract notice and sub-chapter 1.3 of the specifications, that is to say, not in the parts of the contract documents dealing with conditions or preferences of the contracting authority, was such as to show that the requirement and preference in question alluded in a generic fashion to the fact that the products concerned were organic or fair trade produce.

54 Second, the later clarifications in points 11 and 12 of the information notice, according to which the reference to the EKO and MAX HAVELAAR labels in the condition and preference also covered equivalent labels, that is to say based on identical or comparable award criteria, cannot be taken into consideration under Article 39(2) of Directive 2004/18.

55 While, as the Advocate General states in paragraph 71 of her Opinion, additional information relating to the specifications and any supporting documents, referred to in that provision, may clarify certain points or supply certain information, they cannot change, even by means of corrections, the meaning of the essential contractual conditions, to which category the technical specifications and the award criteria belong, as those conditions were formulated in the specifications, upon which the economic operators concerned legitimately relied in taking the decision to prepare to submit a tender or, on the other hand, not to participate in the procurement procedure concerned. That is apparent both from the very use, in Article 39(2), of the expression 'additional information' and from the brief period of time, that is to say six days, allowed between the communication of such information and the deadline for receipt of the tenders, in accordance with that provision.

56 In that regard, both the principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency which flows from it require the subject-matter of each contract and the criteria governing its award to be clearly defined from the beginning of the award procedure (see, to that effect, Case C-299/08 Commission v France [2009] ECR I-11587, paragraphs 41 and 43).

57 It must therefore be held that the contractual documents which determine the subject-matter and criteria governing the award of the contract required, first, that the coffee and tea to be supplied were to bear the EKO and MAX HAVELAAR labels and, second, expressed the preference that the ingredients to be supplied should bear the same labels.

B – The first plea in law, alleging infringement of Article 23(6) and (8) of Directive 2004/18 concerning the technical specifications concerning the coffee and tea to be supplied

58 The first plea relied upon by the Commission concerns the requirement mentioned in point 31 of Annex A to the specifications, which states that 'The province of North Holland uses the MAX HAVELAAR and EKO labels for consumption of coffee and tea'.

1. The first plea relied on by the Commission alleging the infringement of Article 23(6) of Directive 2004/18 concerning the use of the EKO label in the context of the technical specifications relating to the coffee and tea to be supplied.

a) Arguments of the parties

59 By the first branch of the first plea, the Commission submits, in essence, that the requirement that the coffee and tea to be supplied must bear the EKO label or equivalent, that is to say certifying that they are products of organic agriculture, constitutes a description of the required characteristics of the products concerned, and therefore a technical specification subject to Article 23 of Directive 2004/18. Article 23(6) of the directive which authorises, subject to certain conditions, use of an eco-label, in order to describe environmental characteristics, does not however allow an eco-label as such to be prescribed.

60 For the Kingdom of the Netherlands, given that it is well known to economic operators active in the sector of activity concerned, the EKO label refers unequivocally, in the mind of such operators, to products of organic agriculture, by reference, at the time when the contractual documents were drafted, to Regulation No 2092/91. In any case, an economic operator concerned displaying ordinary care would have discovered without difficulty on the internet the description of the criteria referring to that label or could have asked the contracting authority about it. It would therefore be unrealistic to consider that the reference to the EKO label ran the risk of undermining the principle of equal treatment on the ground that a potential tenderer who did not understand that reference would have lost interest in the contract at issue or decisively delayed his actions.

b) Findings of the Court

61 As a preliminary point, it should be pointed out that, under Article 23(3)(b) of Directive 2004/18, the technical specifications may be formulated in terms of performance or functional requirements which may include environmental characteristics. According to recital 29 in the preamble to that directive, a given production method may constitute such an environmental characteristic. Therefore, as is agreed by the parties, the EKO label, in so far as it is based on environmental characteristics and fulfils the conditions listed in Article 23(6) of Directive 2004/18, constitutes an 'eco-label' within the meaning of that provision. Second, by laying down a requirement with regard to a characteristic of the tea and coffee to be supplied in connection with that label, the Province of North Holland has established, in that regard, a technical specification. It is therefore in the light of that last mentioned provision that this part of the first plea must be considered.

62 It must be recalled that under Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, which lays down the principles of awarding contracts, contracting authorities are to treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and are to act in a transparent way. Those principles are of crucial importance with regard to the technical specifications, in the light of the risks of discrimination linked to the choice of those specifications or the manner in which they are formulated. Thus, Article 23(2) and (3)(b) and the last sentence of recital 29 in the preamble to Directive 2004/18 state that the technical specifications must afford equal access for tenderers and not have the effect of creating unjustified obstacles to the opening up of public procurement to competition and be sufficiently precise to allow tenderers to determine the subject-matter of the contract and to allow contracting authorities to award the contracts, being clearly indicated, so that all tenderers know what the requirements established by the contracting authority cover. It is therefore in the light of those considerations that Article 23(6) of Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted.

63 The text of the first subparagraph of that provision, with regard to the requirements concerning environmental characteristics, confers on contracting authorities the option to use the detailed specifications of an eco-label, but not the eco-label as such. The requirement to be precise, laid down in Article 23(3)(b) of Directive 2004/18 — to which Article 23(6) of the directive refers — and expressly stated in the last sentence of recital 29 in the preamble to the directive, precludes an extensive interpretation of that provision.

64 Admittedly, in order to facilitate compliance with such a requirement, the second sub-paragraph of Article 23(6) also authorises the contracting authorities to indicate that the products bearing the eco-label, the detailed specifications of which they used, are presumed to comply with the specifications concerned. That second sub-paragraph does not however extend the scope of Article 23(6) because it permits recourse to the eco-label itself only indirectly, as proof of compliance with 'the technical specifications laid down in the contract documents'.

65 According to that second sub-paragraph of Article 23(6) of Directive 2004/18, the contracting authorities must accept any other appropriate means of proof, such as a technical dossier of the manufacturer or a test report from a recognised body.

66 As to the remainder, it should be noted that while, as is also pointed out by the Kingdom of the Netherlands, the contracting authority has the right to expect that the economic operators concerned are informed and reasonably aware, such a legitimate expectation nevertheless assumes that the contracting authority itself formulated its requirements clearly (see, to that effect, Case C-423/07 Commission v Spain [2010] ECR I-3429, paragraph 58). A fortiori, that expectation cannot be relied upon to relieve the contracting authorities of the obligations imposed on them by Directive 2004/18.

67 Moreover, far from constituting an excessive regard for formalities, the obligation of the contracting authority to mention expressly the detailed environmental characteristics it intends to impose even where it refers to the characteristics defined by an eco-label, is indispensable in order to allow potential tenderers to refer to a single official document, coming from the contracting authority itself and thus without being subject to the uncertainties of searching for information and the possible temporal variations in the criteria applicable to a particular eco-label.

68 In addition, it must be noted that the objection of the Kingdom of the Netherlands that, since the EKO label provides information relating to the organic origin of products bearing that label, the reference to detailed characteristics would have required it to list all the requirements of Regulation No 2092/91, which would have been much less clear than referring to that label, is irrelevant. Directive 2004/18 does not preclude, in principle, a reference, in the contract notice or contract documents, to legislative or regulatory provisions for certain technical specifications where such a reference is, in practice, unavoidable, provided that it is accompanied by all the additional information required by that directive (see, by analogy, Commission v Spain, paragraphs 64 and 65). Thus, since the marketing, in the European Union, of products obtained from organic agriculture and presented as such must comply with relevant European Union legislation, a contracting party may, if appropriate, without disregarding the concept of 'technical specification' within the meaning of point 1(b) of Annex VI to Directive 2004/18 or Article 23(3) thereof, state in the contract documents that the product to be supplied must comply with Regulation No 2092/91 or with any other subsequent regulation replacing that regulation.

69 With regard to the later clarification made to point 11 of the information notice, according to which the reference to the EKO label also covered an equivalent label, it must be stated, in addition to what has been stated in points 54 to 56 above, that such a clarification cannot, in any event, compensate for the failure to identify the detailed technical specifications corresponding to the label concerned.

70 It follows from the foregoing considerations that by requiring, in the contract documents, that certain products to be supplied were to bear a specific eco-label, rather than using the detailed specifications defined by that eco-label, the province of North Holland established a technical specification which was incompatible with Article 23(6) of Directive 2004/18. Therefore, the first part of the first plea is well founded.

2. The second part of the first plea, alleging infringement of Article 23(8) of Directive 2004/18 concerning use of the MAX HAVELAAR label in relation to the technical specifications concerning the coffee and tea to be supplied

a) Arguments of the parties

71 By the second part of its first plea, the Commission submits, in essence, that the requirement that the coffee and tea to be supplied should bear the MAX HAVELAAR label or another equivalent label, that is to say showing that they are fair trade products, is a description of the required characteristics of the products concerned and therefore a technical specification subject to Article 23 of Directive 2004/18. That requirement would infringe Article 23(8) which prohibits, in principle, technical specifications from 'refer[ring] to a specific … source, or a particular process, or to trade marks … or a specific origin or production with the effect of favouring or eliminating certain undertakings or certain products': the abovementioned label, which corresponds to a registered mark, falls within each of those categories.

72 First, the Kingdom of the Netherlands disputes that the criteria on which the MAX HAVELAAR label is based may be construed as requirements relating to a process or method of production, submitting that they are social conditions applicable to the acquisition of the products to be supplied in the context of the performance of the contract in question, covered by the concept of 'conditions for performance of the contract' within the meaning of Article 26 of Directive 2004/18. In the alternative, supposing that the requirement concerning the label were to be regarded as a technical specification, it rejects the proposition that Article 23(8) applies.

b) Findings of the Court

73 As stated in paragraph 37 above, the MAX HAVELAAR label describes products of fair trade origin purchased at a price and under conditions more favourable than those determined by market forces from organisations made up of small-scale producers in developing countries. According to the file, that label is based on four criteria, that is to say: the price must cover all the costs; it must contain a supplementary premium compared to the market price; production must be subject to pre-financing and the importer must have long-term trading relationships with the producers.

74 Such criteria do not correspond to the definition of the concept of technical specification in paragraph 1(b) of Annex VI to Directive 2004/18, given that that definition applies exclusively to the characteristics of the products themselves, their manufacture, packaging or use, and not to the conditions under which the supplier acquired them from the manufacturer.

75 By contrast, compliance with those criteria does fall under the concept of ‘conditions for performance of contracts’ within the meaning of Article 26 of that directive.

76 Pursuant to the article, the conditions governing the performance of a contract may, in particular, refer to social considerations. Thus, to require that the tea and coffee to be supplied must come from small-scale producers in developing countries, subject to trading conditions favourable to them, falls within those considerations. Accordingly, the lawfulness of such a requirement must be examined in the light of the aforesaid Article 26.

77 It must however be noted that, in the context of the pre-litigation procedure and also in the application initiating proceedings, the Commission criticised the clause concerning the specifications on the basis of Article 23(8) of that directive alone, claiming only at the stage of its rejoinder that the arguments developed in that regard applied mutatis mutandis to a condition for performance governed by Article 26 thereof.

78 Since the subject-matter of the proceedings under Article 258 TFEU is delimited by the pre-litigation procedure provided for in that provision, those proceedings must be based on the same grounds and pleas as the reasoned opinion, meaning that if a complaint was not included in the reasoned opinion, it is inadmissible at the stage of proceedings before the Court (see, to that effect, Case C-305/03 Commission v United Kingdom [2006] ECR I-1213, paragraph 22 and case-law cited).

79 Accordingly, the second part of the first plea must be rejected as inadmissible.

C – The third plea, alleging infringement of Article 53(1) of Directive 2004/18 concerning the award criteria relating to the ingredients to the supplied

80 The third plea is linked to the first, since the Commission refers therein to the resort, in the contract documents, to the EKO and MAX HAVELAAR labels, but as an award criterion within the meaning of Article 53 of Directive 2004/18.

81 As a preliminary point, it must be noted that, as held in paragraphs 51 to 57 above, by reference to the contract documents which determine the award criteria for the contract, the province of North Holland established an award criterion which consists in the fact that the ingredients to be supplied are to bear the EKO and/or MAX HAVELAAR labels.

1. Arguments of the parties

82 The Commission submits, in essence, that such an award criterion infringes Article 53 of Directive 2004/18 in two respects. First, it is not linked to the subject-matter of the contract, in so far as the criteria underlying the EKO and MAX HAVELAAR labels do not concern the products to be supplied themselves, but the general policy of the tenderers, especially in the case of the MAX HAVELAAR label. Second, that award criterion is not compatible with the requirements regarding equal access, non-discrimination and transparency, having the effect inter alia of disadvantaging potential tenderers who are not from the Netherlands or who do not hold the EKO and/or MAX HAVELAAR labels for their products.

83 According to the Kingdom of the Netherlands, the award criterion in question is transparent, objective and non-discriminatory. Those labels are well-known to the economic operators in the sector of activity concerned, they are based on underlying criteria derived from the European Union legislation concerning organic production of agricultural products (with regard to the EKO label), or determined by the body which grants the label and potentially accessible to all the economic operators concerned (with regard to the MAX HAVELAAR label) and a potential tenderer exercising ordinary care can in any case easily inform himself about those underlying criteria. In addition, Directive 2004/18 does not impose, with regard to the award criteria, the same requirements as for the technical specifications, as provided for in Article 23 of that directive, and logically so, since it is not necessary that all the tenderers should be able to fulfil an award criterion. Finally, the award criterion at issue is linked to the subject-matter of contract, which concerns inter alia the supply of organic fair trade products, compliance with that criterion providing an indication of the quality of the tenders so making it possible to assess their value for money.

2. Findings of the Court

84 It must be pointed out, first, that under Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18, where, as in the present case, a contracting authority decides to award a contract to the tenderer who submits the most economically advantageous tender from the point of view of that authority, the authority must base its decision on various criteria which are for it to determine in compliance with the requirements of the directive, that provision containing, as follows from the use of the phrase 'for example', a non-exhaustive list of the possible criteria.

85 Article 53 of Directive 2004/18 is further elucidated by recital 46 in the preamble to the directive, the third and fourth paragraphs of which lay down that the award criteria may, in principle, be not only economic but also qualitative. Thus, among the examples referred to in Article 53(1)(a) of the directive, are environmental characteristics. As the Advocate General points out in point 103 of her Opinion, the fourth paragraph of that recital also indicates that 'a contracting authority may use criteria aiming to meet social requirements, in response in particular to the needs — defined in the specifications of the contract — of particularly disadvantaged groups of people to which those receiving/using the works, supplies or services which are the object of the contract belong'. It must therefore be accepted that contracting authorities are also authorised to choose the award criteria based on considerations of a social nature, which may concern the persons using or receiving the works, supplies or services which are the object of the contract, but also other persons.

86 Second, Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18 requires that the award criteria be linked to the subject-matter of the contract. In that regard, recital 46 in the preamble lays down, in its third paragraph, that 'the determination of these criteria depends on the object of the contract since they must allow the level of performance offered by each tender to be assessed in the light of the object of the contract, as defined in the technical specifications, and the value for money of each tender to be measured', the 'most economically advantageous tender' being '[that] which … offers the best value for money'.

87 Third, as follows from the first and fourth paragraphs of that recital, compliance with the principles of equality, non-discrimination and transparency requires that the award criteria are objective, ensuring that tenders are compared and assessed objectively and thus in conditions of effective competition. That would not be the case for criteria having the effect of conferring on the contracting authority an unrestricted freedom of choice (see, with regard to similar provisions of the predecessor directives to Directive 2004/18, Case C-513/99 Concordia Bus Finland [2002] ECR I-7213, paragraph 61 and case-law cited).

88 Fourth and finally, as noted in the second paragraph of that recital, the same principles require the contracting authority to ensure the procedure for awarding a public contract complies at every stage with both the principle of the equal treatment of potential tenderers and the principle of transparency of the award criteria, the formulation of the award criteria being such as to allow all reasonably well-informed tenderers exercising ordinary care to know the exact scope thereof and thus to interpret them in the same way (see, inter alia, with regard to the provisions of the predecessor directives to Directive 2004/18, Case C-448/01 EVN and Wienstrom [2003] ECR I-14527, paragraphs 56 to 58).

89 In order to assess the validity of the claim that there is an insufficient link between the award criterion at issue and the subject-matter of the contract, it is necessary, first, to take into consideration the criteria underlying the EKO and MAX HAVELAAR labels. As is clear from paragraphs 34 and 37 above, those underlying criteria characterise the products derived from, respectively, organic agriculture and fair trade. With regard to the method of organic production subject to European Union legislation, that is, at the relevant time, Regulation No 2092/91, recitals (2) and (9) in the preamble to that regulation state that that method of production promotes environmental protection, inter alia because it implies significant restrictions on the use of fertilisers and pesticides. With regard to fair trade, it is clear from paragraph 37 above that the criteria laid down by the foundation which grants the MAX HAVELAAR label seek to promote the interests of small-scale producers in developing countries while maintaining trading relations with them which take into account the actual need of those producers, and not only the dictates of the market. It follows from those statements that the award criterion at issue concerned environmental and social characteristics falling within the scope of Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18.

90 Second, it must be held that, in accordance with the description of the contract in sub-chapter 1.4 of the specifications, that contract concerned in particular the supply of coffee, tea and the other ingredients required for the manufacture of the drinks available in the dispensers. It also follows from the drafting of the award criterion at issue that it covered only the ingredients to be supplied in the framework of that contract, without any bearing on the general purchasing policy of the tenderers. Therefore, those criteria related to products the supply of which constituted part of the subject-matter of that contract.

91 Finally, as is apparent from point 110 of the Advocate General's Opinion, there is no requirement that an award criterion relates to an intrinsic characteristic of a product, that is to say something which forms part of the material substance thereof. The Court held thus, in paragraph 34 of EVN and Wienstrom, that European Union legislation on public procurement does not preclude, in the context of a contract for the supply of electricity, a contracting authority from applying an award criterion requiring that the electricity supplied be produced from renewable energy sources. There is therefore nothing, in principle, to preclude such a criterion from referring to the fact that the product concerned was of fair trade origin.

92 It must therefore be held that the award criterion at issue is linked — as required by Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18 — to the subject-matter of the contract concerned, meaning that the Commission's claim in that regard is unfounded.

93 With regard to the complaint that the province of North Holland required the possession of specific labels in its award criterion, it must be noted that, under point 35 in Annex A to the specifications, the contracting authority provided that where the ingredients to be supplied bore the EKO and/or MAX HAVELAAR labels that would result in the award of a certain number of points in the classification of the competing tenders for the purposes of the award of the contract. That condition must be examined in the light of the requirements of precision and objectivity which apply to contracting authorities in that regard.

94 With regard to the specific issue of the use of labels, the European Union legislature gave certain precise indications concerning the implications of those requirements in the context of the technical specifications. As is evident from paragraphs 62 to 65 above, after having stated, in Article 23(3)(b) of Directive 2004/18, that those specifications must be sufficiently precise to allow tenderers to determine the subject-matter of the contract and to allow contracting authorities to award the contract, in Article 23(6) of the directive the legislature authorised the contracting authorities to have recourse to the criteria underlying an eco-label in order to establish certain characteristics of a product, but not to make an eco-label a technical specification, use of such a label being allowed only in order to create a presumption that the products bearing that label comply with the characteristics thus defined, expressly subject to any other appropriate means of proof being allowed.

95 Contrary to what is argued by the Kingdom of the Netherlands, there is no reason to consider that the consequences of the principles of equality, non-discrimination and transparency are different where award criteria are concerned, such criteria also being essential conditions of a public contract, since they will determine the choice of the successful tender from among those which satisfy the requirements expressed by the contracting authority in the technical specifications.

96 With regard to the clarification subsequently made to paragraph 12 of the information notice, according to which the reference to the EKO and MAX HAVELAAR labels also covered equivalent labels, it must be stated, in addition to what is said in paragraphs 54 to 56 above, that such a clarification cannot, in any event, compensate for the lack of precision regarding the criteria underlying the labels concerned.

97 It follows from all the foregoing considerations that by providing, in the specifications, that the fact that certain products to be supplied bore specific labels would give rise to the grant of a certain number of points in the choice of the most economically advantageous tender, without having listed the criteria underlying those labels and without having allowed proof that a product satisfies those underlying criteria by all appropriate means, the province of North Holland established an award criterion that was incompatible with Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18. Therefore, to that extent, the third plea in law is well founded.

D – The second plea in law, alleging infringement of Articles 2, 44(2) and 48 of Directive 2004/18 concerning the requirement of compliance with the criteria of 'sustainability of purchases' and 'socially responsible business'

98 The second plea, which is made up of four parts, refers to the requirement, laid down in point 2 of section 4 of sub-chapter 4.4. of the specifications, that the contracting authority, in essence, comply with the 'criteria of sustainability of purchases and socially responsible business', inter alia by contributing to improving the sustainability of the coffee market and to environmentally, socially and economically responsible coffee production, the tenderers having been asked to state how they meet those criteria.

1. Arguments of the parties

99 By the first part of this plea, the Commission submits that the requirement in question constitutes a minimum level of technical ability contrary to the first paragraph of Article 44(2) and to Article 48 of Directive 2004/18, in so far as it falls outside the criteria provided for in that article, which establishes a complete system. The Kingdom of the Netherlands contends, first, that that requirement amounts in reality to a condition for the performance of the contract governed by Article 26 of the directive. In the alternative, it considers that that requirement is part of the system established in Article 48 of Directive 2004/18, by reference to Article 48(2)(c) thereof, which refers to a description of the technical facilities and measures used by the supplier or service provider for ensuring quality and the undertaking's study and research facilities. By the same requirement, the tenderers could have shown that they were capable of performing the contract by meeting the necessary qualitative criteria.

100 The second part of this plea, alleging infringement of the second paragraph of Article 44(2) of Directive 2004/18 refers to the absence of a link, at least a sufficient one, between the requirement at issue and the subject-matter of the contract at issue, which is disputed by the defendant Member State since, in its view, the sustainability of purchases and socially responsible business are consistent with a market relating, inter alia, to the supply of coffee and tea derived from organic agriculture and fair trade.

101 By the third part of the second plea, the Commission claims that Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 has been infringed because the terms 'sustainability of purchases' and 'socially responsible business' lack sufficient clarity. That is not so, according to the Kingdom of the Netherlands since, inter alia, those expressions are understood by all reasonably informed undertakings and extensive information is available about them on the internet.

2. Findings of the Court

a) Classification of the clause concerned in the specifications

102 The parties disagree regarding the classification of the requirement at issue, according to which the tenderers must comply with the 'criteria of sustainability of purchases and socially responsible business', inter alia by contributing to improving the sustainability of the coffee market and to environmentally, socially and economically responsible coffee production. The Commission submits that that requirement concerned the tenderers' general policy and therefore related to their technical and professional ability within the meaning of Article 48 of Directive 2004/18. By contrast, according to the Kingdom of the Netherlands, that requirement applied to the contract at issue, meaning that it was a condition for performance of the contract within the meaning of Article 26 of that directive.

103 The last mentioned argument cannot be accepted. The clause at issue appears in section 4 of sub-chapter 4.4 of the specifications, entitled 'Suitability requirements/minimum levels', which corresponds to the terminology used inter alia in the title and Article 44(2) of Directive 2004/18, which refers to Articles 47 and 48 thereof, entitled respectively 'Economic and financial standing' and 'Technical and/or professional ability'. Furthermore, the first three sections of that sub-chapter concerned the minimum levels required by the contracting authority with regard to turnover, professional risk indemnity insurance and the experience of the tenderers, that is to say factors to which reference is made expressly in those Articles 47 and 48. In addition, the 'suitability requirements' were defined in the introductory part of the specifications as requirements expressed either as grounds for exclusion or minimum levels to be satisfied by a tenderer so that his tender could be taken into consideration, being thus distinct from the tender as such. Finally, the requirement at issue was formulated in a general way and not specifically in relation to the contract at issue.

104 It follows from those considerations that potential tenderers could have considered that requirement as referring only to a minimum level of professional capacity required by the contracting authority within the meaning of Articles 44(2) and 48 of Directive 2004/18. It is therefore in the light of those provisions that the lawfulness of that requirement must be assessed.

b) The alleged infringement of Articles 44(2) and 48 of Directive 2004/18

105 As Article 48(1) to 48(6) render apparent, Article 48 exhaustively lists the factors on the basis of which the contracting authority may evaluate and assess the technical and professional abilities of the tenderers. Moreover, while Article 44(2) authorises the contracting authority to establish minimum capacity levels which tenderers must satisfy in order that their tender can be taken into consideration for the award of the contract, those levels can be fixed only, pursuant to the first paragraph of Article 44(2), by reference to the factors listed in Article 48 of the directive, concerning technical and professional ability.

106 Contrary to what is argued by the Kingdom of the Netherlands, the requirement of respect for the ‘criteria of sustainable purchasing and socially responsible business’ is not connected to any of those factors.

107 In particular, the information requested pursuant to that requirement, that is to say the statement of ‘[in what way the tenderer] fulfils the criteria of sustainable purchasing and socially responsible business [and] contributes to improving the sustainability of the coffee market and to environmentally, socially and economically responsible coffee production’ cannot be assimilated to ‘a description of the technical facilities and measures used by the supplier or service provider for ensuring quality and the undertaking’s study and research facilities’ referred to in Article 48(2)(c) of Directive 2004/18. The term ‘quality’ which is used not only in that provision but also in subparagraphs (b), (d) and (j) of that paragraph must, in the context of that Article 48, be understood as the technical quality of the services provided or supplies of a kind similar to that of the services or supplies which constitute the subject-matter of the contract concerned, the contracting authority being entitled to require that the tenderers inform it how they check and guarantee the quality of those services or supplies, to the extent provided for in those subparagraphs.

108 It follows from those foregoing considerations that by requiring, on the basis of suitability requirements and minimum capacity levels stated in the specifications, that tenderers comply with the criteria of sustainable purchasing and socially responsible business and state how they comply with those criteria and contribute to improving the sustainability of the coffee market and to environmentally, socially and economically responsible coffee production, the province of North Holland established a minimum level of technical ability not authorised by Articles 44(2) and 48 of Directive 2004/18. Therefore, the first branch of the second plea is well founded.

c) Alleged infringement of Article 2 of Directive 2004/18

109 The principle of transparency implies that all the conditions and detailed rules of the award procedure must be drawn up in a clear, precise and unequivocal manner in the notice or contract documents so that, first, all reasonably informed tenderers exercising ordinary care can understand their exact significance and interpret them in the same way and, secondly, the contracting authority is able to ascertain whether the tenders submitted satisfy the criteria applying to the relevant contract (see, inter alia, Case C-496/99 P Commission v CAS Succhi di Frutta [2004] ECR I-3801).

110 As the Advocate General stated in paragraph 146 of her Opinion, it must be held that the requirements relating to compliance with the ‘criteria of sustainability of purchases and socially responsible business’ and the obligation to ‘contribute to improving the sustainability of the coffee market and to environmentally, socially and economically responsible coffee production’ are not so clear, precise and unequivocal as to enable all reasonably informed tenderers exercising ordinary care to be completely sure what the criteria governing those requirements are. The same applies, and all the more so, in relation to the requirement addressed to tenderers that they state in their tender ‘in what way [they] fulfil’ those criteria or ‘in what way [they] contribute’ to the goals sought by the contracting authority with regard to the contract and to coffee production, without precisely indicating to them what information they must provide.

111 Therefore, by requiring tenderers, in the specifications at issue, to comply with ‘the criteria of sustainable purchasing and socially responsible business’, to ‘contribute to improving the sustainability of the coffee market and to environmentally, socially and economically responsible coffee production’ and to state in their tender ‘in what way [they] fulfil’ those criteria or ‘in what way [they] contribute’ to the goals sought by the contracting authority with regard to the contract and to coffee production, the province of North Holland established a clause which does not comply with the obligation of transparency provided for in Article 2 of Directive 2004/18.

112 Accordingly, it follows from all of the foregoing considerations that because, in the tendering procedure for a public contract for the supply and management of coffee machines, which was the subject of a contract notice published in the Official Journal of the European Union on 16 August 2008, the province of North Holland:

– established a technical specification incompatible with Article 23(6) of Directive 2004/18 by requiring that certain products to be supplied were to bear a specific eco-label, rather than using detailed specifications;

– established award criteria incompatible with Article 53(1)(a) of that directive by providing that the fact that certain products to be supplied bore specific labels would give rise to the grant of a certain number of points in the choice of the most economically advantageous tender, without having listed the criteria underlying those labels and without having allowed proof that a product satisfies those underlying criteria by all appropriate means;

– established a minimum level of technical ability not authorised by Articles 44(2) and 48 of that directive by requiring, on the basis of suitability requirements and minimum capacity levels stated in the specifications, that tenderers comply with the ‘criteria of sustainable purchasing and socially responsible business’ and state how they comply with those criteria and ‘contribute to improving the sustainability of the coffee market and to environmentally, socially and economically responsible coffee production’, and

– prescribed a clause contrary to the obligation of transparency provided for in Article 2 of that directive by requiring that tenderers comply with ‘the criteria of sustainable purchasing and socially responsible business’ and state how they comply with those criteria and ‘contribute to improving the sustainability of the coffee market and to environmentally, socially and economically responsible coffee production’, the Kingdom of the Netherlands has failed to fulfil its obligations under the aforementioned provisions. Those considerations also mean that the action must be dismissed as to the remainder.

V – Costs

113 Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party’s pleadings. Since the Commission has applied for costs and the Kingdom of the Netherlands has been unsuccessful in its pleas, the latter must be ordered to pay the costs.

On those grounds, the Court (Third Chamber) hereby:

1. Declares that, on account of the fact that, in the tendering procedure for a public contract for the supply and management of coffee machines, which was the subject of a contract notice published in the Official Journal of the European Union on 16 August 2008, the province of North Holland:

– established a technical specification incompatible with Article 23(6) of Directive 2004/18 of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, as amended by Commission Regulation (EC) No 1422/2007 of 4 December 2007, by requiring that certain products to be supplied were to bear a specific eco-label, rather than using detailed specifications;

– established award criteria incompatible with Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18 by providing that the fact that certain products to be supplied bore specific labels would give rise to the grant of a certain number of points in the choice of the most economically advantageous tender, without having listed the criteria underlying those labels and without having allowed proof that a product satisfies those underlying criteria by all appropriate means;

– established a minimum level of technical ability not authorised by Articles 44(2) and 48 of Directive 2004/18 by requiring, on the basis of suitability requirements and minimum capacity levels stated in the specifications applicable in the context of that contract, that tenderers comply with the 'criteria of sustainable purchasing and socially responsible business' and state how they comply with those criteria and 'contribute to improving the sustainability of the coffee market and to environmentally, socially and economically responsible coffee production', and

– prescribed a clause contrary to the obligation of transparency provided for in Article 2 of Directive 2004/18 by requiring that tenderers comply with 'the criteria of sustainable purchasing and socially responsible business' and state how they comply with those criteria and 'contribute to improving the sustainability of the coffee market and to environmentally, socially and economically responsible coffee production',

the Kingdom of the Netherlands has failed to fulfil its obligations under the aforementioned provisions;

2. Dismisses the action as to the remainder;

3. Orders the Kingdom of the Netherlands to pay the costs.

IV — Forms of order sought by the parties and procedure before the Court

V — Assessment

A — First plea: reference to the ‘Max Havelaar’ and ‘EKO’ labels in the technical specifications for the coffee and tea to be supplied

1. First part of the first plea: reference to the ‘EKO’ label in respect of the coffee and tea to be supplied (Article 23(6) of Directive 2004/18)

(a) Applicability of Article 23 of Directive 2004/18

(b) No general prohibition on reference to environment labels when laying down the environmental characteristics of a product

(c) Prohibition on making use of a particular eco-label mandatory

(d) Interim conclusion

2. Second part of the first plea: reference to the ‘Max Havelaar’ label in respect of the coffee and tea to be supplied (Article 23(8) of Directive 2004/18)

(a) Applicability of 23(8) of Directive 2004/18

(b) In the alternative: compatibility of the reference to the ‘Max Havelaar’ label with Directive 2004/18

(i) Applicable provision: Article 26 of Directive 2004/18

(ii) Examination of the reference to the ‘Max Havelaar’ label in the light of Article 26 of Directive 2004/18

3. Summary of the first plea

B — Third plea: reference in the award criteria to the ‘Max Havelaar’ and ‘EKO’ labels with regard to the ingredients to be supplied

1. Preliminary remark

2. First argument in support of the third plea: purported absence of a link between the subject-matter of the contract and the two labels

3. Second argument supporting the third plea: reference to the labels instead of the underlying criteria

C — Second plea: purported reference to sustainable purchasing and socially responsible conduct as a suitability criterion

1. First part of the second plea: purported unlawful requirements relating to evidence of tenderers’ technical ability (Article 48(1) of Directive 2004/18, in conjunction with Article 48(2) thereof)

2. Second part of the second plea: purported lack of a connection between the suitability requirements on tenderers and the subject-matter of the contract (Article 44(2) of Directive 2004/18)

3. Third part of the second plea: purported infringement of the general transparency rule (Article 2 of Directive 2004/18)

VII — Conclusion

I – Introduction

1. Not only consumers, but also undertakings and public authorities are attaching increasing importance to the sustainability of their consumption. The question at the heart of the present infringement proceedings is the extent to which contracting authorities can, in procurement procedures, make the environmental and social sustainability of the products to be supplied a condition for the award of a contract.

2. In 2008, a Netherlands regional body referred to the ‘Max Havelaar’ and ‘EKO’ quality labels in connection with the procedure for the award of a public contract for the supply and management of automatic coffee machines. This was intended to ensure that the successful tenderer supplied ‘sustainable’ products characterised in particular by their environmental and social sustainability. The European Commission complains that in using the two labels and various formulations in the tender documents the Kingdom of the Netherlands has failed to comply with the requirements of European Union law on public procurement.

3. Whether and to what extent environmental and social considerations may be taken into account and, in particular, reference may be made to environmental and fair trade labels, is a question of fundamental importance for the further development of the public procurement law. In giving its answer, the Court is faced with the challenge of finding an equitable balance between the requirements of the internal market and environmental and social concerns, without, however, ignoring the practical requirements of award procedures. On the one hand, there can be no discrimination between potential tenderers or partitioning of markets. On the other hand, contracting authorities must be allowed to procure environmentally friendly, organic and fair trade products without excessive administrative burdens.

II – Legal framework

4. The legal framework of this case is formed by Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts. (2)

5. Article 2 of this directive, which appears in Title I under the heading ‘Definitions and General Principles’, lays down the following ‘Principles of awarding contracts’:

‘Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way.’

6. Among the ‘procurement rules’ in Title II of Directive 2004/18, Chapter IV contains a number of ‘specific rules governing specifications and contract documents’, of which Article 23 in conjunction with Annex VI, on the one hand, and Article 26, on the other, are of interest in the present case.

7. As is clear from Article 23 of Directive 2004/18, in conjunction with point 1(b) of Annex VI thereto, the expression ‘technical specifications’ means, in the case of public supply contracts,

‘a specification in a document defining the required characteristics of a product …, such as quality levels, environmental performance levels, design for all requirements … and conformity assessment, performance, use of the product, safety or dimensions, including requirements relevant to the product as regards the name under which the product is sold, terminology, symbols, testing and test methods, packaging, marking and labelling, user instructions, production processes and methods and conformity assessment procedures’.

8. With reference to this definition, Article 23 of Directive 2004/18 contains a rule on technical specifications which is worded as follows (extracts):

‘1. The technical specifications as defined in point 1 of Annex VI shall be set out in the contract documentation, such as contract notices, contract documents or additional documents.

2. Technical specifications shall afford equal access for candidates and tenderers and not have the effect of creating unjustified obstacles to competitive tendering.

3. Without prejudice to legally binding national technical rules, to the extent that they are compatible with Community law, the technical specifications shall be formulated:

(a) either by reference to technical specifications defined in Annex VI … Each reference shall be accompanied by the words “or equivalent”;

(b) or in terms of performance or functional requirements; the latter may include environmental characteristics. However, such parameters must be sufficiently precise to allow tenderers to determine the subject-matter of the contract and to allow contracting authorities to award the contract;

(c) or in terms of performance or functional requirements as mentioned in subparagraph (b), with reference to the specifications mentioned in subparagraph (a) as a means of presuming conformity with such performance or functional requirements;

(d) or by referring to the specifications mentioned in subparagraph (a) for certain characteristics, and by referring to the performance or functional requirements mentioned in subparagraph (b) for other characteristics.

6. Where contracting authorities lay down environmental characteristics in terms of performance or functional requirements as referred to in paragraph 3(b) they may use the detailed specifications, or, if necessary, parts thereof, as defined by European or (multi-) national eco-labels, or by and any other eco-label, provided that:

– the specifications used are appropriate to define the characteristics of the supplies or services that are the object of the contract, – the requirements for the label are drawn up on the basis of scientific information,

– the eco-labels are adopted using a procedure in which all stakeholders, such as government bodies, consumers, manufacturers, distributors and environmental organisations can participate, and,

– they are accessible to all interested parties.

Contracting authorities may indicate that the products and services bearing the eco-label are presumed to comply with the technical specifications laid down in the contract documents; they must accept any other appropriate means of proof, such as a technical dossier of the manufacturer or a test report from a recognised body.

8. Unless justified by the subject-matter of the contract, technical specifications shall not refer to a specific make or source, or a particular process, or to trade marks, patents, types or a specific origin or production with the effect of favouring or eliminating certain undertakings or certain products. Such reference shall be permitted on an exceptional basis, where a sufficiently precise and intelligible description of the subject-matter of the contract pursuant to paragraphs 3 and 4 is not possible; such reference shall be accompanied by the words “or equivalent”.’

9. Article 26 of Directive 2004/18 also provides, as regards the ‘Conditions for performance of contracts’:

‘Contracting authorities may lay down special conditions relating to the performance of a contract, provided that these are compatible with Community law and are indicated in the contract notice or in the specifications. The conditions governing the performance of a contract may, in particular, concern social and environmental considerations.’

10. Directive 2004/18 contains provisions on ‘Conduct of the procedure’ in Title II, Chapter VII; Articles 44, 48 and 53 thereof are relevant.

11. Article 44 of Directive 2004/18 is one of the general provisions on the conduct of the procedure and provides, under the heading ‘Verification of the suitability and choice of participants and award of contracts’, inter alia, as follows:

‘1. Contracts shall be awarded …, after the suitability of the economic operators … has been checked by contracting authorities in accordance with the criteria of economic and financial standing, of professional and technical knowledge or ability referred to in Articles 47 to 52 …

2. The contracting authorities may require candidates and tenderers to meet minimum capacity levels in accordance with Articles 47 and 48.

The extent of the information referred to in Articles 47 and 48 and the minimum levels of ability required for a specific contract must be related and proportionate to the subject-matter of the contract.

These minimum levels shall be indicated in the contract notice.’

12. Article 48 of Directive 2004/18 contains rules on the ‘Technical and/or professional ability’ of economic operators, which are worded, in extract, as follows:

‘1. The technical and/or professional abilities of the economic operators shall be assessed and examined in accordance with paragraphs 2 and 3.

2. Evidence of economic operators’ technical abilities may, as a general rule, be furnished by one or more of the following means, according to the nature, quantity or importance and use of the works, supplies or services:

(c) a description of the technical facilities and measures used by the supplier or service provider for ensuring quality and the undertaking’s study and research facilities;

6. The contracting authority shall specify, in the notice or in the invitation to tender, which references under paragraph 2 it wishes to receive.’

13. Finally, Article 53(1) of Directive 2004/18 provides as follows under the heading ‘Contract award criteria’:

‘Without prejudice to national laws, regulations or administrative provisions concerning the remuneration of certain services, the criteria on which the contracting authorities shall base the award of public contracts shall be either:

(a) when the award is made to the tender most economically advantageous from the point of view of the contracting authority, various criteria linked to the subject-matter of the public contract in question, for example, quality, price, technical merit, aesthetic and functional characteristics, environmental characteristics, running costs, cost-effectiveness, after-sales service and technical assistance, delivery date and delivery period or period of completion, or

(b) the lowest price only.’

III – Facts and pre-litigation procedure

A – Procurement procedure

14. In January 2008, the Netherlands province of Noord-Holland conducted a procurement procedure for a contract for the supply and management of automatic coffee machines. The contract was to be entered into for a period of three years with the possibility of a one-year extension.

1. Notice of the procurement procedure

15. The notice of the procurement procedure, which was published in the Official Journal of the European Union on 16 August 2008, (3) contained inter alia the following text which was headed 'Short description of the contract or purchase(s)':

'The Province of Noord-Holland has entered into a contract for the management of automatic coffee machines. The contract expires on 1 January 2009. The province intends to enter into a new contract from 1 January 2009 by means of a European tender procedure. An important aspect is the desire of the Province of Noord-Holland to increase the use of organic and fair trade products in automatic coffee machines.' (4)

16. Under the heading 'Other particular conditions to which the performance of the contract is subject' the notice stated 'No'. (5) The contract was to be awarded to the economically most advantageous tender. (6)

2. Specifications

17. The specifications, (7) which were available on request to any interested parties, stated inter alia that not only price but also quality and environmental criteria would be relevant in assessing tenders. In that respect, emphasis was placed on the desire of the Province of Noord-Holland to use more organic and fair trade products in its automatic coffee machines.

18. The specifications contained both the suitability criteria to be satisfied by the tenderers and the award criteria for assessing the economically most advantageous tender. In addition, they made it clear that only tenders which met the suitability criteria would be assessed on the basis of the award criteria.

19. Sub-chapter 4.4 of the specifications, which was entitled 'Suitability requirements/Minimum requirements', contained the following wording under heading 4.4.4, which was entitled 'Quality requirements':

'In the context of sustainable purchasing and socially responsible conduct the Province of Noord-Holland requires that the supplier fulfil the criteria concerning sustainable purchasing and socially responsible conduct. In what way do you fulfil the criteria concerning sustainable purchasing and socially responsible conduct? It is also necessary to state in what way the supplier contributes to improving the sustainability of the coffee market and to environmentally, socially and economically responsible coffee production.'

The same quality requirement was also classified as a 'knock-out criterion' in summary heading 4.4.6 of the contract documents entitled 'Summary of minimum requirements'.

20. Attached as Annex A to the specifications was a 'Requirements Profile', with which each tenderer had to declare its agreement. The profile contained both 'requirements' and 'preferences' of the contracting authority, the former being minimum requirements to be satisfied to avoid the tenderer being excluded from the award procedure, and the latter being award criteria, compliance with which by the individual tenderers was to be assessed on the basis of a points system.

21. Point 31 of the Requirements Profile set out the following 'requirement' relating to the coffee and tea to be supplied:

'The Province of Noord-Holland uses the Max Havelaar and EKO labels in relation to the consumption of coffee and tea.'

22. Furthermore, point 35 of the Requirements Profile concerning the 'ingredients' to be supplied — in particular sugar, milk powder and cocoa — contained the following 'preference' of the contracting authority, fulfilment of which could be rewarded with up to 15 points:

'If possible, the ingredients should comply with the EKO and/or Max Havelaar label.'

23. According to the specifications, the submission of alternative tenders was not permitted. Similarly, conditional tenders were not allowed.

3. Information notice

24. According to the specifications, potential tenderers had the possibility of putting questions to the province, as the contracting authority, to which they would receive answers in the form of an information notice. This downloadable notice was to form part of the specifications and take precedence over other parts thereof.

25. On 9 September 2008 the Province of Noord-Holland did in fact issue such an information notice which contained inter alia two answers to questions submitted by potential tenderers concerning the 'Max Havelaar' and 'EKO' labels used in the specifications.

– As regards point 31 of the Requirements Profile, the province responded to the question 'Can it be assumed that "or equivalent" applies in respect of the prescribed labels?' as follows: 'provided that they are based on the same or similar criteria' (point 11 of the information notice).

– As regards point 35 of the Requirements Profile, the province responded to the question 'Can it be assumed that "or equivalent" applies in respect of the prescribed labels?' as follows: 'The ingredients may bear a label which is based on the same criteria' (point 12 of the information notice).

4. Award of the contract

26. According to the notice of 24 December 2008, at the end of the procurement procedure the contract was awarded to the Netherlands undertaking Maas International B.V., established in Eindhoven. (8)

B – Labels referred to in the conditions of the contract

27. The 'Max Havelaar' (9) label has been awarded by the Stichting Max Havelaar, a foundation incorporated under Netherlands private law, since 1988. Products bearing this label have been purchased at a fair price and under fair terms of trade from organisations made up of small groups of farmers in developing countries. Four criteria are applied for awarding the label: a break-even minimum price, a premium on the world market price, pre-financing and long-term trading relationships between producer and importer. The setting of standards, auditing and certification are carried out by an international umbrella organisation, the Fairtrade Labelling Organization (FLO), (10) with its headquarters in Bonn, Germany.

28. The 'EKO' label is also a label established under Netherlands private law. It has been issued since 1985 by the Stichting Skal, a foundation incorporated under Netherlands private law, to products made up of at least 95% organic ingredients. The Stichting Skal works in collaboration with the Netherlands Ministry of Agriculture, Nature Management and Fisheries.

29. Both 'Max Havelaar' and 'EKO' are registered as Community trade marks with the Office for Harmonisation in the Internal Market (Trade Marks and Designs).

C – Pre-litigation procedure

30. Following receipt of a complaint, the Commission initiated the present proceedings for failure to fulfil obligations. Both in its letter of formal notice of 14 May 2009 and its reasoned opinion of 29 October 2009 the Commission essentially raised the same pleas on which the present action is based. It alleges that the Netherlands conducted the procurement procedure in breach of Directive 2004/18.

31. Both in its response of 17 August 2009 to the letter of formal notice and its written observations of 31 December 2009 on the Commission's reasoned opinion, the Netherlands contests the claim that it failed to fulfil its obligations. (11)

IV – Forms of order sought by the parties and procedure before the Court

32. By application of 20 July 2010, received at the Court on 22 July 2010, the Commission brought the present action against the Netherlands under the second paragraph of Article 258 TFEU.

33. The Commission asks the Court to:

1. Declare that, by virtue of the fact that in the tender procedure for a public contract for the supply and management of automatic coffee machines, published under No 2008/S 158-213630, the contracting authority, – inserted in the technical specifications a requirement for the Max Havelaar and EKO labels, or in any event labels based on similar or the same criteria, contrary to Article 23(6) and (8) of Directive 2004/18/EC,

   – included, for appraising the ability of operators, criteria and evidence concerning sustainable purchasing and socially responsible conduct, contrary to Article 48(1) and (2), Article 44(2), and in any event Article 2, of Directive 2004/18/EC and

   – included, when formulating the award criteria, a reference to the Max Havelaar and/or EKO labels, or in any event labels based on the same criteria, contrary to Article 53(1) of Directive 2004/18/EC, the Kingdom of the Netherlands failed to fulfil its obligations under the abovementioned articles of Directive 2004/18/EC;

2. Order the Kingdom of the Netherlands to pay the costs.

34. The Netherlands contends for its part that the Court should,

1. Dismiss the action; and

2. Order the Commission to pay the costs.

35. The Court received written submissions on the Commission's action, followed by oral argument, on 26 October 2011. The Kingdom of Denmark, which was granted leave to intervene in support of the Netherlands' submissions by an order of the President of the Court of 11 February 2011, took no further part in the procedure and withdrew from it by letter of 17 October 2001.

V – Assessment

36. For a long time the pursuit of environmental and social objectives was disapproved of in public procurement law, as was manifested not least in the use of the phase 'objectives irrelevant to the contract'. However, it is now generally recognised that contracting authorities may also take account of environmental and social factors when awarding contracts, (12) and the Commission has not challenged this in principle. On the one hand, this is clear generally from its public statements on this matter. (13) On the other, in the present case the Commission expressly recognised — not least at the hearing — that contracting authorities may in particular make the purchase of organic and fair trade products the subject-matter of public supply contracts.

37. In practical terms, however, the conditions under which, and the form in which, the contracting authorities' environmental and social views may affect a specific award procedure is fiercely disputed. In the present case, the Commission considers that Directive 2004/18 has been infringed. It objects to the action of the Province of Noord-Holland in three respects, each of which it covers with a separate plea in its application. They relate principally to the reference to the 'Max Havelaar' and 'EKO' labels in the tender documents.

38. The Netherlands does not challenge the applicability of Directive 2004/18 to the public supply contract at issue, but does dispute the claim that the Province of Noord-Holland infringed that directive.

A – First plea: reference to the 'Max Havelaar' and 'EKO' labels in the technical specifications for the coffee and tea to be supplied

39. By its first plea, the Commission alleges that the Netherlands infringed Article 23(6) and (8) of Directive 2004/18, which set out how the contracting authority can define product characteristics (‘technical specifications’).

40. As the Commission made clear at the hearing, it does not consider that the decision of the Province of Noord-Holland to purchase organic and fair trade products (14) is contrary to European Union law per se. The alleged infringement of Article 23 of Directive 2004/18 is claimed to lie instead in the fact that in laying down the technical specifications for the coffee and tea to be supplied to it the Province of Noord-Holland made reference to the ‘Max Havelaar’ and ‘EKO’ labels, or at least to labels with the same or similar criteria.

41. This plea relates specifically to paragraph 31 of the Requirements Profile in which suppliers were informed by way of a ‘requirement’ that the Province of Noord-Holland ‘uses’ the ‘Max Havelaar’ and ‘EKO’ labels in relation to the consumption of coffee and tea. Note should also be taken of point 11 of the information notice in which the contracting authority made it clear that it would also accept ‘equivalent’ labels ‘provided that they are based on the same or similar criteria’.

42. The first part of the first plea deals with the ‘EKO’ label (see also in this regard Section 1), whilst the second part concerns the ‘Max Havelaar’ label (see Section 2 below).

1. First part of the first plea: reference to the ‘EKO’ label in respect of the coffee and tea to be supplied (Article 23(6) of Directive 2004/18)

43. The first part of the first plea concerns the ‘EKO’ label, the inclusion of which in point 31 of the Requirements Profile infringes, in the view of the Commission, Article 23(6) of Directive 2004/18.

44. It must be observed in that regard that contracting authorities are free to determine themselves what products they wish to procure. However, in laying down product characteristics, including environmental characteristics, they must comply with certain provisions of European Union law which are intended to ensure that the relevant contract procedure is transparent, that there is no discrimination amongst potential suppliers, and that no unjustified obstacles are created to the opening-up of public procurement to competition. These provisions include Article 23 of Directive 2004/18.

(a) Applicability of Article 23 of Directive 2004/18

45. Article 23 of Directive 2004/18 contains detailed provisions on the use of technical specifications by contracting authorities in the contract documents. According to point 1(b) of Annex VI to this directive, ‘technical specification’, in the case of public supply contracts, means a specification in a document defining the required characteristics of a product. As examples of technical specifications, point 1(b) of Annex VI refers inter alia to environmental performance levels, symbols, packaging, marking and labelling, and production processes and methods.

46. The reference by a contracting authority to an eco-label such as the ‘EKO’ label certainly meets this definition of technical specification since this label indicates a particular production method and provides information on particular environmental characteristics of this coffee and tea.

47. Consequently, the use of the EKO label in the Requirements Profile of the Province of Noord-Holland must be assessed in the light of Article 23 of Directive 2004/18.

(b) No general prohibition on reference to environment labels when laying down the environmental characteristics of a product

48. Under Article 23(3)(b) of Directive 2004/18, contracting authorities may lay down in relation to the product to be supplied environmental characteristics in terms of performance or functional requirements. To this end, they may, under Article 23(6) of Directive 2004/18, use the detailed specifications, or, if necessary, parts thereof, as defined by European, (multi-) national or other eco-labels.

49. The Commission appears to construe these rules as meaning that contracting authorities may refer, when setting out their requirements on potential tenderers, only to concrete specifications — as it were, to the ‘small print’ — whilst they are prohibited from making any direct reference to eco-labels.

50. However, contrary to the view of the Commission, no such categorical prohibition on the use of eco-labels can be construed from the wording of Article 23(6) of Directive 2004/18 or appears justified in the light of the purpose of this provision or the context in which it is used.

51. Article 23(6) of Directive 2004/18 indeed emphasises the ‘detailed specifications’ which the contracting authorities are to use to describe the environmental characteristics of products.

52. However, that does not mean necessarily that contracting authorities must list separately in their contract documents every individual specification which forms part of an eco-label. Rather, the contracting authorities are free to refer in the contract documents, by a simple reference to eco-labels, in general to all the specifications on which those labels are based. The fact that Article 23(6) of Directive 2004/18 allows contracting authorities to use ‘detailed specifications’ ‘as defined … by eco-labels’ must be construed in this way.

53. According to the clear wording of the rules, such a general reference is allowed not only with regard to ‘European’ eco-labels — for example ‘EU ecolabels’ within the meaning of Regulation (EC) No 1980/2000 (15) or Regulation (EC) No 66/2010 (16) — but also with regard to ‘national’, ‘plurinational’ and ‘other’ eco-labels, where they satisfy the criteria laid down in the fourth indent of Article 23(6) of Directive 2004/18. (17)

54. Contrary to the Commission’s view, moreover, the general reference to all specifications on which an eco-label is based is normally entirely compatible with the principle of transparency, which is one of the fundamental principles of European public procurement law. (18)

55. The principle of transparency merely requires that technical specifications afford equal access for tenderers (Article 23(2) of Directive 2004/18) and that the environmental characteristics of the products to be supplied be sufficiently precise to allow tenderers to determine the subject-matter of the contract (Article 23(3)(b) of Directive 2004/18). (19)

56. A general reference to the specifications on which an eco-label is based is normally entirely sufficient in this regard since a reasonably well-informed tenderer of normal diligence (20) can indeed be expected to be familiar with the eco-labels used on the relevant market or at least to obtain information on such labels from the bodies certifying them.

57. Furthermore, the administrative burden involved in laying down the requirements on contracting authorities cannot be overlooked. That burden should always be proportionate to the objectives pursued in public procurement law. If the environmental characteristics of a product can be described with sufficient precision from the point of view of a reasonably well-informed tenderer solely by means of a general reference to the specifications underlying an eco-label, it would be excessively formalistic nevertheless to require the contracting authority to list all these specifications individually.

58. A glance at the final subparagraph of Article 23(6) of Directive 2004/18 also shows that a direct reference to eco-labels is not prohibited in principle. This provision expressly permits contracting authorities to presume that products and services bearing a particular eco-label comply with the technical specifications laid down in the contract documents. That rule would be pointless if the contracting authorities were allowed only to mention individual specifications but not also to refer to the associated eco-label.

59. Therefore, the fact that in the present case the Province of Noord-Holland referred to an eco-label in the contract documents without listing in detail the technical specifications underlying it does not in itself constitute an infringement of Article 23(6) of Directive 2004/18.

(c) Prohibition on making use of a particular eco-label mandatory

60. It must still be examined, however, whether an infringement of Article 23(6) of Directive 2004/18 arises from the way in which the Province of Noord-Holland referred in the present case to the 'EKO' label at point 31 of the Requirements Profile.

61. The parties interpret the facts of the case differently in that regard. Whilst the Commission considers that the 'EKO' label was made mandatory in respect of the coffee and tea to be supplied, the Netherlands takes the view that the Province of Noord-Holland merely wished to order organically produced tea and coffee and the reference to the 'EKO' label in the Requirements Profile was intended only to illustrate that product requirement.

62. The better arguments support the Commission's view.

63. Although the Province of Noord-Holland did in fact stress both in the notice of its plan in the Official Journal of the European Union and in the specifications its desire to use more organic and fair trade products in its automatic coffee machines, in the Requirements Profile it stated merely under the heading 'requirements' that it 'uses' coffee and tea bearing the 'EKO' label. At the same time it defined 'requirement' in terms of mandatory minimum conditions which must be satisfied to prevent a tenderer from being excluded from the award procedure. (21)

64. Potential tenders, whose understanding is decisive in interpreting the conditions of the contract, (22) could construe all this only as meaning that they were required to supply coffee and tea with the 'EKO' label and that they would be excluded from the award procedure if their products did not bear precisely that label.

65. Such a requirement is contrary to the principle of non-discrimination and the principle of opening-up of public procurement to competition (Article 23(2) of Directive 2004/18, in conjunction with Article 2 thereof), which must also be observed under Article 23(6) of Directive 2004/18. First, undertakings — in particular those from other Member States — whose tea and coffee bears a label other than the 'EKO' label used in the Netherlands, are disadvantaged. Second, undertakings which have organically produced coffee and tea in their product range, without having a label for them, are placed in a less favourable position.

66. Consequently, the Province of Noord-Holland went beyond what it is permitted to do by Article 23(6) of Directive 2004/18, in conjunction with Article 23(3)(b) thereof, in laying down the environmental characteristics of the products to be supplied. It did not merely refer generally to the 'detailed specifications' underlying the 'EKO' label (first paragraph of Article 23(6)) and did not simply presume that products bearing the 'EKO' label complied with the tender conditions (final subparagraph of Article 23(6)). Rather, it made the 'EKO' label compulsory per se and thus only coffee and tea bearing that specific label could be supplied, to the exclusion of all other coffees and teas.

67. That finding is not altered by the fact that, in its information notice concerning the two signs it used for coffee and tea, the contracting authority subsequently accepted, when requested, the additional words 'or equivalent'.

68. There are no concerns in principle over the use of the additional words 'or equivalent'. After all, the European Union legislature has itself expressly made similar provision, albeit in a different context (see the final sentence of Article 23(3)(a) and Article 23(8) of Directive 2004/18). In particular, contrary to the Commission's view, the additional words 'or equivalent' cannot be rejected on grounds of the legal uncertainty purportedly created. It is an inherent feature of every public contract for the contracting authority to assess the compatibility of the tenders submitted to it with the conditions of the contract and, where necessary, to carry out an examination of equivalence. (23)

69. However, as the Commission rightly points out, in the present case the clarification 'or equivalent' was not made in the information notice until several weeks after the contract documents had been distributed to interested parties. In these circumstances it cannot be ruled out that in the meantime one or more potential tenders were deterred from submitting a tender by the more restrictive formulations in the contract documents which seem to indicate that the 'EKO' label is compulsory, without any examination of equivalence.

70. The Netherlands objects that the Province of Noord-Holland produced its information notice containing the clarification ‘or equivalent’ within the time-limit laid down by Article 39(2) of Directive 2004/18, that is to say at least six days before the deadline fixed for the receipt of tenders.

71. However, that objection cannot be accepted. The six-day time-limit under Article 39(2) of Directive 2004/18 applies only to ‘additional information relating to the specifications and any supporting documents’ which the contracting authority supplies to potential tenderers on request. Such information may indeed be used to provide certain clarifications and information. However, fundamental defects in the conditions of the contract cannot be remedied in this way since the contract documents must satisfy all legal requirements from the time at which they are made available to potential tenders and cannot be substantially corrected just a few days before the deadline fixed for the receipt of tenders.

(d) Interim conclusion

72. All in all, therefore, it must be found that there has been an infringement of Article 23(6) of Directive 2004/18 in that the Province of Noord-Holland made a particular eco-label — the ‘EKO’ label — compulsory in respect of the coffee and tea to be supplied. Consequently, the first part of the Commission’s first plea is well founded.

2. Second part of the first plea: reference to the ‘Max Havelaar’ label in respect of the coffee and tea to be supplied (Article 23(8) of Directive 2004/18)

73. The second part of the Commission’s first plea concerns the ‘Max Havelaar’ label the use of which in point 31 of the Requirements Profile, subsequently supplemented by point 11 of the information notice, infringes, in the view of the Commission, Article 23(8) of Directive 2004/18.

(a) Applicability of 23(8) of Directive 2004/18

74. It is necessary first to examine whether Article 23(8) of Directive 2004/18 is applicable at all in a case such as this.

75. The Commission appears to consider that it is, merely because in the course of the proceedings the Netherlands submitted observations on the substance of Article 23(8) of Directive 2004/18. However, the Commission overlooks the fact that the Netherlands commented only in the alternative on Article 23(8), the applicability of which to the ‘Max Havelaar’ label it continues vehemently to dispute. Nevertheless, even if the Netherlands had entered into discussion of Article 23(8) without making any objection, it would still be for the Court to examine whether or not this provision is applicable. That is because, in an action for failure to fulfil obligations, it is for the Court to determine whether or not the alleged breach of obligations exists, even if the State concerned does not deny, or no longer denies, the breach. (24) Accordingly, the Court cannot look on while an incorrect provision is applied, even though the parties agree on its applicability. (25) As Advocate General Léger rightly stated, the role of the Court is not a passive one and it cannot be expected to be merely ‘the mouthpiece of the parties’. (26)

76. Article 23(8) of Directive 2004/18, the provision at issue, concerns — like all the preceding parts of this provision — technical specifications by which the contracting authority sets out the subject-matter of the contract. What therefore has to be examined is whether, by referring to the ‘Max Havelaar’ label, the Province of Noord laid down a technical specification in relation to the coffee and tea to be supplied.

77. As already mentioned, technical specifications within the meaning of Directive 2004/18 are, according to point 1(b) of Annex VI thereto, a specification in a document defining the required characteristics of a product. Therefore, they must be information which defines the properties of a product. That assessment is confirmed by the list contained in point 1(b) of Annex VI to Directive 2004/18: all the technical specifications given as examples therein concern the product itself, its packaging and its performance.

78. The ‘Max Havelaar’ label, on the other hand, does not concern the characteristics of the product, but rather the terms of trade granted to the producers of agricultural products in developing countries.

The label provides no information on how a product is produced, but rather whether it was traded fairly, in particular with regard to the prices and terms of trade granted to the farmers concerned.

79. In the context of the present case, this means that the 'Max Havelaar' label says nothing about the characteristics or method of production of the coffee or tea to be supplied — such as its taste, caffeine content or the use of pesticides — but merely permits inferences to be drawn as to the conditions under which this coffee or tea was purchased from the relevant producers. As the parties correctly pointed out, it relates to the purchasing policy of potential tenderers.

80. Therefore, the contracting authority did not, by referring to the 'Max Havelaar' label, lay down technical specifications within the meaning of Directive 2004/18, but rather brought social considerations into the award procedure.

81. Consequently, Article 23(8) of Directive 2004/18 is not applicable to the present case. As I will explain below, (27) the contracting authority's reference to a fair trade label such as 'Max Havelaar' should properly have been assessed in the light of Article 26 of Directive 2004/18.

82. It follows that the second part of the Commission's first plea must be dismissed as unfounded.

83. Contrary to what the Commission appears to suggest, its plea based on Article 23(8) of Directive 2004/18 cannot simply be reinterpreted as a plea pursuant to Article 26 of that directive since, according to settled case-law, (28) the subject-matter of an action for failure to fulfil obligations is circumscribed by the pre-litigation procedure. The Commission may not expand its scope in the proceedings before the Court. Therefore, if the Commission pleads an infringement of Article 23(8) of Directive 2004/18 in the pre-litigation procedure, it cannot be found in subsequent proceedings that there has been an infringement of Article 26 of Directive 2004/18. Furthermore, a plea to that effect would also be inadmissible under Article 42(2) of the Rules of Procedure of the Court of Justice since it was first raised in the Commission's rejoinder without any sound reasons for the delay being evident.

(b) In the alternative: compatibility of the reference to the 'Max Havelaar' label with Directive 2004/18

84. For the sake of completeness, I now wish briefly to address, in the alternative, the question whether the reference by the Province of Noord-Holland to the 'Max Havelaar' label was compatible with Directive 2004/18.

(i) Applicable provision: Article 26 of Directive 2004/18

85. As the Netherlands correctly pointed out, the lawfulness of a contracting authority's references to a fair trade label must be assessed not in the light of Article 23(8) of Directive 2004/18, but Article 26 thereof. Under the latter provision, 'contracting authorities may lay down special conditions relating to the performance of a contract' which 'may, in particular, concern social and environmental considerations.'

86. Part of the performance of a contract is not least the purchase by the contractor of the products to be supplied to the contracting party. Whether or not a product such as coffee or tea which is to be supplied to a contracting authority is fair trade depends on the contractor's purchasing policy based on social criteria.

87. The truth is therefore that by referring to the 'Max Havelaar' label in connection with the performance of the public supply contract at issue the Province of Noord-Holland laid down a condition based on social considerations within the meaning of Article 26 of Directive 2004/18, even though the province itself may have considered that no such conditions were contained in the contract documents. (29)

(ii) Examination of the reference to the 'Max Havelaar' label in the light of Article 26 of Directive 2004/18

88. As to the substance, I agree with the Commission that Article 26 of Directive 2004/18 does not permit the contracting authority to exercise unlimited influence over the purchasing policy of its future contractor. Its requirements in respect of that purchasing policy must relate specifically to the subject-matter of the public supply contract (30) and may not concern, for example, the contractor's purchasing policy in general. The contracting authority cannot therefore require that potential tenders have only fair trade products in their product range, but merely that the products to be supplied to it specifically under a public contract be fair trade. The Province of Noord-Holland has laid down no other requirement in the present case.

89. Having regard to the transparency rule, which must be complied with under Article 26 of Directive 2004/18, (31) there is likewise in principle no reason why a contracting authority should not refer to a fair trade label to clarify the social conditions which it has laid down for the performance of the contract and at the same time opt not to list in detail the criteria underlying that label, since, as already stated above in connection with eco-labels, (32) a reasonably well-informed tenderer of normal diligence can be expected to be familiar with the fair trade labels used on the relevant market or at least to obtain information on such labels from the bodies certifying them.

90. Conducting the procurement procedure and also performing the contract subsequently can even be made considerably easier if the undertakings concerned are permitted to prove that they have satisfied the social conditions laid down by the contracting party with reference to fair trade labels. The administrative burden on the contracting authority, potential tenderers, and the subsequent contractor is thereby minimised.

91. Contrary to the Commission's assertion at the hearing, contracting authorities absolutely cannot in any event be required to set out in their tender conditions their own ideas on fair trade. Most of them would probably not have the technical knowledge necessary to do so. Furthermore, the contracting authorities' different ideas of what constitutes fair trade (for example, as regards the price level, the appropriate length of the supply relationship between the traders and producers in developing countries, and the nature and extent of pre-financing of production (33)) would lead to a serious risk of fragmenting the market. Therefore, it is in the interests of both potential tenderers and contracting authorities for reference to fair trade labels to be permitted when awarding public supply contracts.

92. None the less, the social conditions relating to the performance of a contract laid down by the contracting authority pursuant to Article 26 of Directive 2004/18 must be compatible with European Union law. That means in particular that there must be no direct or indirect discrimination. (34)

93. That requirement is not satisfied in the present case since the Province of Noord-Holland did not use the 'Max Havelaar' label merely to explain its social ideas about fair trade. Nor did it simply establish a presumption that products bearing the 'Max Havelaar' label satisfied its social requirements for performance of the contract. Instead, it made the 'Max Havelaar' label compulsory per se and thus only coffee and tea bearing this specific label could be supplied, to the exclusion of all other coffees and teas. (35)

94. Therefore, firstly, it disadvantaged undertakings — in particular those from other Member States — whose tea and coffee bears a label other than the 'Max Havelaar' label used primarily in the Netherlands and Belgium. Secondly, it placed undertakings which have fair trade coffee and tea in their product range, without having a label for them, in a less favourable position. (36)

95. In the light of the foregoing, it can be concluded that the action of the Province of Noord-Holland in making a specific fair trade label — the 'Max Havelaar' label — compulsory in respect of the coffee and tea to be supplied was not compatible with Article 26 of Directive 2004/18.

96. As stated above, (37) that assessment is not altered by the subsequent clarification on the part of the contracting authority in point 11 of its information notice, which states that the reference to the 'Max Havelaar' label is to be read with the additional words 'or equivalent'.

97. I would point out merely in passing that the considerations set out above in respect of Article 26 of Directive 2004/18 also apply to Article 23(8) of that directive, should the Court find, contrary to my comments above, (38) that that provision is applicable.

3. Summary of the first plea

98. The Commission's first plea is only partly well founded. It must be upheld in so far as it claims an infringement of Article 23(6) of Directive 2004/18, whilst it must be rejected in so far as it is based on an infringement of Article 23(8) of that directive.

B – Third plea: reference in the award criteria to the 'Max Havelaar' and 'EKO' labels with regard to the ingredients to be supplied

99. On account of its closely connected subject-matter, it is appropriate to examine the Commission's third plea directly after its first. The third plea alleges infringement of Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18, which sets out which award criteria contracting authorities may lay down with regard to the award of a contract. That provision is said to have been infringed because in formulating its award criteria the Province of Noord-Holland referred to the 'Max Havelaar' 'and/or' 'EKO' labels, or at any rate to labels with the same criteria.

100. This plea relates specifically to point 35 of the Requirements Profile in which tenderers were informed of the 'preference' of the Province of Noord-Holland that the supplied 'ingredients' (in particular sugar, milk powder and cocoa) should 'where possible' comply with the 'EKO' and/or 'Max Havelaar' labels. Fulfilment of that 'preference' could be rewarded with up to 15 points in the award procedure. In point 12 of the information notice the contracting authority further made it clear that it would also accept 'equivalent' labels, adding that the ingredients may 'bear a label which is based on the same criteria' as the 'EKO' and 'Max Havelaar' labels.

1. Preliminary remark

101. Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18 applies where the contracting authority has decided — as it has in this case — to award the contract to the economically most advantageous tender. (39) As is clear from the wording of that provision, in particular the use of the expression 'for example' ('e.g.'), Directive 2004/18 itself does not lay down an exhaustive list of criteria for determining the economically most advantageous tender. (40)

102. Those criteria do not necessarily have to be of a purely economic nature. Factors which go beyond purely economic considerations may also influence the value of a tender from the point of view of the contracting authority. That is already evident from the wording of Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18, under which inter alia aesthetic, functional and environmental characteristics can be relevant in determining the economically most advantageous tender. (41)

103. Against that background, there is nothing to prevent a contracting authority from also taking into consideration environmental and social factors in determining the economically most advantageous tender. (42)

104. However, that does not mean that any criterion of that nature may be taken into consideration by the contracting authority. Rather, according to case-law, choice is limited to criteria aimed at identifying the tender which is in fact economically the most advantageous. (43)

105. The contracting authority does not have unrestricted freedom of choice in that regard. (44) As is clear from the wording of Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18, the criteria which it takes as a basis must be linked to the subject-matter of the contract. (45) They must be capable of establishing the tender which offers best value for money. (46) Furthermore, they must be objective criteria which ensure compliance with the principles of transparency, non-discrimination and equal treatment and which guarantee that tenders are assessed in conditions of effective competition. (47)

106. In the view of the Commission, in the present case these principles were infringed in two respects: one, the 'Max Havelaar' and 'EKO' labels have no link with the subject-matter of the contract (see Section 2 below), and two, the Province of Noord-Holland elevated both labels as such to the status of award criteria rather than merely taking account of the substantive requirements underlying them (see Section 3 below). I will examine these two arguments put forward by the Commission in greater detail below.

2. First argument in support of the third plea: purported absence of a link between the subject-matter of the contract and the two labels

107. Firstly, the Commission claims that there is no link between the subject-matter of the contract and the two ‘EKO’ and ‘Max Havelaar’ labels which the Province of Noord-Holland took as a basis because those labels relate solely to the general purchasing policy of potential tenderers.

108. That argument is unconvincing and, moreover, contradicts what the Commission itself stated in its first plea. (48) Contrary to the view of the Commission, both labels at issue have a sufficient link with the subject-matter of the contract.

109. For example, the ‘EKO’ label directly concerns the product characteristics — more precisely the environmental characteristics — of the ingredients to be supplied. A label which the Commission itself classified as a technical specification to determine functional performance and requirements under Article 23(6) of Directive 2004/18, in conjunction with Article 23(3) thereof, cannot be denied any link with the subject-matter of the contract under Article 53(1) of Directive 2004/18.

110. As regards the ‘Max Havelaar’ label, it is true it does not define any product characteristics in the strict sense, such as those relevant to the technical specifications (Article 23 of Directive 2004/18). (49) That label does, however, provide information on whether or not the goods to be supplied were traded fairly. Such a factor can be taken into consideration in connection with conditions relating to performance of a contract (Article 26 of Directive 2004/18). (50) It cannot therefore be denied at the outset that it lacks any connection with the subject-matter of the contract (in this case, the supply of ‘ingredients’ such as sugar, milk powder and cocoa). From the point of view of a contracting authority which, as the contract documents show, attaches importance to socially responsible trade, the question whether or not the goods to be supplied were purchased from the producer thereof on fair conditions can indeed be relevant in determining best value for money. Of course the taste of sugar does not vary depending on whether it was traded fairly or unfairly. A product placed on the market on unfair conditions does however leave a bitter taste in the mouth of a socially responsible customer.

111. It would certainly be going too far for a contracting authority, in determining the economically most advantageous tender, to want to assess the general purchasing policy of potential tenderers and to take into consideration whether all the goods in its product range were fair trade, irrespective whether or not they are the subject-matter of the contract. (51)

112. However, in the present case there is certainly no such extensive consideration of the fair trade factor. As the Netherlands has correctly pointed out, in point 35 of the Requirements Profile the Province of Noord-Holland merely took into account whether the ‘ingredients’ to be supplied to it bore a label capable of certifying their fair trade origin. Accordingly, the use of the ‘Max Havelaar’ label in the contract documents at issue had a clear and specific connection with the subject-matter of the contract.

113. Consequently, the Commission’s first argument in support of its third plea must be dismissed.

3. Second argument supporting the third plea: reference to the labels instead of the underlying criteria

114. It remains to be considered whether an infringement of Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18 arises from the way in which the Province of Noord-Holland referred in the present case to the ‘EKO’ and ‘Max Havelaar’ labels in point 35 of the Requirements Profile.

115. The parties interpret the facts of the case differently in this regard. Whereas the Commission considers that the contracting authority made the ‘EKO’ and ‘Max Havelaar’ labels as such the award criterion in respect of the ‘ingredients’ to be supplied (in particular sugar, milk powder and cocoa), the Netherlands takes the view that the Province of Noord-Holland merely intended to refer to the substantive requirements underlying the two labels.

116. The better arguments support the Commission’s view.

117. Although the Province of Noord-Holland did stress in general terms both in the notice of its plan in the Official Journal of the European Union and in the specifications that it wished to use more organic and fair trade products in its automatic coffee machines, in point 35 of the Requirements Profile it expressed its 'preference' that the ingredients should 'where possible' comply with the 'EKO' 'and/or' the 'Max Havelaar' labels. In point 12 of the information notice it clarified that statement as meaning that the ingredients could bear another label which was based on the same criteria as the 'EKO' and 'Max Havelaar' labels. However, there was no mention in either the Requirements Profile or the information notice of organic and fair trade ingredients without labels.

118. The potential tenderers, whose understanding is decisive in interpreting the tender conditions, (52) could understand this only as meaning that the ingredients to be supplied by them had to bear the 'EKO' and/or 'Max Havelaar' label, or at least equivalent labels, in order to gain the most points in the award procedure.

119. Such action by the contracting authority does not comply with the legal requirements applicable to the formulation of award criteria under Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18.

120. Contrary to the view expressed by the Commission, that is not because of a purported lack of transparency (53) in the reference to the two labels since, as stated above, (54) a reasonably well-informed tenderer of normal diligence can be expected to be familiar with the labels used on the relevant market or at least to obtain from the bodies certifying those labels information on the criteria applied by them.

121. It was also entirely possible that potential tenders offered goods with other labels based on the same criteria as the 'EKO' and 'Max Havelaar' labels since, according to the submissions made by the Netherlands Government, which are undisputed in that regard, the 'EKO' label (55) is based exclusively on the criteria laid down in the so-called 'EC organic regulation', (56) and the 'Max Havelaar' label is identical in content to the international 'Fairtrade' label which is awarded in numerous States by bodies brought together under the Fairtrade Labelling Organisation. (57)

122. However, it is contrary to the principle of non-discrimination (58) and the principle of opening-up of public procurement to competition, (59) which must be observed under Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18, (60) for a contracting authority — such as the Province of Noord-Holland in this case — to award in connection with award criteria extra points for the fact that products bear organic and fair-trade labels. Undertakings which have organically produced goods in their product range, without having a label for them, are thereby placed in a less favourable position. Potential tenderers must retain the possibility of proving that their goods satisfy fully the award criteria drawn up by the contracting authority, even if they bear labels other than those mentioned by the contracting party or bear no label at all.

123. In this connection, the objection raised by the Netherlands that the 'EKO' and 'Max Havelaar' labels were not mandatory requirements in respect of the 'ingredients' to be supplied, but merely non-binding 'preferences' of the contracting authority which were rewarded by a negligible number of points, must be rejected. On the one hand, just a few points can in some circumstances make the difference between success and failure in an award procedure with a points-based evaluation system, and, on the other, all award criteria — including those to which the contracting authority attaches little importance — must comply, without any reservation, with the fundamental procurement law principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination. According to settled case-law, those principles are to be observed at every stage of the award procedure. (61)

124. All in all, it must therefore be found that there has been an infringement of Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18. The Commission's third plea is well founded.

C – Second plea: purported reference to sustainable purchasing and socially responsible conduct as a suitability criterion

125. The Commission's second plea is based on Articles 2, 44(2) and 48(1) and (2) of Directive 2004/18 which lay down the principle of transparency under procurement law (Article 2) and conditions relating to the assessment by the contracting authority of undertakings' ability (Articles 44 and 48). The Commission considers that those provisions were infringed in that the Province of Noord-Holland laid down criteria and required evidence which — in the view of the Commission — concerned quite generally the sustainable purchasing and socially responsible conduct of potential tenderers.

126. More specifically, this plea relates to heading 4.4.4 of the specifications in which the Province of Noord-Holland requires that potential tenderers fulfil 'the criteria concerning sustainable purchasing and socially responsible undertakings'. In that heading it also asks tenderers to explain how they fulfil 'the criteria concerning sustainable purchasing and socially responsible undertakings' and to state the extent to which they contribute 'to improving the sustainability of the coffee market and to environmentally, socially and economically responsible coffee production'. (62)

1. First part of the second plea: purported unlawful requirements relating to evidence of tenderers' technical ability (Article 48(1) of Directive 2004/18, in conjunction with Article 48(2) thereof)

127. The first part of the second plea specifically concerns the requirements relating to evidence of tenderers' technical ability. In the view of the Commission, the Province of Noord-Holland, by its statements on sustainable purchasing and the socially responsible conduct of potential tenderers in the contract documents, went beyond the narrow confines laid down by Article 48 of Directive 2004/18 in respect of the assessment and examination of the technical and professional abilities of economic operators.

128. However, as the Netherlands correctly points out, that part of the second plea is based on a misinterpretation of heading 4.4.4 of the specifications. The requirements placed therein on potential tenderers do not relate at all to their technical and professional abilities. It is apparent from the title of heading 4.4.4 that they are instead 'quality requirements' in relation to the services to be provided.

129. The overall context of heading 4.4.4 of the contract documents also confirms this impression. For example, sub-chapter 4.4 of the contract documents is headed 'Suitability requirements/Minimum requirements', which suggests that it relates not only to the suitability of potential tenderers (or their abilities) — such as heading 4.4.3, which concerns the tenderers' experience — but other aspects too. Those other aspects include, for example, the answer to the question at issue in the present case, namely how the tenderer concerned intends to meet the requirements relating to sustainability and socially responsible undertakings (heading 4.4.4 of the specifications).

130. Consequently, heading 4.4.4, the heading of the specifications at issue, does not, contrary to the view of the Commission, fall at all within the scope of Article 48(1) and (2) of Directive 2004/18 and cannot therefore be assessed in the light of that provision

131. If, however, the Court were nevertheless to apply that provision of the directive, it would not preclude a contract condition such as heading 4.4.4 of the specifications.

132. It is indeed undisputed that Article 48 of Directive 2004/18 contains an exhaustive list of the evidence of technical ability which contracting authorities may require from economic operators. (63)

133. However, by its 'quality requirements' in heading 4.4.4 of the specifications the Province of Noord-Holland was able to rely on one of the clauses in Article 48(2) of Directive 2004/18, that is to say, subparagraph (c) which provides specifically for a 'description of the … measures used … for ensuring quality'. The Netherlands rightly drew attention to this.

134. Consequently, the allegation of infringement of Article 48 of Directive 2004/18 is unfounded.

2. Second part of the second plea: purported lack of a connection between the suitability requirements on tenderers and the subject-matter of the contract (Article 44(2) of Directive 2004/18)

135. The second part of the second plea is based on Article 44(2) of Directive 2004/18. That provision essentially provides that the contracting authority may set minimum levels of ability required of potential tenderers, provided that they are related and proportionate to the subject-matter of the contract. (64)

136. The Commission considers that Article 44(2) of Directive 2004/18 has been infringed because the statements in the specifications concerning the sustainable purchasing and socially responsible conduct of potential tenderers has, in its view, no connection with the subject-matter of the public procurement contract at issue in this case, but instead concerns the general purchasing policy of economic operators.

137. The Netherlands cannot be regarded as accepting that allegation simply because it mounted a relatively half-hearted defence to it in the pre-litigation procedure, (65) since according to settled case-law there is no rule of procedure which requires a Member State to put forward during the pre-litigation phase of an infringement procedure under Article 258 TFEU all the arguments in its defence. (66) In the court proceedings at any rate the Netherlands defended itself strenuously against the allegation of an infringement of Article 44(2) of Directive 2004/18.

138. However, the plea alleging infringement of Article 44(2) of Directive 2004/18 is also unfounded as to the substance since, as stated above, heading 4.4.4 of the specifications at issue in this case is not a requirement concerning the suitability or technical ability of potential tenderers, (67) meaning Article 44 of Directive 2004/18 does not apply at all and, secondly, there is no question of heading 4.4.4 of the specifications lacking a sufficient connection with the subject-matter of the contract.

139. The subject-matter of the contract was — in so far as it is relevant in this context — the supply of coffee, tea and other ‘ingredients’ for automatic coffee machines, with the contracting authority expressly attaching importance to ‘sustainable’ products which were to be both organic and fair trade. As explained in connection with the first plea, these requirements serve partly to describe the product characteristics of the goods to be supplied (environmental characteristics within the meaning of Article 23 of Directive 2004/18), and partly to describe the other conditions governing performance of the contract (social considerations within the meaning of Article 26 of Directive 2004/18).

140. Accordingly, since sustainability and environmental impact played an important role in the performance of the public contract at issue, the contracting party could not be barred from asking potential tenderers how they fulfilled the ‘criteria concerning sustainable purchasing and socially responsible undertakings’ and to state the extent to which they contributed ‘to improving the sustainability of the coffee market and to environmentally, socially and economically responsible coffee production’.

141. It is entirely legitimate for a contracting authority to ask potential tenderers for information on how they intend to meet the aims of the contract which it has laid down. Contrary to the view expressed by the Commission, this is not aimed primarily at the general purchasing policy of potential tenderers, but rather at their procurement of the goods specifically to be supplied, that is to say coffee, tea and other ‘ingredients’. (68)

142. Consequently, the allegation of an infringement of Article 44(2) of Directive 2004/18 is likewise unfounded.

3. Third part of the second plea: purported infringement of the general transparency rule (Article 2 of Directive 2004/18)

143. Finally, in the third part of its second plea the Commission raises, in the alternative, an allegation of infringement of the general transparency rule, as contained in Article 2 of Directive 2004/18. (69)

144. That fundamental principle of European public procurement law is essentially intended to preclude any risk of favouritism or arbitrariness on the part of the contracting authority. It implies that all the conditions and detailed rules of the award procedure must be drawn up in a clear, precise and unequivocal manner in the notice or contract documents so that, first, all reasonably informed tenderers exercising ordinary care can understand their exact significance and interpret them in the same way and, secondly, the contracting authority is able to ascertain whether the tenders submitted satisfy the criteria applying to the relevant contract. (70)

145. The Commission complains that the requirements in heading 4.4.4 of the specifications are couched in excessively general and imprecise terms.

146. I agree. The passage of the specifications at issue does not show with sufficient clarity what kind of explanations and what kind of evidence the contracting authorities require from potential tenderers. Moreover, the wording chosen by the Province of Noord-Holland provides no certainty as to what is meant precisely by ‘sustainable purchasing and socially responsible undertakings’ and a contribution ‘to improving the sustainability of the coffee market and to environmentally, socially and economically responsible coffee production’.

147. A more precise description of what the Province of Noord-Holland expected from potential tenderers would have been helpful. For example, the Province of Noord-Holland could have asked about any contractual agreements concerning fair trade or organic products which the potential tenderers might have entered into with their relevant suppliers. The province could also have required potential tenderers to state what measures they had taken to monitor compliance with such agreements.

148. The Netherlands’ objection that several international organisations had defined the concept of sustainability is in any event not sufficiently substantiated to invalidate the plea alleging lack of transparency.

149. Consequently, it must be found that there has been an infringement of Article 2 of Directive 2004/18. The third part of the Commission’s third plea is therefore well founded.

D – Summary

150. All in all it can be found that Directive 2004/18 does indeed allow contracting authorities to take account of environmental and social considerations in procurement procedures, expressly including a reference in the tender conditions to environmental and fair trade labels.

151. However, the contracting authority cannot require that the goods to be supplied to it bear a particular label, but must permit other labels and also goods with no labels, provided that their environmental characteristics and the conditions under which they are produced and traded are equivalent to the requirements laid down by the contracting authority.

152. Furthermore, when awarding its contract the contracting authority may not take account of the tenderers’ general purchasing policy, but only their purchasing in relation to the goods specifically to be supplied. Where the contracting authority requires from tenderers information or evidence relating to the sustainability of their products and their business policy, that requirement must have a sufficient connection with the subject-matter of the contract and be couched in specific terms.

153. In the present case, the Province of Noord-Holland only partially complied with those rules. In its conditions of contract governing the 2008 public supply contract at issue it infringed three provisions of European Union law: Article 2, Article 23(6) and Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18. On the other hand, it is not possible to find that there has been an infringement of the other provisions claimed by the Commission, in particular Article 23(8), Article 44(2) and Article 48(1) and (2) of Directive 2004/18.

VI – Costs

154. According to Article 69(3) of the Rules of Procedure, the Court may order that the costs be shared or that each party bear its own costs. That rule applies inter alia where each party succeeds on some and fails on other heads.

155. On the basis of my previous observations, in the present case the Commission is successful in respect of the first part of its first plea, the third part of its second plea and its third plea, but unsuccessful in respect of the second part of its first plea and the first and second parts of its second plea.

156. Against that background, it appears to me reasonable to order each party to bear its own costs. (71)

VII – Conclusion

157. On the basis of the foregoing I propose that the Court rule as follows:

(1) By virtue of the fact that in the tender procedure for a public contract for the supply and management of automatic coffee machines in 2008, the Province of Noord-Holland,

– made it compulsory for the coffee and tea to be supplied to bear the Max Havelaar and EKO labels, or labels with a similar basis, thus contrary to Article 23(6) of Directive 2004/18,

– formulated in the tender conditions unclear 'quality requirements' for potential tenderers as regards 'sustainable purchasing and socially responsible conduct', thus contrary to Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, and

– provided, as part of the award criteria, for extra points if the 'ingredients' to be supplied bore the Max Havelaar and/or EKO labels, or labels with a similar basis, thus contrary to Article 53(1)(a) of Directive 2004/18, the Kingdom of the Netherlands has failed to fulfil its obligations under the Treaty.

(2) The remainder of the application is dismissed.

(3) Each party is ordered to bear its own costs.

gives the following

Judgment

1 This reference for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 1(3)(b) of Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors

(OJ 2004 L 134, p. 1) and Article 2d(1)(b) of Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (OJ 1992 L 76, p. 14), as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007 (OJ 2007 L 335, p. 31, 'Directive 92/13').

2 The reference has been made in proceedings between Norma-A SIA and Dekom SIA and Latgales plānošanas reģions [Latgale planning region (Latvia)], successor to the rights of Ludzas novada dome [Ludza Municipal Council (Latvia)] concerning the award to Ludzas autotransporta uzņēmums SIA of a 'concession' for the operation of public bus services in the city and district of Ludza.

Legal context

European Union legislation

3 Article 1(2)(a) and (d) and 3(b) of Directive 2004/17 provides:

'2. (a) 'Supply, works and service contracts' are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more of the contracting entities referred to in Article 2(2), and one or more contractors, suppliers, or service providers.

(d) 'Service contracts' are contracts other than works or supply contracts having as their object the provision of services referred to in Annex XVII.

(b) A 'service concession' is a contract of the same type as a service contract except for the fact that the consideration for the provision of services consists either solely in the right to exploit the service or in that right together with payment.'

4 Article 2 of the abovementioned directive states:

'1. For the purposes of this Directive,

(a) 'Contracting authorities' are State, regional or local authorities, bodies governed by public law, associations formed by one or several such authorities or one or several of such bodies governed by public law.

2. This Directive shall apply to contracting entities:

(a) which are contracting authorities or public undertakings and which pursue one of the activities referred to in Articles 3 to 7;

5 Article 5 of Directive 2004/17 provides:

'1. This Directive shall apply to activities relating to the provision or operation of networks providing a service to the public in the field of transport by railway, automated systems, tramway, trolley bus, bus or cable.

2. This Directive shall not apply to entities providing bus transport services to the public which were excluded from the scope of Directive 93/38/EEC pursuant to Article 2(4) thereof.'

6 Article 1(2)(a) and (4) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114) states:

'2. (a) "Public contracts" are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services within the meaning of this Directive.

4. "Service concession" is a contract of the same type as a public service contract except for the fact that the consideration for the provision of services consists either solely in the right to exploit the service or in this right together with payment.'

7 In accordance with Article 1(1) of Directive 92/13:

'This Directive applies to contracts referred to in Directive 2004/17 …, unless such contracts are excluded in accordance with Article 5(2), Articles 18 to 26, Articles 29 and 30 or Article 62 of that Directive.

…'

8 Article 2d(1) of Directive 92/13 states:

'1. Member States shall ensure that a contract is considered ineffective by a review body independent of the contracting entity or that its ineffectiveness is the result of a decision of such a review body in any of the following cases:

(b) in case of an infringement of Article 1(5), Article 2(3) or Article 2a(2) of this Directive, if this infringement has deprived the tenderer applying for review of the possibility to pursue pre-contractual remedies where such an infringement is combined with an infringement of Directive 2004/17 …, if that infringement has affected the chances of the tenderer applying for a review to obtain the contract;

…'

9 According to Article 2f(1)(b) of Directive 92/13:

'1. Member States may provide that the application for review in accordance with Article 2d(1) must be made:

(b) and in any case before the expiry of a period of at least six months with effect from the day following the date of the conclusion of the contract.'

10 Article 3(1) of Directive 2007/66, which inserted into Directive 92/13 the provisions referred to in paragraphs 7 to 9 of the present judgment, provides:

'Member States shall bring into force the laws, regulations and administrative provisions necessary to comply with this Directive by 20 December 2009…'

National legislation

11 Under Article 1(7) of the Law on collaboration between the public and private sectors (Publiskās un privātās partnerības likums, Latvijas Vēstnesis, 2009, No 107, p. 4093), which entered into force on 1 October 2009, a service concession contract is a contract under which, at the request of a public partner, the private partner provides the services listed in Annex 2 to the Law on public contracts (Publisko iepirkumu likums) and the consideration, or an essential component of the consideration, for the provision of those services, is that it obtains the right to operate those services whilst at the same time bearing the risks associated with the operation of the services or else a substantial proportion of those risks.

12 Under Article 1(8) of that Law, the right to operate a facility or a service includes the right to receive payment from the users of the facility or the service or to obtain payment from the public partner, the amount of which depends on user demand or the right to obtain payment both from users and from the public partner.

13 Under Article 1(9) of the abovementioned Law, there are risks associated with operating a facility or services (economic risks) where the income of the private partner depends on user demand for the facility or the services (demand risk) and/or on whether the services offered to users meet the requirements laid down in the concession contract (availability risk) or when revenue depends on both the demand risk and the availability risk.

14 Article 6(3) of the Law on public transport services (Sabiedriskā transporta pakalpojumu likums, Latvijas Vēstnesis, 2007, No 106, p. 3682) provides, inter alia, that public transport services are to be organised according to the demand for such services, taking account of the necessary density and frequency of transport in the context of the network, the extent and quality of services, the economic viability of transport services and determining the form of organisation of passenger transport.

15 The first paragraph of Article 10 of that Law provides that the carrier will be compensated for losses and expenditure associated with the provision of the services in accordance with Articles 11 and 12 of the said Law.

16 Under Article 11(1) of the same Law:

‘… the carrier is to be compensated for losses associated with the provision of public transport services:

(1) for the entire amount of such losses, out of funds provided for that purpose in the State budget, as regards the interurban routes of a regional transport network.

(1^1) out of the funds provided for that purpose in the State budget, in the case of routes which belong to a regional transport network providing local services;

(1^2) out of local budgets, in the case of routes which belong to a regional transport network providing local services, in relation to the part of the public transport services covered by the concession which exceeds the limit of the funds provided for in the State budget in order to secure the provision of those services.

17 Under Article 12 of the Law on public transport services:

‘(1) If the State lays down minimum quality requirements which a profit-making carrier would not have to comply with, and where compliance gives rise to additional costs, the carrier shall be entitled to apply for compensation from the State for all such additional costs.

(2) Compensation shall be provided, by means of the payment referred to in the first paragraph, to carriers who provide public transport services under a public transport concession if the minimum quality requirements were laid down after the commencement of the provision of public transport services.

(3) The rules governing the definition of, calculation of and compensation for the costs mentioned in the first paragraph, the allocation to local authorities of the appropriation from the national budget intended to cover those costs, as well as review of the legality and conformity of the appropriation shall be determined by the Council of Ministers.'

18 Decree No 672 of the Council of Ministers of 2 October 2007 concerning compensation for expenditure and losses incurred in providing public transport services and concerning the establishment of public transport service tariffs (Sabiedriskā transporta pakalpojumu sniegšanā radušos zaudējumu un izdevumu kompensēšanas un sabiedriskā transporta pakalpojuma tarifa noteikšanas kārtība, Latvijas Vēstnesis, 2007, No 175, p. 3751), of 2 October 2007, which was in force until 20 November 2009, and Decree No 1226 of the Council of Ministers of 26 October 2009 (Latvijas Vēstnesis, 2009, No 183, p. 4169, 'Decree No 2009/1226'), which replaced it from 21 November 2009, are both based on the Law on public transport services.

19 Article 2 of Decree No 2009/1226 provides that:

'… the carrier will be compensated for the following losses, associated with performance of the public transport service contract:

2.1 the part of essential costs associated with performance of the public transport service contract which exceeds the income obtained;

2.2 costs incurred through application of the tariffs laid down by the mandating authority;

2.3 loss of income due to the fact that the mandating authority applies a reduction of the transport price for certain categories of passenger.'

20 Article 3 of that decree provides that the carrier is entitled to request compensation for costs incurred in fulfilling the minimum quality requirements laid down by the mandating authority or by the legislation after the public transport services began to be provided, if compliance therewith involves additional costs.

21 Article 38 of Decree 2009/1226 requires the mandating authority to determine the extent of the losses for which the carrier is to be compensated on the basis of the report referred to in point 32.2 of the abovementioned decree and the information referred to in points 32.3 and 32.4 thereof, taking account also of whether it had or had not fixed the fares (tickets).

22 Under Article 39 of the abovementioned decree, the mandating authority is to determine the actual losses having regard to the total income obtained through performance of the public transport service contract, excluding justified costs that are attributable to the provision of public transport services. Within the meaning of the same decree, 'income' means income from the sale of tickets, including season tickets and similar income obtained through performance of the public transport service contract.

23 Article 40 of Decree No 2009/1226 provides that the mandating authority is to determine the amount of compensation which is to be paid by aggregating the volume of losses set in accordance with Article 39 thereof with the total profits obtained. The latter figure is to be determined by multiplying the income by a profit percentage, calculated by adding 2.5% to the average Euro Interbank Offered Rate (EURIBOR) for the 12 months of the reference year.

24 The national court points out that, under Article 49 of the said decree, the amount of the compensation for losses may not exceed the volume of actual losses that has been calculated, if the carrier has applied the tariffs laid down by the mandating authority (transport price).

25 According to Article 50 of the same decree, if the right to provide public transport services is awarded in accordance with the Law on public contracts, the amount of the compensation is to be determined on the basis of the difference between the price of the public transport service laid down in the contract and the income actually obtained.

26 According to Article 57 of Decree No 2009/1226:

‘… if the public transport service contract is terminated:

(1) the carrier shall repay the mandating authority the funds paid in excess if, during the provision of the public transport service, the volume of compensation for losses exceeds the real amount calculated for the compensation and the mandating authority shall use those funds to compensate for losses of other carriers;

(2) the mandating authority shall pay compensation for losses if during the provision of public transport services the amount of the compensation for losses has fallen short of the amount calculated as the real amount of compensation due.’

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

27 On 17 July 2009, the Ludzas rajona padome (Ludza District Council) published an invitation to tender for public bus services in the city and district of Ludza. The applicants in the main proceedings submitted their offer on 6 August 2009.

28 On 31 August 2009, the award was made to Ludzas autotransporta uzņēmums SIA and, consequently, on 2 September 2009, the Ludzas novada dome decided to conclude a concession contract for public transport services with that undertaking.

29 On 16 September 2009, the applicants in the main proceedings brought an action before the Administratīvā rajona tiesa (Administrative Court of First Instance) for annulment of the decision of the Ludzas novada dome of 2 September 2009 and applied for operation of the decision to be suspended. That application was granted by the court on 16 October 2009 and confirmed on 14 December 2009 by the Administratīvā apgabaltiesa (Regional Administrative Court).

30 The national court observes that the national legislation in force gives the applicants in the main proceedings the right to challenge the decision of Ludzas novada dome of 2 September 2009 before the Contract Supervision Office and that such a challenge would have prevented the mandating authority from awarding the contract until after the Office had ruled.

31 On 9 October 2009, the Ludzas rajona padome and Ludzas autotransporta uzņēmums SIA entered into a concession contract for the provision of the public transport services concerned.

32 The applicants in the main proceedings thereupon brought an action before the Administratīvā rajona tiesa for annulment of that contract. On 3 December 2009, that action was dismissed on the ground that the contract was governed by private law and that, therefore, the administrative courts did not have jurisdiction to hear the action.

33 On 11 May 2010, the Administratīva apgabaltiesa set aside the judgment at first instance, while dismissing the action for annulment as inadmissible on the ground that, since the contract had been concluded before the expiry of the time-limit for the transposition of Directive 2007/66, the applicants in the main proceedings did not have a right to bring such an action before the courts.

34 On 21 May 2010, the said applicants brought an appeal against the decision of the Administratīva apgabaltiesa before the court making the reference. They argue, inter alia, that Directive 2007/66 grants them a right to apply for annulment of the contract at issue and that that right flows from the purpose of the directive, which is to grant third parties the right to apply to have contracts concluded by State bodies or local authorities declared ineffective.

35 In those circumstances the Augstākās tiesas Senāta decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Must Article 1(3)(b) of Directive 2004/17 … be interpreted as meaning that it is necessary to treat as a public service concession a contract under which the successful tenderer is granted the right to provide public bus services, in cases where part of the consideration consists in the right to operate the public transport services but where, at the same time, the contracting authority compensates the service provider for losses arising as a result of the provision of services, and in addition the public law provisions governing the provision of the service and the contractual provisions limit the risk associated with operation of the service?

(2) If the first question is answered in the negative, has Article 2d(1)(b) of Directive 92/13 … been directly applicable in Latvia since 21 December 2009?

(3) If the second question is answered in the affirmative, must Article 2d(1)(b) of Directive 92/13 … be interpreted as being applicable to public contracts entered into before the end of the period prescribed for domestic law to be brought into conformity with Directive 2007/66 …?'

Consideration of the questions referred

The first question

36 As a preliminary point, it must be observed that, according to Article 2(2)(a) of Directive 2004/17, that directive applies to contracting entities which are 'contracting authorities' within the meaning of Article 2(1)(a) of the directive, among which are 'regional or local authorities' which 'pursue one of the activities referred to in Articles 3 to 7' of the directive.

37 According to the national court, the main proceedings are subject to Directive 2004/17 inasmuch as the contracting entity pursues an activity in the field of transport by bus within the meaning of Article 5(1) of the directive.

38 On the other hand, according to the Latvian Government, since that entity does not itself provide public transport services to the population, Directive 2004/18 is applicable to the main proceedings.

39 In that regard, it is sufficient to note that Articles 1(2)(a) and 4 of Directive 2004/18 contain definitions of 'public contracts' and 'service concession' which are substantially similar to the corresponding definitions in Article 1(2)(a) and (3)(b) of Directive 2004/17. The fact that the definitions are substantially similar means that the same considerations are applicable to an interpretation of the concepts of service contract and service concession within the respective spheres of application of those two directives (Case C-206/08 Eurawasser [2009] ECR I-8377, paragraphs 42 and 43). Thus, the interpretation of Article 1(2)(a) and (3)(b) of Directive 2004/17 is directly transposable to the corresponding provisions of Directive 2004/18 as, indeed, the Latvian Government admits.

40 The question whether an operation is to be classified as a 'service concession' or a 'public service contract' must be considered exclusively in the light of European Union law (see, inter alia, Case C-274/09 Privater Rettungsdienst und Krankentransport Stadler [2011] ECR I-0000, paragraph 23 and the case-law cited).

41 It is clear from the definitions of service contract and service concession, contained in Article 1(2)(a) and (d) and Article 1(3) of Directive 2004/17 respectively, that the difference between a service contract and a service concession lies in the consideration for the provision of services. A service contract involves consideration which is paid directly by the contracting authority to the service provider while, for a service concession, the consideration for the provision of services consists in the right to exploit the service, either alone, or together with payment (see, to that effect, Eurawasser, cited above in paragraph 39, paragraph 51).

42 In the case of a contract for the supply of services, the fact that the supplier is not remunerated directly by the contracting authority, but is entitled to collect payment from third parties, meets the requirement of consideration laid down in Article 1(3)(b) of Directive 2004/17 (see, inter alia, Eurawasser, cited above in paragraph 39, paragraph 57).

43 That is the case where, as in the main proceedings, the provider of public bus services is given the right to operate such services and is paid by the users of those services in accordance with a fixed fare scale.

44 While the method of remuneration is one of the determining factors for the classification of a service concession, it also follows from the case-law that the service concession implies that the service supplier takes the risk of operating the services in question. The absence of a transfer to the service provider of the risk connected with operating the service shows that the transaction concerned is a public service contract and not a service concession (see, inter alia, Privater Rettungsdienst und Krankentransport Stadler, cited above in paragraph 40, paragraph 26).

45 It is thus necessary to establish whether the service provider takes the risk of operating the service. While that risk may, at the outset, be very limited, it is necessary for classification as a service concession that the contracting authority transfer to the concession holder all or, at least, a significant share of the risk which it faces (see, to that effect, Privater Rettungsdienst und Krankentransport Stadler, cited above in paragraph 40, paragraph 29).

46 It is not unusual that certain sectors of activity, in particular sectors involving public service utilities, such as those at issue in the main proceedings, are subject to rules which may have the effect of limiting the financial risks entailed. First, the detailed rules of public law, to which the economic and financial operation of the service is subject, facilitate the supervision of how that service is operated, and scale down the factors which may threaten transparency and distort competition. Second, it must remain open to the contracting authorities, acting in all good faith, to ensure the supply of services by way of a concession, if they consider that to be the best method of ensuring the public service in question, even if the risk linked to such an operation is limited (Eurawasser, paragraphs 72 to 74).

47 In such circumstances, as the contracting authority has no influence on the detailed rules of public law governing the service, it is impossible for it to introduce and, therefore, to transfer risk factors which are excluded by those rules. Moreover, it would not be reasonable to expect a public authority granting a concession to create conditions which were more competitive and involved greater financial risk than those which, on account of the rules governing the sector in question, exist in that sector (Eurawasser, paragraphs 75 and 76).

48 The risk linked to such an operation must be understood as the risk of exposure to the vagaries of the market (see, to that effect, Eurawasser, paragraphs 66 and 67), which may, in particular, consist in the risk of competition from other operators, the risk that supply of the services will not match demand, the risk that those liable will be unable to pay for the services provided, the risk that the costs of operating the services will not be met by revenue or also the risk of liability for harm or damage resulting from an inadequacy of the service (see, to that effect, Privater Rettungsdienst und Krankentransport Stadler, paragraph 37).

49 By contrast, risks such as those linked to bad management or errors of judgment by the economic operator are not decisive for the purposes of classification as a public service contract or a service concession, since those risks are inherent in every contract, whether it be a public service contract or a service concession (Privater Rettungsdienst und Krankentransport Stadler, paragraph 38).

50 Although, as was stated in paragraph 45 of the present judgment, the risk of operating the service may, at the outset, be very limited by reason of the public law arrangements governing the organisation of the service, it is necessary for classification as a service concession that the contracting authority transfer to the concession holder all or, at least, a significant share of the operating risk which it faces.

51 The information provided by the national court shows that the legislation applicable in the main proceedings provides that the adjudicating authority is to reimburse the service provider for operating losses and, in addition, by reason of the rules of public law and the contractual terms governing the provision of those services, the provider does not bear ‘a significant share of the operating risk’.

52 The national court notes, in particular, that, pursuant to the terms of the contract, the mandating authority is to compensate, within the limit of the funds allocated to the State budget, for the losses related to the provision of transport services, engendered by such provision and for related costs once the operating receipts from the transport services have been deducted.

53 Furthermore, pursuant to Articles 2 and 3 of Decree No 2009/1226, the service provider is compensated for losses associated with performance of the contract as regards essential costs associated with performance of the public transport service contract which exceed the income obtained, costs incurred through application of the tariffs laid down by the mandating authority, lost revenue because the mandating authority has applied a reduction of the transport price for certain categories of passenger, and costs incurred in fulfilling the minimum quality requirements laid down after the public transport services began to be provided, if compliance therewith involves additional costs compared to the quality requirements previously laid down.

54 Moreover, Article 40 of Decree No 2009/1226 provides that the successful tenderer is to be paid an amount by way of profit determined by multiplying the income by a profit percentage, calculated by adding 2.5% to the average Euro Interbank Offered Rate (EURIBOR) for the 12 months of the reference year.

55 Having regard to those terms and national law provisions, it cannot be concluded that a significant part of the exposure to the vagaries of the market is borne by the successful tenderer. Therefore, such an operation should be regarded as a ‘service contract’ within the meaning of Article 1(2)(d) of Directive 2004/17 and not a ‘service concession’ within the meaning of Article 1(3)(b) thereof.

56 It is true that, at the hearing before the Court, the parties disagreed as to the extent of the risk actually borne by the successful tenderer. Thus, unlike the applicants in the main proceedings and the European Commission, the Latvian Government and the defendant in the main proceedings argue that various factors, such as the reduction of public resources available to cover possible losses, the lack of cover for certain kinds of expenses and losses, linked in particular to route and journey changes or uncertainty in regard to user demand, increase the risk to such an extent that a significant part thereof is in fact born by the successful tenderer, all the more so as the contract is for a period of eight years. Consequently, they state, the transaction is undoubtedly a service concession.

57 It is not for the Court to classify specifically the transaction at issue in the main proceedings. That is within the jurisdiction of the national court alone. The Court’s role is confined to providing the national court with an interpretation of European Union law which will be useful for the decision which it has to take in the dispute before it (see, inter alia, Case C-458/03 Parking Brixen [2005] ECR I-8585, paragraph 32).

58 Only the national court is in a position, on the one hand, to interpret the provisions of its national law and, on the other hand, to assess the part of the risk which is actually borne by the contractor in the light of national law and the contractual terms at issue. Nonetheless, consideration of the transaction at issue in the light of the legislative provisions and contractual terms as set out in the order for reference leads, at first sight, to the conclusion that that transaction has the characteristics of a service contract.

59 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the first question is that Directive 2004/17 must be interpreted as meaning that a contract by which a contracting party, pursuant to the rules of public law and the terms of the contract which govern the provision of the services in question, does not bear a significant share of the risk run by the contracting authority is to be regarded as a ‘service contract’ within the meaning of Article 1(2)(d) of that directive. It is for the national court to assess whether the transaction at issue in the main proceedings must be regarded as a service concession or a public service contract by taking account of all the characteristics of that transaction.

Second and third questions

60 By its questions, which it is appropriate to examine together, the national court is asking whether, if the contract at issue in the main proceedings is regarded as a ‘public service contract’ within the meaning of Directive 2004/17, Article 2d(1)(b) of Directive 92/13 which, pursuant to Article 1 thereof, applies to the contracts referred to in Directive 2004/17, is applicable to the above contract even though it was concluded before the expiry of the time-limit for the transposition of Directive 2007/66, which inserted Article 2d(1)(b) into Directive 92/13, and if the answer to that question is in the affirmative, whether that provision is directly applicable.

61 If, as the Latvian Government argues, Directive 2004/18 is applicable, which it is for the national court to ascertain, it must be pointed out that Article 1 of Directive 2007/66 inserted into Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), provisions identical to Article 2d and 2f of Directive 92/13, with the result that the interpretation of the latter provisions is directly transposable to the corresponding provisions of Directive 89/665, as amended.

62 According to Article 2d(1)(b) of Directive 92/13, Member States are to ensure that a contract is considered ineffective by a review body independent of the contracting entity or that its ineffectiveness is the result of a decision of such a review body, inter alia, where the contract has been concluded even though, pursuant to Article 2(3) of that directive, a body of first instance, which is independent of the contracting authority, is reviewing a contract award decision or if it was concluded before the expiry of the standstill period referred to in Article 2a(2) of that directive.

63 Without there being any need to consider whether, after the expiry of the time-limit for transposing Directive 2007/66, an individual can rely on Article 2d(1)(b) of Directive 92/13 before the national courts against a contracting authority such as the defendant in the main proceedings, it is sufficient to point out that that provision does not apply in any event to contracts which, as in the main proceedings, were concluded before the expiry on 20 December 2009 of the time-limit for transposition of Directive 2007/66, since such transposition did not take place before the expiry of that time-limit.

64 It is common ground that the decision to award the contract at issue was made on 2 September 2009 and that the contract was concluded on 9 October 2009.

65 The fact that, in accordance with Article 2f(1)(b) of Directive 92/13, Member States may provide that the application for review in accordance with Article 2d(1) of that directive must be made in any case before the expiry of ‘a period of at least six months with effect from the day following the date of the conclusion of the contract’ does not lead to the conclusion that contracts which, like the one in the main proceedings, were concluded in the six months preceding the expiry of the time-limit for transposition of Directive 2007/66 could come within the scope of Article 2d(1)(b).

66 In the absence of any indication in Directive 2007/66 as to the retroactive effect of the provision at issue, it would be contrary to the principle of legal certainty to consider that that provision is applicable to contracts which were concluded before the expiry of the time-limit for transposition of that directive.

67 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the second and third questions is that Article 2f(1)(b) of Directive 92/13 does not apply to public contracts concluded before the expiry of the time-limit for transposition of Directive 2007/66.

Costs

68 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Second Chamber) hereby rules:

1. Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors must be interpreted as meaning that a contract by which a contracting party, pursuant to the rules of public law and the terms of the contract which govern the provision of the services in question, does not bear a significant share of the risk run by the contracting authority is to be regarded as a ‘service contract’ within the meaning of Article 1(2)(d) of that directive. It is for the national court to assess whether the transaction at issue in the main proceedings must be regarded as a service concession or a public service contract by taking account of all the characteristics of that transaction.

2. Article 2d(1)(b) of Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007, does not apply to public contracts concluded before the expiry of the time-limit for transposition of Directive 2007/66.

VII – Conclusion

1. This request for a preliminary ruling may provide an opportunity for the Court of Justice to develop its thinking on the criteria for distinguishing between a public service contract and a service concession under European Union (EU) law and also to define the circumstances in which a directive which has not been transposed within the period prescribed should be regarded as having direct effect. It may also illustrate, once again, the need for judicial cooperation between the European Union and the Member States in applying EU law.

I – Legal context

A – EU law

2. Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (2) ('Directive 2004/18') and Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors (3) ('Directive 2004/17') recast the legislation on public procurement in force at the time, (4) seeking to set out the coordinating measures introduced by the Community legislature in a logical manner in the interests of clarity. To that effect, and in relation to the definitions of the categories and concepts used, Article 1(2) of Directive 2004/17 (5) provides as follows:

'… the following definitions shall apply:

(a) "Supply, works and service contracts" are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more of the contracting entities referred to in Article 2(2), and one or more contractors, suppliers, or service providers.

(d) "Service contracts" are contracts other than works or supply contracts having as their object the provision of services referred to in Annex XVII.'

3. Article 1(3)(b) of Directive 2004/17 provides that a 'service concession' is a contract of the same type as a service contract except for the fact that the consideration for the provision of services consists either solely in the right to exploit the service or in that right together with payment.

4. By virtue of Article 2(2)(a), Directive 2004/17 applies 'to contracting entities which … are contracting authorities or public undertakings and pursue one of the activities referred to in Articles 3 to 7'.

5. Likewise, Article 5(1) of Directive 2004/17 provides that the directive applies 'to activities relating to the provision or operation of networks providing a service to the public in the field of transport by railway, automated systems, tramway, trolley bus, bus or cable'.

6. Council Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors (6) ('Directive 92/13'), as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007, (7) aims to ensure the effective application of both Directive 2004/17 and Directive 2004/18, and, to that end, Article 2d(1)(b) thereof provides as follows:

'Member States shall ensure that a contract is considered ineffective by a review body independent of the contracting entity or that its ineffectiveness is the result of a decision of such a review body in any of the following cases:

(b) in case of an infringement of Article 1(5), Article 2(3) or Article 2a(2) of this Directive, if this infringement has deprived the tenderer applying for review of the possibility to pursue pre-contractual remedies where such an infringement is combined with an infringement of Directive 2004/17/EC, if that infringement has affected the chances of the tenderer applying for a review to obtain the contract'.

7. By virtue of Article 2f(1)(b) of Directive 92/13, as amended by Directive 2007/66:

'Member States may provide that the application for review in accordance with Article 2d(1) must be made:

(b) and in any case before the expiry of a period of at least six months with effect from the day following the date of the conclusion of the contract.'

B – National law

8. The following provisions of national law are relevant. First is the likums 'Par pašvaldībām' (Law on municipalities), (8) Article 15 of which provides that the organisation of public transport services falls within the autonomous powers of municipalities.

9. Second, under Article 1(7) of the Publiskās un privātās partnerības likums (Law on collaboration between the public and private sectors), (9) a service concession contract is a contract under which, at the request of a public partner, the private partner provides the services listed in Annex 2 to the Publisko iepirkumu likums (Law on public contracts; 'LPC') and the consideration, or an essential component of the consideration, for the provision of those services, is that it obtains the right to operate them whilst at the same time bearing the risks associated with the operation of the services or else a substantial proportion of those risks.

10. Under Article 1(8) of that law, the right to operate the services means the right to receive payment from the end-users of the services or to obtain consideration from the public partner, the amount of which depends on the demand for such services from end-users, or even to obtain both a payment from the end-users of the services and consideration from the public partner.

11. Under Article 1(9), the risk associated with operating the services means the financial risks, where the income of the private partner depends either on the demand for such services from end-users (demand risk) or else on whether the services offered to the end-users meet the requirements laid down in the concession contract (availability risk) or even on both the demand risk and the availability risk.

12. Also relevant in the context of these proceedings is the second paragraph of Article 8 of the Sabiedriskā transporta pakalpojumu likums (Law on public transport services; 'LPTS'), (10) which provides that, unless otherwise provided in the Law, the mandating authority will organise public transport services in accordance with the LPC or with the Law governing the award of concessions.

13. The first paragraph of Article 10 of the LPTS provides that the carrier will be compensated for losses and expenses associated with the provision of public transport services, in accordance with Articles 11 and 12 of that law; furthermore, the third paragraph of that article provides that payment for the services will also constitute losses within the meaning of the Law if the mandating authority has organised the public transport service in accordance with the LPC.

14. Under the first paragraph of Article 11 of the LPTS, the carrier is to be compensated for losses associated with the provision of public transport services:

(1^1) out of the funds provided for that purpose in the State budget, in the case of routes which belong to a regional transport network providing local services;

(1[2]) out of local budgets, in the case of routes which belong to a regional transport network providing local services, in relation to the part of the public transport services covered by the concession which exceeds the limit of the funds provided for in the State budget in order to secure the provision of those services …'.

15. Under the first paragraph of Article 12 of the LPTS, if the State lays down minimum quality requirements for public transport services, which a profit-making carrier would not have to comply with, and where compliance gives rise to additional costs, the carrier is entitled to receive compensation from the State for all such costs. Furthermore, the second paragraph of that article provides that compensation will be provided, by means of the payment referred to in the first paragraph, to carriers who provide public transport services in the context of a public transport service concession if the minimum quality requirements were laid down after the commencement of the provision of public transport services.

16. Finally, Article 2 of Ministru Kabineta noteikum No 1226, Sabiedriskā transporta pakalpojumu sniegšanā radušos zaudējumu un izdevumu kompensēšanas un sabiedriskā transporta pakalpojuma tarifa noteikšanas kārtība (Decree of the Council of Ministers No 1226 concerning compensation for expenditure and losses incurred in providing public transport services and concerning the establishment of public transport service tariffs; 'Decree No 1226'), (11) issued on the basis of the LPTS, provides that the carrier will be compensated for the following losses, associated with performance of the public transport service contract:

(1) essential costs associated with performance of the public transport service contract which exceeded the income obtained;

(2) costs incurred through application of the tariffs laid down by the mandating authority;

(3) costs arising in the event that the mandating authority applies a reduction of the transport price for certain categories of passenger.

17. Article 3 of Decree No 1226 provides that the carrier is entitled to seek compensation for costs incurred in fulfilling the minimum quality requirements laid down by the mandating authority or by legislation after commencement of the provision of public transport services, if compliance therewith involves costs in excess of those linked to the quality requirements previously laid down.

18. Under Article 39 of Decree No 1226, the mandating authority will determine the actual losses having regard to the total income obtained through performance of the public transport service contract, excluding justified costs that are attributable to the provision of public transport services. Within the meaning of that provision, 'income' means income from the sale of tickets, including season tickets, and similar income obtained through performance of the public transport service contract.

19. The mandating authority will determine the amount of compensation which is to be paid by aggregating the volume of losses set in accordance with Article 39 of Decree No 1226 with the total profits obtained. The latter figure will be determined by multiplying the income by a profit percentage, calculated by adding 2.5% to the average Euro Interbank Offered Rate (Euribor) for the 12 months of the reference year (Article 40).

20. The amount of the compensation for losses must not exceed the volume of actual losses that has been calculated, if the carrier has applied the tariffs laid down by the mandating authority (transport price) (Article 49).

21. If the right to provide public transport services is awarded in accordance with the LPC, the amount of the compensation will be determined on the basis of the difference between the price of the public transport service laid down in the contract and the income actually obtained (Article 50).

22. Under Article 57 of Decree No 1226, if the public transport service contract is terminated:

(1) the carrier shall repay the mandating authority the funds overpaid if, during the provision of the public transport service, the volume of compensation for losses exceeds the actual amount calculated for the compensation and the mandating authority shall use those funds to compensate the losses of other carriers;

(2) the mandating authority shall pay compensation for losses if during the provision of public transport services the amount of compensation for losses has fallen short of the amount calculated as the actual amount of compensation due.

II – Facts

23. The order for reference in relation to this request for a preliminary ruling shows that on 17 June 2009 the Ludzas rajona padome (Ludza District Council) published an invitation to tender for public bus services in the city of Ludza and on regional routes in the district of Ludza. The appellants in the main proceedings submitted a tender on 6 August 2009.

24. By a decision of 31 August 2009, the award was made to the undertaking Ludzas autotransporta uzņēmums SIA ('Ludzas ATU SIA') and on 2 September 2009 the Ludzas novada dome (Ludza Municipal Council) (12) resolved to conclude a concession contract with this undertaking.

25. The applicants contested this decision before the courts on 16 September 2009 and also applied for the implementation of the decision to be suspended. The interim suspension was granted by a decision of the Administratīvā rajona tiesa (Administrative Court of First Instance) of 16 October 2009, which was confirmed, on appeal, by the Administratīvā apgabaltiesa (Regional Administrative Court) in a decision of 14 December 2009.

26. Notwithstanding this, by 9 October 2009 the Ludza District Council and Ludzas ATU SIA had in fact entered into a concession contract and the applicants therefore applied to the Administrative Court of First Instance on 26 November 2009 seeking a declaration that the contract was void.

27. By a decision of 3 December 2009, the Administrative Court of First Instance dismissed the claim for a declaration that the contract was void on the basis that, being governed by civil law, it did not fall within the jurisdiction of the administrative courts.

28. This decision was reversed by the Regional Administrative Court in a decision of 11 May 2010, which nevertheless dismissed the applicants' appeal on the substantive issue, maintaining that they 'had no subjective right to seek a decision annulling the contract', as stated in the order for reference of this application for a preliminary ruling.

29. The applicants lodged an appeal before the Latvian Supreme Court, arguing that Directive 2007/66 grants them a subjective right to seek annulment of the contract. They concede that at the time the contract was concluded the period for transposing the directive had not expired, but contend that this could not deprive them of a right which derives from the very purpose of the directive.

III – The questions referred for a preliminary ruling

30. It is against this background that the Latvian Supreme Court has referred the following three questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'(1) Must Article 1(3)(b) of Directive 2004/17/EC be interpreted as meaning that it is necessary to treat as a public service concession a contract under which the successful tenderer is granted the right to provide public bus services, in cases where part of the consideration consists in the right to operate the public transport services but where, at the same time, the contracting authority compensates the service provider for losses arising as a result of the provision of services, and in addition the public law provisions governing the provision of the service and the contractual provisions limit the risk associated with operation of the service?

(2) If the first question is answered in the negative, has Article 2d(b) of Directive 92/13/EEC, as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC, been directly applicable in Latvia since 21 December 2009?

(3) If the second question is answered in the affirmative, must Article 2d(b) of Directive 92/13/EEC be interpreted as being applicable to public contracts entered into before the end of the period prescribed for domestic law to be brought into conformity with Directive 2007/66/EC?'

31. It is worth mentioning at this point that, according to the order for reference, the referring court's primary doubt concerns the classification of the contract for the provision of public transport services as a 'service concession', within the meaning of Article 1(3)(b) of Directive 2004/17, where the following circumstances pertain:

(1) part of the consideration consists in the right to operate the public transport service (the service provider receives the consideration via payments from third persons, the transport users);

(2) the contracting authority, in accordance with the legislation of the Member State, compensates the service provider when it incurs losses as a result of providing services;

(3) the risk of operating the public transport services is limited by the legislation governing the way those services are provided and by the terms of the contract.

32. Regarding the second question, the Latvian Supreme Court raises the issue of whether, taking into account the fact that during the period between 21 December 2009 and 14 June 2010 Latvia had not fulfilled its obligations under Directive 2007/66, Article 2d(1)(b) of Directive 92/13 should be interpreted as meaning that it also applies to the contracts referred to in Directive 2004/17 which were entered into before the expiry of the period for bringing domestic law into conformity with Directive 2007/66. In this respect, it notes that, under Article 2f(1)(b) of Directive 92/13, a person is entitled to challenge the contract within a period of six months following the date of its signature. Therefore, in the case at issue in the main proceedings, taking into account the date on which the contract was concluded (9 October 2009), the applicants were also vested with that right on 21 December 2009 (once the period for transposing the directive into national law had expired).

33. In short, the Latvian Supreme Court considers that there is doubt as to the interpretation of Article 1(3)(b) of Directive 2004/17 and of Article 2d(1)(b) of Directive 92/13, and that this plays a critical role in the decision to be reached regarding the applicants' right to apply to the courts for annulment of the contract.

IV – Procedure before the Court of Justice

34. The order for reference was lodged at the Court on 9 July 2010.

35. Submissions have been made by Norma-A and Dekom, by the Austrian and Latvian Governments and by the European Commission.

36. At the hearing on 18 May 2011, the legal representatives of Norma-A and Dekom, the Latgales plānošanas reģions (Latgale planning region), (13) the Latvian Government and the Commission presented their oral submissions.

V – Submissions

37. Regarding the classification of the contract at issue in the main proceedings, Norma-A and Dekom, the Austrian Government and the Commission maintain, essentially, that it is a service contract within the meaning of Directive 2004/17, whilst the Latvian Government argues that it is a concession. While the former consider that the level of risk assumed by the service provider is not sufficient to justify the conclusion that the characteristics of a concession are present, the Latvian Government and the Latgales plānošanas reģions conclude that the financial risk at stake is considerable and, in any event, sufficient to enable it to be regarded as a service concession.

38. In relation to the second and third questions, the Commission, the Austrian and Latvian Governments and the Latgales plānošanas reģions maintain that Directive 2007/66 is not applicable to contracts concluded prior to expiry of the period prescribed for transposing it, with the Austrian Government arguing that it does not have the requisite unconditionality and precision to have direct effect, although this point is, in its view, entirely hypothetical since the proceedings in the present case were already under way before the transposition period expired and there is nothing to suggest that the directive contemplates a retroactive effect which would require the contracts entered into prior to such expiry to be declared void. The Latvian Government also maintains that any other solution would run counter to the principle of legal certainty. The Commission, in its joint reply to the two final questions, considers that the conditions traditionally required for the directive in question to have direct effect are met, although it is inapplicable to contracts entered into prior to the expiry of the transposition period.

39. Finally, Norma-A and Dekom argue that under Article 2f(1)(b) of Directive 2007/66, a party is entitled to seek the annulment of a contract in the courts for a period of six months from the date of the conclusion of the contract. Since in the present case that period had not expired on the date when the directive should have been transposed, Article 2d would be applicable even if the contract had been concluded earlier. In their view, in the same way that Member States must refrain from adopting measures which might compromise the result laid down in the directive, they are also required to interpret national law in accordance with the directive. In a situation such as that in the present case, the subjective right to a review of this nature by an independent body stems from the result sought by the directive.

VI – Evaluation

A – The first question: the service contract/concession dilemma

40. The classification of the legal transaction at issue in the main proceedings is a matter for the referring court alone and it can look to the Court only to give an interpretation of EU law which may be of use in deciding the case before it (Case C-458/03 Parking Brixen [2005] ECR I-8585, paragraph 32, amongst others).

41. For these purposes, the question of whether we are dealing with a ‘service concession’ or a ‘public service contract’ must be considered in the light of EU law alone (see Case C-382/05 Commission v Italy [2007] ECR I-6657, paragraph 31, and Case C-196/08 Acoset [2009] ECR I-9913, paragraph 38).

42. It follows from subparagraph (a) in conjunction with subparagraph (d) of Article 1(2) of Directive 2004/17 that service contracts are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more of the contracting entities referred to in Article 2(2), and one or more contractors, suppliers, or service providers, having as their object the provision of services referred to in Annex XVII to that directive, which include, as far as is relevant here, land transport services.

43. Under Article 1(3)(b) of that directive, a ‘service concession’ is a contract of the same type as a service contract except for the fact that the consideration for the provision of services consists ‘either solely in the right to exploit the service or in that right together with payment’.

44. The difference between the two legal transactions is essentially in the consideration for the provision of services in each case (Case C-274/09 Privater Rettungsdienst und Krankentransport Stadler [2011] ECR I-1335, paragraph 24).

45. The directive does not specify of what the consideration for a service provided pursuant to a contract must be. In so far as it states that where such consideration consists of the right to exploit the service the transaction in question is a service concession, the Court of Justice has concluded that, broadly speaking, the fundamental difference between the two legal transactions lies in whether the remuneration for the service provided comes directly from the contracting entity or is borne by third parties (Eurawasser, paragraph 51). Ultimately, however, this difference comes down to the question of assumption of the risk associated with the uncertain outcome of a legal transaction which was entered into by each of the parties in their own interests.

46. The fact that the remuneration for the service comes from third parties has been the decisive feature for classifying a legal transaction as a service concession in that it presupposes that the risk associated with the operation of the service is assumed by the service provider. As Advocate General

Mazák pointed out in his Opinion in the Privater Rettungsdienst und Krankentransport Stadler case, (14) even remuneration of an indirect nature has sufficed, in itself, for the Court of Justice to hold that the legal transaction under consideration was a service concession. (15)

47. Even so, in my view, the really decisive factor is the assumption of risk. This may be inferred from the fact that the direct payment by the contracting entity of the remuneration for the service does not necessarily mean in every case that the transaction in question is a service contract. This is because, as Advocate General Mazák noted in his previously cited Opinion (at points 28 and 29), the Court of Justice has established 'subsidiary criteria' which, in cases of direct remuneration, can lead to the conclusion that the service provider has assumed the risk of operating the service, and it is this assumption which ultimately causes the legal transaction to be classified as a concession, in spite of the direct remuneration. (16)

48. In short, as risk is an inherent part of the economic operation of a service (Eurawasser, paragraph 66), the Court of Justice considers that where the service provider assumes it, the contract with the contracting entity can be taken to satisfy the definition of a service concession.

49. According to the case-law, the risk of the economic operation of the service must be understood as the risk of exposure to the vagaries of the market (Eurawasser, paragraphs 66 and 67, and Privater Rettungsdienst und Krankentransport Stadler, paragraph 37), which 'may consist in the risk of competition from other operators, the risk that supply of the services will not match demand, the risk that those liable will be unable to pay for the services provided, the risk that the costs of operating the services will not fully be met by revenue or for example also the risk of liability for harm or damage resulting from an inadequacy of the service' (Privater Rettungsdienst und Krankentransport Stadler, paragraph 37, citing Contse and Others, paragraph 22, and Hans & Christophorus Oymanns, paragraph 74).

50. On the other hand, risks linked to bad management or errors of judgement by the economic operator are not, however, decisive in classifying a contract as a public service contract or a service concession, since those are risks which are inherent in any contract (Privater Rettungsdienst und Krankentransport Stadler, paragraph 38). Risks relating to variables which may or may not materialise, depending exclusively on the economic operator in question are therefore irrelevant for these purposes.

51. For the contract to be regarded as a concession, it is not necessary that the risk assumed by the service provider be 'considerable in absolute terms', only that it be at least a 'significant share' of the risk which the contracting entity would anyway be assuming if it were to provide the service in question itself. (17)

52. Effectively, the Court of Justice has stated that in circumstances where the detailed rules of public law governing the economic and financial operation of the service reduce the financial risk to a minimum, it should remain open to contracting entities to ensure the provision of the service by means of a concession if they consider this to be the best contractual form for ensuring the public service. It would therefore be ridiculous to expect conditions to be created which involved greater financial risk than those existing in the sector by virtue of the applicable legislation for the sole purpose of having sufficient volume of transferable risk to enable the public contract to be classified as a service concession (Eurawasser, paragraphs 72 to 76). On the contrary, the decisive factor is that there should be a significant transfer of the risk inherent in the operation of the service, whatever that risk may be in absolute terms, that is, when considered alone.

53. That said, the first question referred by Latvian Supreme Court relates to a contract 'where part of the consideration consists in the right to operate the public transport services', while, at the same time, the contracting authority 'compensates the service provider for losses arising as a result of the provision of services' and, furthermore, 'the public law provisions governing the provision of the service and the contractual provisions limit the risk associated with operation of the service'.

54. As stated by the referring court, the service provider receives the consideration for the services by means of payment by third parties, the transport users. From that point of view, therefore, it would be a classic case of a service concession under Article 1(2)(a) and (d) of Directive 2004/17.

55. However, the risk inherent in the economic operation of the service is limited by the domestic rules governing the provision of the service, in this case the LPTS; in other words, it is not typical of the risk associated with the provision of a service in an entirely free market. Furthermore, even within the scope of the reduced risk resulting from the detailed public law rules governing the economic and financial operation of the service, the contracting authority compensates the service provider for certain losses.

56. As I have already mentioned, the relevant risk is that resulting from the detailed rules governing the provision of the service (see points 51 and 52). It is important that this specific risk is assumed to a significant extent by the service provider, since, as pointed out in footnote 17, the level of risk assumed is ultimately a more decisive criterion than the type of consideration for the service when it comes to classifying the legal transaction as a service contract or service concession.

57. The referring court has already pointed out that, in this case, the operating risk of the service is not borne by the service provider. In fact, it states that the latter does not even assume a substantial part of it (paragraph 13 of the order for reference).

58. Effectively, the regulatory provisions and the terms of the contract, taken together, indicate that the service provider can be sure of receiving compensation for the following losses associated with the provision of the service: (a) costs which are essential for the performance of the contract which exceed the income obtained; (b) costs incurred through application of the tariffs laid down by the mandating authority; (c) costs arising in the event that the mandating authority applies a reduction of the price of transport for certain categories of passenger; (d) costs incurred in fulfilling the minimum quality requirements laid down after the commencement of the provision of the service, if compliance therewith involves costs in excess of those linked to the quality requirements previously laid down.

59. On the other hand, the figure for compensation for these losses must be aggregated with the figure for profits, which is determined by multiplying income by a profit percentage, calculated by adding 2.5% to the average Euro Interbank Offered Rate for the 12 months of the reference year.

60. In other words, there is provision for compensation for both losses associated with providing the service by way of operating expenses and loss of profits.

61. This information, which was provided by the Latvian Supreme Court, is, in principle, sufficient to allow the referring court to conclude that the legal transaction at issue in the main proceedings is a service contract. In my view, it is clear from the legislative provisions and contractual terms which define the context and content of the legal transaction under consideration that there is enough evidence to conclude that it can quite correctly be regarded as a true service contract.

62. Nevertheless, both the Latvian Government and the Latgales plānošanas reģions put forward a number of reasons why the risk should not be regarded as having been assumed by the contracting authority and hence why it should not be regarded as a contract: essentially these are the high level of demand risk, the reduction in State budget allocations intended to cover any potential losses, the expenditure incurred by way of unrecoverable investments, the extension or reduction of routes and journeys.

63. It should be reiterated at this point that it is not for the Court of Justice to evaluate the various evidence submitted at the hearing by the Latvian Government and the Latgales plānošanas reģions, and still less to look into the debate regarding the magnitude and scope of the presumably considerable differences between the business forecasts discussed at the time of the award and those actually implemented as a result of a less favourable or benign economic situation.

64. Nevertheless, as I have already noted at point 39, since ultimately the referring court has the jurisdiction to classify the transaction, I am bound to make it absolutely clear that it is the Latvian Supreme Court which must determine to what extent the considerations put forward by the Latvian Government and the Latgales plānošanas reģions can invalidate the natural conclusion to which a reading of the applicable legislation and the contract terms would, nevertheless, lead. This is all the more so because the Latvian Supreme Court, in its first question states, first, that the contracting authority compensates the service provider for losses arising as a result of the provision of services and, then, that the applicable domestic legislation and the contractual provisions 'limit' the operating risk. The task of deciding whether this holds true to the extent that the relevant risk for the purposes of classifying the legal transaction in question is assumed by one or other of the parties can only fall to the referring court, as it alone is in a position to assess fully and completely the circumstances and variables of the case.

65. In conclusion, although it is for the national court to classify the legal transaction under discussion and the role of the Court of Justice is merely to provide the national court with an interpretation which may be of use in this task, the relevant legislative and contractual provisions lead me to conclude that this transaction bears the characteristics of a service contract. Notwithstanding this, in the light of what has been said about the referring court's competence, it is that court which must determine, having examined the considerations put forward by the parties to the main proceedings, whether or not this conclusion is the most applicable or appropriate under EU law.

B – The second question: direct effect of Directive 92/13, as amended by Directive 2007/66

66. Working on the assumption that this is a service contract, Directive 92/13 would be applicable by virtue of its substantive scope. The next question is therefore whether Article 2d(1)(b) of Directive 92/13, as amended by Directive 2007/66, had direct effect in Latvia from 20 December 2009, when the period for transposing the latter directive expired, and, if so, whether by virtue of Article 2f(1)(b) of Directive 92/13, that provision was also applicable to contracts entered into before the expiry of the transposition period.

67. These two questions correspond to the second and third questions referred by the Latvian Supreme Court. In my view, and contrary to the approach taken by the Austrian Government, the third question can only be answered once the second question has been decided, since in order to determine whether Article 2f(1)(b) of Directive 92/13 permits Article 2d(1)(b) to apply retrospectively, it is first necessary to determine whether the latter was applicable at all from 21 December 2009. Only once it has been determined whether Directive 92/13 had direct effect from that date can we start to analyse whether the provision which supposedly gives Article 2d(1)(b) of the directive some retroactive effect also had direct effect.

68. It is common ground between the parties that the Republic of Latvia did not 'bring into force the laws, regulations and administrative provisions necessary to comply with … Directive [2007/66] by 20 December 2009', as required by Article 3(1) of Directive 2007/66. This measure was incorporated into domestic law only with effect from 15 June 2010, and the first question to be decided is therefore whether, during the period from 21 December 2009 to 14 June 2010, Article 2d(1)(b) of Directive 92/13, requiring Member States to ensure that in cases where the suspensory effect of applications for review of decisions awarding a service contract has not been respected, 'a contract is considered ineffective by a review body independent of the contracting entity or that its ineffectiveness is the result of a decision of such a review body' had direct effect in Latvia despite not having been transposed.

69. Expiry of the period prescribed for transposing the directive, or failure to transpose it correctly, is only one of the conditions required by the case-law for an untransposed directive to be considered to have potential direct effect (see, inter alia, Case 102/79 Commission v Belgium [1980] ECR 1473, paragraph 12). There is also, first, the requirement that it confer subjective rights which individuals are able to assert before the courts (Case 8/81 Becker [1982] ECR 3301, paragraph 25) and, second, the requirement that its provisions be unconditional and sufficiently precise (to this effect, see the recent Case C-115/09 Bund für Umwelt und Naturschutz Deutschland, Landesverband Nordrhein-Westfalen [2011] ECR I-3673, paragraph 54). (18)

70. It is clear that in the case which gives rise to the question referred in these proceedings the first of these requirements is satisfied, and it is equally clear that the second is also met, since the requirement imposed on the Member States by Article 2d(1)(b) of Directive 92/13 must translate into the right of individuals to guaranteed effectiveness of any review which they might seek against decisions awarding public service contracts. As it is a requirement imposed on Member States for the purpose of improving 'the effectiveness of review procedures concerning the award of contracts', in the words of recital 34 in the preamble to Directive 2007/66, it is clear that it constitutes a means of safeguarding the right of citizens to an effective legal remedy in the field of public procurement.

71. The close connection between Article 2d(1)(b) of Directive 92/13 and the right to a legal remedy invites the question, already raised at the hearing, of whether, given that it concerns the effectiveness of a right vis-à-vis the Member States which is based on primary EU law, access to the review sought by the appellants in the main proceedings should really have been granted in any event. This would therefore be quite independent of the directive itself and, of course, of any domestic legislation transposing it. I think that this must, in principle, be correct, although the fact that the right to a review is typically in the nature of a right to receive a service of some kind means that, for it to be effectively exercised, legislative intervention is inevitable. This leads me to examine the extent to which such intervention has occurred in this case. (19)

72. Regarding what is effectively the third requirement for a directive which has not been transposed within the time-limit to have direct effect, namely that the rules contained in Article 2d(1)(b) of Directive 92/13 should be unconditional and adequate, I must agree with the Commission when it notes that the provision in question is substantially the same as the provisions of Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665/EEC, (20) which were held in Case C-15/04 Koppensteiner [2005] ECR I-4855, paragraph 38, to be 'unconditional and sufficiently clear to create rights for individuals'.

73. Article 2(1)(b) of Directive 89/665 effectively requires Member States to ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures relating to the award of public supply and public works contracts include provision for the powers to either set aside or ensure the setting-aside of decisions taken unlawfully. By virtue of Article 1(1) of that directive, decisions must be capable of being reviewed effectively and promptly in accordance with the conditions set out in the directive.

74. If these provisions of Directive 89/665 have been held to be 'unconditional and sufficiently clear', those contained in Article 2d(1)(b) of Directive 92/13 can be no less so, subject to the exception which I will go on to mention, since they lay down with perfect clarity the conditions under which an independent review body must consider the contract ineffective, namely, in so far as is relevant here: (a) first, that there is shown to have been an infringement of Article 1(5), Article 2(3) or Article 2a(2) of the directive, which require certain standstill periods to be observed during the course of the procurement procedures; (b) second, that the infringement has deprived the tenderer applying for review of the possibility to pursue pre-contractual remedies; (c) third, that the infringement of these provisions is combined with an infringement of Directive 2004/18; (d) finally, that the infringement has affected the chances of the tenderer applying for a review to obtain the contract.

75. In fact, there is one aspect in respect of which Directive 92/13 can, however, be accused of the lack of clarity indicated by the Austrian Government, since it does not state which 'review body independent of the contracting authority' must take the decision regarding the effectiveness of the contract. This aspect would therefore require the legislative intervention at the minimum level necessary to which I referred at point 70 when I indicated that the right of review, being in the nature of a right to receive a service of some kind, makes the involvement of domestic law unavoidable.

76. This does not, in my opinion, mean that Article 2d(1)(b) of Directive 92/13 cannot be regarded as having direct effect in Latvia from 21 December 2009. The reason for this is that, as the Austrian Government itself observes, the requirement to interpret national law in accordance with EU law, together with the duty effectively to protect the rights of citizens, should lead the referring court, in line with the solution provided in Case C-54/96 Dorsch Consult [1997] ECR I-4961, to investigate whether, under the applicable domestic jurisdictional rules, it is possible to identify a court which has jurisdiction to hear the reviews to which Directive 92/13 refers. This might be because under national law that court already has jurisdiction to oversee public procurement procedures, or due to the operation of certain general systems for attributing jurisdiction. (21)

C – The third question: the potential retroactive effect of Directive 92/13

77. Having reached the conclusion that Article 2d(1)(b) of Directive 92/13, as amended by Directive 2007/66, may be applicable in Latvia from the date of expiry of the transposition period, it remains to be established whether the period of six months following the date of the conclusion of the contract which Article 2f(1)(b) of Directive 92/13 lays down as the time-limit for seeking the review referred to in that provision is applicable in a case such that in the main proceedings. In other words, whether the possibility of review under Directive 92/13 extends to contracts entered into during the six months prior to the date on which the directive took direct effect. If so, it would apply to the present case, since the disputed contract was entered into on 9 October 2009.

78. My initial view is that, in the interests of improving the effectiveness of the directive, it can perhaps be argued that it should apply to all contracts entered into six months prior to the final date for transposition. Amongst other reasons, this is because it would avoid the risk of contracts being hurriedly signed in order to avoid the directive applying and would also avoid an extended period of time during which the legal situation is not conducive to the effective exercise by citizens of their right to a remedy. This approach would also be in the spirit of the rule laid down by the Court of Justice in Case C-129/96 Inter-Environnement Wallonie [1997] ECR I-7411, cited by Norma-A and Dekom, to the effect that, during the period until expiry of the time-limit for incorporation into domestic law, Member States are required to refrain from compromising the result sought by a directive.

79. Notwithstanding this, and aside from the fact it cannot be ignored that any retrospective application of the law is prejudicial to legal certainty, the structure and content of the directive make such a retroactive effect impossible, over and above the absence of any explicit reference in the directive to retroactivity.

80. Only contracts concluded within the legal framework laid down in Directive 92/13 are susceptible to review thereunder, since the grounds for contesting them must relate to the requirements imposed by the directive in respect of procurement procedures. Consequently, no contract entered into prior to the entry into force of the directive could have complied with the procedural requirements contained in it, and, in particular, with the standstill periods whose infringement is sanctioned in Article 2d(1)(b).

81. It would therefore be illogical retrospectively to allow a challenge which could only be brought on the grounds of failure to comply with requirements which did not exist at the time the contract subject to review was entered into.

VII – Conclusion

82. In the light of the above, I propose that the Court reply to the questions referred by the Latvian Supreme Court as follows:

(1) Article 1(3)(b) of Directive 2004/17/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 coordinating the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and postal services sectors must be interpreted as meaning that, for the purposes of that directive, it is, in principle, necessary to treat as a public service contract a contract under which the successful tenderer obtains, as part of the consideration, the right to operate public transport services and where the contracting authority compensates the service provider for losses arising as a result of the provision of services and the public law provisions governing the provision of the service and the contractual provisions limit the risk associated with operation of the service. It is, in any event, for the referring court to determine the extent to which the circumstances of the case require a different classification in the light of European Union law.

(2) Article 2d(1)(b) of Directive 92/13/EEC of 25 February 1992 coordinating the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of Community rules on the procurement procedures of entities operating in the water, energy, transport and telecommunications sectors, as amended by Directive 2007/66/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 11 December 2007, may have had direct effect in Latvia since 21 December 2009, depending on whether or not there is a court which has jurisdiction to hear the reviews to which that directive refers, this being a matter to be determined by the referring court.

(3) Article 2d(1)(b) of Directive 92/13 must be interpreted as being inapplicable to public contracts entered into before the end of the period prescribed for domestic law to be brought into conformity with Directive 2007/66.

These criteria include the delegation of liability for harm suffered on account of a failure of the service at issue and the existence of a certain economic freedom to determine the conditions under which the service is exploited.

17 – Incidentally, in my view, this is where the fact that, by virtue of Article 1(3)(b) of Directive 2004/17, the consideration for a service concession can consist either solely in the right to exploit the service or in that right 'together with payment' becomes relevant. The existence of two combined elements in the consideration for a service which, in legal terms, can only be a contract or a concession, means that the specific weight to be given to each of them must be assessed. For this, in my view, the only possible criterion is the level of risk ultimately assumed by the service provider, and to determine that it is necessary to look at the extent to which the payment which accompanies the right to exploit implies a significant reduction in the risk inherent in the business activity.

19 – Although there is no need to address here the question of whether or not there is a right to a remedy, which, as part of the heritage of the European Union as a community based on law, would be fundamental to the whole Community legal order, it must nevertheless be recognised that Directive 92/13 in its original form already protected the right to challenge the decisions of contracting authorities and Directive 2007/66 therefore improved the effectiveness of already existing review procedures concerning the award of public contracts. Bringing about this improvement by introducing the sanction of declaring contracts ineffective in certain circumstances, thus going further than simply recognising the right to compensation, is another matter. It should be borne in mind that reparation for the infringement of a right in the form of compensation is a legitimate, albeit 'secondary', form of legal remedy. In this regard, see Erbguth, W., 'Primär- und Sekundärrechtsschutz im öffentlichen Recht', Veröffentlichungen der Vereinigung der Deutschen Staatsrechtslehrer, Vol. 61, Berlin, 2002, p. 221 et seq.

21 – In this respect it should be pointed out that, according to the submissions of Norma-A and Dekom (pp. 6 and 7 of the French version), there has existed in Latvia since 1 February 2004 an administrative court to which Article 184 of the Administrative Procedure Code gives jurisdiction to hear actions relating to the validity of public law contracts.

having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to proceed to judgment without an Opinion,

gives the following

Judgment

1 The present reference for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of the relevant provisions of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

2 The reference has been made in the context of a dispute between Strong Segurança SA (‘Strong Segurança’) and Município de Sintra (Sintra Municipal Council, Portugal) concerning the award of a contract for surveillance and security services for the installations of that municipality.

Legal context

The relevant provisions of Directive 2004/18

3 Recitals 18 and 19 in the preamble to Directive 2004/18 state:

‘(18) The field of services is best delineated, for the purpose of applying the procedural rules of this Directive and for monitoring purposes, by subdividing it into categories corresponding to particular headings of a common classification and by bringing them together in two Annexes, II A and II B, according to the regime to which they are subject. As regards services in Annex II B, the relevant provisions of this Directive should be without prejudice to the application of Community rules specific to the services in question.

(19) As regards public service contracts, full application of this Directive should be limited, for a transitional period, to contracts where its provisions will permit the full potential for increased cross-frontier trade to be realised. Contracts for other services need to be monitored during this transitional period before a decision is taken on the full application of this Directive. In this respect, the mechanism for such monitoring needs to be defined. This mechanism should, at the same time, enable interested parties to have access to the relevant information.’

4 Under the terms of the first subparagraph of Article (1)(2)(d):

‘“Public service contracts” are public contracts other than public works or supply contracts having as their object the provision of services referred to in Annex II.’

5 Article 2, entitled ‘Principles of awarding contracts’, provides:

‘Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way.’

6 Article 4, entitled ‘Economic operators’, provides in paragraph 2:

‘Groups of economic operators may submit tenders or put themselves forward as candidates. In order to submit a tender or a request to participate, these groups may not be required by the contracting authorities to assume a specific legal form; however, the group selected may be required to do so when it has been awarded the contract, to the extent that this change is necessary for the satisfactory performance of the contract.’

7 Chapter III of Title II, entitled ‘Arrangements for public service contracts’, contains Articles 20 to 22.

8 Article 20, entitled ‘Service contracts listed in Annex II A’, provides:

‘Contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex II A shall be awarded in accordance with Articles 23 to 55.’

9 Article 21, entitled ‘Service contracts listed in Annex II B’, is worded as follows:

‘Contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex II B shall be subject solely to Article 23 and Article 35(4).’

10 Article 23, which features in Chapter IV entitled ‘Specific rules governing specifications and contract documents’, relates to the technical specifications that must be set out in contract documentation in order to afford equal access for tenderers and not to create unjustified obstacles to the opening-up of public procurement to competition, while Article 35(4), which features in Chapter VI entitled ‘Rules on advertising and transparency’, refers to the contracting authorities’ obligations to give notice of the results of the contract award procedure.

11 The subject of Annex II B, Category 23, is ‘Investigation and security services, …’.

12 Article 47, entitled ‘Economic and financial standing’, provides in paragraph 2:

‘An economic operator may, where appropriate and for a particular contract, rely on the capacities of other entities, regardless of the legal nature of the links which it has with them. It must in that case prove to the contracting authority that it will have at its disposal the resources necessary, for example, by producing an undertaking by those entities to that effect.’

13 Article 48, entitled ‘Technical and/or professional ability’, includes a paragraph 3, the content of which is substantially identical to that of Article 47(2).

14 Under Article 80(1), the Member States were required to bring into force the laws, regulations and administrative provisions necessary to comply with Directive 2004/18 no later than 31 January 2006 and forthwith to inform the European Commission thereof.

National legislation

15 Directive 2004/18 was transposed into Portuguese law by Decree-Law No 18/2008 of 29 January 2008 approving the Public Procurement Code (Código dos Contratos Públicos), which entered into force six months after its publication on that date.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

16 By a notice published in the Official Journal of the European Union of 15 July 2008, the Sintra Municipal Council issued an international open invitation to tender for the procurement of surveillance and security services for the municipal installations for 2009 and 2010. That invitation to tender was subject to the terms of the specifications and the contract documents, and the contract was to be awarded on the basis of the criterion of the generally most economically advantageous tender.

17 Strong Segurança participated in this invitation to tender and submitted the documents necessary for that purpose. Furthermore, it annexed to its tender a comfort letter from the company Trivalor (SGPS) SA (‘Trivalor’) in which that company made the following declaration:

‘By virtue of the relationship of total direct control (100%) between Trivalor and [Strong Segurança], Trivalor is responsible for the latter’s obligations, in accordance with the Commercial Companies Code (Código das Sociedades Comerciais).

To that effect, we declare that we undertake:

– to guarantee that [Strong Segurança] has the necessary technical and financial means for the proper performance of the contractual obligations;

– to indemnify Sintra Municipal Council in full for any loss or damage suffered as a result of any impediment that may occur to prevent the proper performance of the contract, should it be awarded.’

18 The selection board initially favoured awarding the contract to Strong Segurança, as its tender had obtained the highest weighting. However, following the complaint made by a competitor, the selection board, basing itself on the contention that Strong Segurança was not authorised to report on the economic and financial standing of a third company such as Trivalor, revised its assessment and proposed that the contract be awarded to the competitor which had lodged the complaint. Sintra Municipal Council, at its meeting of 11 February 2009, approved this proposal and decided to award to that competitor the services for 2009 and 2010 covered by the invitation to tender.

19 The appeal by Strong Segurança against that decision was dismissed by the Tribunal Administrativo e Fiscal de Sintra (Administrative and Tax Court of Sintra), the ruling of which was upheld by a judgment of the Tribunal Central Administrativo Sul (Administrative Court of Appeal, South) of 10 September 2009. Strong Segurança thereupon brought an appeal against that judgment before the Supremo Tribunal Administrativo (Supreme Administrative Court).

20 The Supremo Tribunal Administrativo states that the central question which arises in this case is whether or not Article 47(2) of Directive 2004/18 is also applicable to the services referred to in Annex II B to that directive, such as those to which the procedure in the main proceedings relates. It points out, first, that that procedure had begun before the entry into force of Decree-Law No 18/2008 of 29 January 2008 and, second, that the period for transposition of the directive had already expired when the invitation to tender was issued.

21 Thus, the first issue that arises in this regard is that of the direct effect of Article 47(2) of Directive 2004/18. The national court takes the view that the first part of that provision is, in accordance with the case-law of the Court, sufficiently clear, precise and unconditional and, as such, leaves the Member States no option with regard to compliance. However, as to the second part of that provision, the national court expresses doubts, in so far as that part appears to leave the Member States with some discretionary power as to what is to be proved and as to what evidence may be required for the economic operator to demonstrate its economic and financial capacity to the contracting authority when it relies on the capacities of other entities.

22 The second issue raised in this case is that of the interpretation of Article 47(2) of Directive 2004/18, in relation to which the case-law of the Court provides no answer. The national court notes that a strictly literal interpretation of that provision would lead to the conclusion that it applies only to the service contracts referred to in Annex II A. It points out, however, that that would exclude, for service contracts referred to in Annex II B, the application of essential provisions of Directive 2004/18 such as, for example, those specifying the criteria for qualitative selection of candidates (Articles 45 to 52) and the contract award criteria (Articles 53 to 55).

23 Since it had doubts as to whether such an interpretation is indeed correct, and aware that it was ruling on the matter at final instance, the Supremo Tribunal Administrativo decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

‘1. Is Article 47 of Directive 2004/18 … directly applicable in the domestic legal order as from 31 January 2006, in the sense that it confers on individuals a right on which they can rely in proceedings against organs of the Portuguese authorities?

2. If so, is that principle applicable, despite the provision contained in Article 21 of that directive, to contracts which have as their object services referred to in Annex II B [to Directive 2004/18]?’

The questions referred to the Court

The second question

24 By this question, which it is appropriate to consider first, the national court is asking whether Article 47(2) of Directive 2004/18 is also applicable to contracts which have as their object services referred to in Annex II B to that directive, notwithstanding the fact that such applicability is not apparent from the wording of the other relevant provisions of that directive, in particular Article 21 thereof.

25 In order to answer that question, it should be observed, at the outset, that the distinction between service contracts according to their classification into two separate categories was not introduced for the first time by Directive 2004/18. It already existed under Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 relating to the coordination of procedures for the award of public service contracts (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1), as codified and recast by Directive 2004/18.

26 It should be observed, next, that the distinction that must be made between service contracts depending on whether they are referred to in Annex II A or in Annex II B to Directive 2004/18 was already unambiguously referred to in the recitals to that directive.

27 Thus, recital 18 in the preamble to Directive 2004/18 states that, for the purpose of applying its rules, it is appropriate to subdivide the services into categories and to bring them together in two Annexes, II A and II B, according to the regime to which they are subject.

28 For its part, recital 19 in the preamble to Directive 2004/188 reflects the legislature's intention to limit the full application of that directive, for a transitional period, to service contracts where its provisions will permit the full potential for increased cross-frontier trade to be realised, those contracts being for the services referred to in Annex II A, and to monitor the other contracts, that is, those for services referred to in Annex II B, during that transitional period and before a decision is taken on the full application of Directive 2004/18 to those contracts.

29 That subdivision of the service contracts, referred to in the abovementioned recitals, is set out in greater detail in the provisions of Directive 2004/18.

30 Thus, Article 20 provides, for contracts having as their object the provision of services referred to in Annex II A, the practically full application of the provisions of that directive, whereas Article 21 refers to Articles 23 and 35(4) only and thus imposes, with regard to the contracts for services referred to in Annex II B, 'solely' the obligation of the contracting authorities concerning the technical specifications of such contracts, as well as their obligation to inform the Commission of the results of their procurement procedures.

31 Contrary to what Strong Segurança maintains, there is no indication from the wording of the provisions of Directive 2004/18, or from its spirit and general scheme, that the subdivision of the services into two categories is based on a distinction between the 'substantive' and 'procedural' provisions of that directive. Furthermore, as the Commission rightly points out, such a distinction would risk creating legal uncertainty with regard to the scope of the various provisions of that directive.

32 The division of arrangements for public service contracts into two separate categories according to the classification of services, brought about by the relevant rules of European Union law, is corroborated by the case-law of the Court.

33 Thus, the Court has held that the classification of the services in Annexes I A and I B to Directive 92/50 (which correspond, respectively, to Annexes II A and II B to Directive 2004/18) is in accordance with the system laid down by that directive, which envisages the application of the provisions of that directive on two levels (see, to that effect, Case C-411/00 Felix Swoboda [2002] ECR I-10567, paragraph 55).

34 The Court has also held, in the context of Directive 92/50, that, where the contracts concern services which fall under Annex I B, the contracting authorities are bound only by the obligations to define the technical specifications by reference to national standards implementing European standards, which must be given in the general or contractual documents relating to each contract, and to send a notice of the results of the award procedure to the OPOCE (Office for Official Publications of the European Communities) (see Case C-507/03 Commission v Ireland [2007] ECR I-9777, paragraph 24).

35 The Court has stated that the European Union legislature based itself on the assumption that contracts for the services referred to in Annex I B to Directive 92/50 are, in principle, in the light of their specific nature, not of sufficient cross-border interest to justify their award being subject to the conclusion of a tendering procedure intended to enable undertakings from other Member States to examine the contract notice and submit a tender (see, to that effect, Commission v Ireland, paragraph 25). However, the Court has held that even such contracts, where they have a certain cross-border interest, are subject to the general principles of transparency and equal treatment resulting from Articles 49 TFEU and 56 TFEU (see, to that effect, Commission v Ireland, paragraphs 26 and 29 to 31).

36 In light of the foregoing, it must be concluded that the system established by Directive 2004/18 does not directly create, for the Member States, the obligation to apply Article 47(2) of that directive also to the public service contracts referred to in Annex II B to that directive.

37 With regard to the Commission's contention that the general principle of 'effective competition' specific to Directive 2004/18 could lead to such an obligation, it must be noted that, whereas effective competition constitutes the essential objective of that directive, that objective, as important as it is, cannot lead to an interpretation that is contrary to the clear terms of the directive, which do not mention Article 47(2) thereof as being among the provisions which the contracting authorities are obliged to apply when awarding contracts concerning the services referred to in Annex II B to that directive.

38 However, in accordance with the abovementioned case-law, it remains to be considered whether, where such a contract has a certain cross-border interest – this being a matter which it is for the national court to determine –, particularly having regard to the fact that, in the main proceedings, an invitation to tender had been published in the Official Journal of the European Union, an obligation such as that set out in Article 47(2) of Directive 2004/18 may result from the application of the general principles of transparency and equal treatment.

39 With regard, firstly, to the principle of transparency, it must be stated that this principle is not infringed if an obligation such as that laid down by Article 47(2) of Directive 2004/18 is not imposed on the contracting authority in respect of a contract which has as its object services referred to in Annex II B to that directive. Indeed, the fact that an economic operator cannot rely on the economic and financial capacities of other entities has no connection with the transparency of the contract award procedure. It should be observed, moreover, that the application of Articles 23 and 35(4) of Directive 2004/18 during the contract award procedures relating to such 'non-priority' services is also intended to ensure the degree of transparency that corresponds to the specific nature of those contracts.

40 Nor, it should be noted, can the principle of equal treatment lead to the imposition of an obligation, such as that laid down by Article 47(2) of Directive 2004/18, at the time of the award of the service contracts listed in Annex II B, notwithstanding the distinction drawn by that directive.

41 The absence of such an obligation cannot give rise to any discrimination, direct or indirect, on the basis of nationality or place of establishment.

42 It should be noted that such a broad approach to the applicability of the principle of equal treatment could lead to the application, to the service contracts referred to in Annex II B to Directive 2004/18, of other essential provisions of that directive, for example, as the national court observes, provisions which establish the qualitative criteria for the selection of candidates (Articles 45 to 52) as well as the contract award criteria (Articles 53 to 55). That would involve the risk of rendering entirely ineffective the distinction drawn by Directive 2004/18 between the services of Annexes II A and II B, as well as the application of that directive on two levels, under the terms used by the case-law of the Court.

43 Furthermore, according to the case-law of the Court, the contracts relating to the services listed in Annex II B to Directive 2004/18 are specific in nature (Commission v Ireland, paragraph 25). Thus, at least some of those services have particular characteristics that would justify the contracting authority taking into account, on a personalised and specific basis, the individual bid presented by the candidates. This is the case, for example, for 'legal services', 'personnel placement and supply services', 'education and vocational education services' or 'investigation and security services'.

44 Consequently, the general principles of transparency and equal treatment do not impose on the contracting authorities an obligation, such as that laid down by Article 47(2) of Directive 2004/18, for contracts concerning the services set out in Annex II B to that directive.

45 However, the scope of Directive 2004/18 is determined, as is clear from recital 19 in its preamble, by a progressive approach taken by the European Union legislature which, admittedly, during the transition period mentioned in that recital does not require the application of Article 47(2) when awarding contracts such as those at issue in the main proceedings, but which does not prohibit a Member State and, possibly, a contracting authority, from requiring the application of the abovementioned provision to such contracts in, respectively, its legislation and the documents relating to the contract.

46 In the light of the foregoing, the answer to the second question is that Directive 2004/18 does not create the obligation, for Member States, to apply Article 47(2) of that directive also to contracts which have as their object services referred to in Annex II B thereto. However, that directive does not preclude Member States and, possibly, contracting authorities from providing for such application in, respectively, their legislation and the documents relating to the contract.

The first question

47 In the light of the answer given to the second question, there is no need to answer the first question.

Costs

48 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Third Chamber) hereby rules:

Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts does not create the obligation, for Member States, to apply Article 47(2) of that directive also to contracts which have as their object services referred to in Annex II B thereto. However, that directive does not preclude Member States and, possibly, contracting authorities from providing for such application in, respectively, their legislation and the documents relating to the contract.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Third Chamber)

30 September 2010 (*)

(Directive 89/665/EEC – Public procurement – Review procedures – Actions for damages – Unlawful award – National rule on liability based on a presumption that the contracting authority is at fault)

In Case C-314/09,

REFERENCE for a preliminary ruling under Article 234 EC from the Oberster Gerichtshof (Austria), made by decision of 2 July 2009, received at the Court on 7 August 2009, in the proceedings

Stadt Graz

v

Strabag AG,

Teerag-Asdag AG,

Bauunternehmung Granit GesmbH,

intervening party:

Land Steiermark,

THE COURT (Third Chamber),

composed of K. Lenaerts (Rapporteur), President of the Chamber, E. Juhász, G. Arestis, T. von Danwitz and D. Šváby, Judges,

Advocate General: V. Trstenjak,

Registrar: K. Malacek, Administrator,

having regard to the written procedure and further to the hearing on 24 June 2010,

after considering the observations submitted on behalf of:

– Stadt Graz, by K. Kocher, Rechtsanwalt, – Strabag AG, Teerag-Asdag AG and Bauunternehmung Granit GesmbH, by W. Mecenovic, Rechtsanwalt, – Land Steiermark, by A.R. Lerchbaumer, Rechtsanwalt,

– the Austrian Government, by M. Fruhmann, acting as Agent,

– the European Commission, by B. Schima and C. Zadra, acting as Agents, having decided, after hearing the Advocate General, to proceed to judgment without an Opinion,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This reference for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Articles 1(1) and 2(1)(c) and (7) of Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts (OJ 1989 L 395, p. 33), as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992 (OJ 1992 L 209, p. 1) ('Directive 89/665').

2 The reference has been made in the course of proceedings between Stadt Graz (City of Graz, Austria) and Strabag AG, Teerag-Asdag AG and Bauunternehmung Granit GesmbH (collectively, 'Strabag and Others'), following the unlawful award of a public procurement contract by Stadt Graz.

Legal context

European Union ('EU') law

3 The third and sixth recitals in the preamble to Directive 89/665 state:

'… the opening-up of public procurement to Community competition necessitates a substantial increase in the guarantees of transparency and non-discrimination; … for it to have tangible effects, effective and rapid remedies must be available in the case of infringements of Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law;

… it is necessary to ensure that adequate procedures exist in all the Member States to permit the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully and compensation of persons harmed by an infringement'.

4 Article 1(1) of that directive provides:

'The Member States shall take the measures necessary to ensure that, as regards contract award procedures falling within the scope of Directives 71/305/EEC, 77/62/EEC, and 92/50/EEC, decisions taken by the contracting authorities may be reviewed effectively and, in particular, as rapidly as possible in accordance with the conditions set out in the following Articles, and, in particular, Article 2(7) on the grounds that such decisions have infringed Community law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law.'

5 Article 2(1) and (5) to (7) of Directive 89/665 provides:

'1. The Member States shall ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers to:

(a) take, at the earliest opportunity and by way of interlocutory procedures, interim measures with the aim of correcting the alleged infringement or preventing further damage to the interests concerned, including measures to suspend or to ensure the suspension of the procedure for the award of a public contract or the implementation of any decision taken by the contracting authority;

(b) either set aside or ensure the setting aside of decisions taken unlawfully, including the removal of discriminatory technical, economic or financial specifications in the invitation to tender, the contract documents or in any other document relating to the contract award procedure;

(c) award damages to persons harmed by an infringement.

5. The Member States may provide that where damages are claimed on the grounds that a decision was taken unlawfully, the contested decision must first be set aside by a body having the necessary powers.

6. The effects of the exercise of the powers referred to in paragraph 1 on a contract concluded subsequent to its award shall be determined by national law.

Furthermore, except where a decision must be set aside prior to the award of damages, a Member State may provide that, after the conclusion of a contract following its award, the powers of the body responsible for the review procedures shall be limited to awarding damages to any person harmed by an infringement.

7. The Member States shall ensure that decisions taken by bodies responsible for review procedures can be effectively enforced.'

National law

6 EU law on public procurement was transposed, in Land Steiermark (Styria, Austria), by the Law of 1998 on public procurement (Steiermärkisches Vergabegesetz 1998, 'the StVergG').

7 Paragraph 115(1) of the StVergG provides:

'In the event of the culpable infringement of this law or its implementing regulations by organs of a contracting authority, an unsuccessful candidate or tenderer may claim a right to be refunded the costs incurred in preparing its application or tender and other costs borne as a result of its participation in the tender procedure against the contracting authority, which is answerable for the conduct of the organs of the contracting entity. A claim for damages, including compensation for loss of profit, should be made before the ordinary courts.'

8 Paragraph 1298 of the Austrian Civil Code (Allgemeines Bürgerliches Gesetzbuch, 'the ABGB') provides:

'The party that claims to have been prevented from fulfilling its contractual or statutory obligations without being at fault has the burden of proving this. Where, as a result of a contractual agreement, it is liable only for gross negligence, it must also prove that that condition is not fulfilled.'

9 Paragraph 1299 of the ABGB provides:

'The party which publicly performs a function, art, profession or occupation or the party which voluntarily assumes a task requiring artistic knowledge or an unusual level of dedication thereby demonstrates that he has the necessary dedication and the requisite unusual knowledge; he must therefore be answerable where such dedication or knowledge is lacking. However, where the party which assigned the task was aware of his inexperience or could have been so aware by taking normal care, the assigning party is liable for the latter's shortcomings.'

The factual background to the dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

10 In 1998, Stadt Graz announced an EU-wide invitation to tender by open procedure for the manufacture and supply of bituminous hot mix asphalt, in accordance with the StVergG. The notice of invitation to tender, published in the Official Journal of the European Communities and in the Grazer Zeitung, named 'Graz, Austria' as the place of performance and specified, under a heading entitled 'Brief description (type of performance, general features, purpose of the building or construction)', the supply of bituminous hot mix asphalt for 1999. It also specified, under the heading 'period for performance', 'start: 1 March 1999; end: 20 December 1999'.

11 Fourteen tenders were submitted. The best bidder was Held & Frank Bau GmbH ('HFB'), a construction undertaking. According to the order for reference, if that undertaking had been excluded, the joint-tender submitted by Strabag and Others would have been successful.

12 HFB had enclosed with its tender a letter in which it stated, 'by way of supplement', that its new asphalt mixing plant, which was to be constructed in the coming weeks in the municipality of Großwilfersdorf, would be operational from 17 May 1999. Strabag and Others were unaware of that letter.

13 On 5 May 1999, Strabag and Others brought review proceedings before the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Steiermark (the procurement review body of Land Steiermark) in which they stated that HFB did not possess a hot mix asphalt plant in Land Steiermark, which made it technically impossible for it to perform the contract at issue. They claimed that HFB's tender should therefore be excluded.

14 At the same time, Strabag and Others submitted an application for interim measures, which was granted by the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Steiermark by Order of 10 May 1999 prohibiting Stadt Graz from awarding the contract pending the decision on the substance.

15 By decision of 10 June 1999, the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Steiermark dismissed the action brought by Strabag and Others in its entirety, including the applications for review proceedings and for the exclusion of HFB from the contract. It stated that HFB was authorised to manufacture asphalt and that the requirement that the hot mix plant exist at the time of the opening of the tenders would be disproportionate to the subject-matter of the contract and contrary to commercial practice.

16 On 14 June 1999, Stadt Graz awarded the contract to HFB.

17 By decision of 9 October 2002, following an action brought by Strabag and Others, the Verwaltungsgerichtshof annulled the decision of the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Steiermark on the ground that HFB's tender did not conform to the invitation to tender because, although the performance period ran from 1 March to 20 December 1999, HFB was unable to make use of its new asphalt mixing plant until 17 May 1999.

18 The Unabhängiger Verwaltungssenat für die Steiermark (Independent Administrative Tribunal of Land Steiermark) which, in 2002, took over the powers of the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Steiermark, held, by a decision of 23 April 2003, that, as a result of an infringement of the StVergG, the award of the contract by Stadt Graz had not been lawful.

19 Strabag and Others have brought an action against Stadt Graz before the ordinary courts for damages in the amount of EUR 300 000. In support of their action, they claim that HFB's tender should have been excluded on the ground of an irreparable defect and that their tender should consequently have been accepted. Stadt Graz erred by failing to hold that HFB's tender was incompatible with the terms of the invitation to tender. According to Strabag and Others, the decision of the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Steiermark cannot exonerate Stadt Graz, which acted at its own risk.

20 Stadt Graz claims, for its part, that it was bound by the decision of the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Steiermark and that, if that decision is unlawful, such unlawfulness is attributable to Land Steiermark, which is responsible for the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Steiermark. Its own organs, by contrast, were not at fault.

21 The court at first instance held, by an interlocutory decision, that the action for damages brought by Strabag and Others was well founded, concluding that Stadt Graz had erred by not carrying out a review of the tenders and by awarding the contract to HFB, despite the clear defect in the latter's tender, during the period allowed for bringing an appeal against the decision of the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Steiermark.

22 That decision was upheld on appeal. The appeal court stated, however, that its decision was amenable to an ordinary appeal on a point of law, given the lack of case-law from the Oberster Gerichtshof concerning the contracting authority's liability for fault where, as in the present case, at the date of the award of the contract to the best bidder, the contracting authority's position is upheld by a decision of the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Steiermark.

23 The appeal court held that, although the ordinary courts are bound by the decision of the Unabhängiger Verwaltungssenat für die Steiermark of 23 April 2003 finding the award unlawful and a causal link had been established between the unlawful behaviour of Stadt Graz and the damage suffered by Strabag and Others, it was still necessary to examine whether Stadt Graz was at fault concerning its decision to award the contract, on 14 June 1999, to HFB without taking into consideration the fact, which was not referred to in the decision of the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Steiermark of 10 June 1999, that the letter accompanying HFB's tender indicated that it was unable to comply with the performance periods of the contract at issue.

24 Stadt Graz lodged before the Oberster Gerichtshof a review on a point of law against the judgment given on appeal.

25 First, the Oberster Gerichtshof has doubts as to the conformity of Paragraph 115(1) of the StVergG with Directive 89/665. Referring to the judgments in Case C-275/03 Commission v Portugal [2004] and Case C-70/06 Commission v Portugal [2008] ECR I-1, it is uncertain whether all national legislation which, in any way, makes the tenderer's right to damages conditional on a finding that the contracting authority is at fault must be held to be incompatible with that directive, or only national legislation which imposes on the tenderer the burden of proving that fault.

26 The Oberster Gerichtshof points out, in that regard, that Paragraph 1298 of the ABGB reverses the burden of proof, with the effect that the contracting authority as a body is presumed to be at fault. Furthermore, the contracting authority is not entitled to rely on a lack of individual abilities, since its liability is equated with that of an expert, as provided for under Paragraph 1299 of the ABGB. Nevertheless, if Stadt Graz was indeed bound, actually and extensively, by the procedurally final decision of the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Steiermark, it would be able to discharge the burden of proof to the required legal standard.

27 Secondly, on the assumption that Directive 89/665 does not preclude national legislation such as that at issue in the main proceedings, the referring court, which – like the Verwaltungsgerichtshof and the appeal court in the present case – disputes the view that the contracting authority is bound by a decision such as that given by the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Steiermark on 10 June 1999, wonders, however, whether the assumption that the contracting authority is not bound by such a decision and could have – or even should have – awarded the contract to another tenderer is not inconsistent with the objective, stated in Article 2(7) of that directive, of ensuring that decisions taken by bodies responsible for review procedures are effectively enforced.

28 Thirdly, on the assumption that that second question is answered in the affirmative, the referring court states that Strabag and Others complain, as does the appeal court, that Stadt Graz awarded the contract to HFB without taking into account the fact, which was not mentioned by the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Steiermark in its decision of 10 June 1999, that, according to information provided by HFB itself, HFB was unable to perform that contract within the period fixed by the invitation to tender. In those circumstances, the referring court is uncertain, in the light of Article 2(7) of Directive 89/665, whether, even if the contracting authority was bound by the decision taken by a body such as the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Steiermark, it could have – or even should have – determined whether that decision was correct and/or whether it was based on an exhaustive assessment.

29 In those circumstances, the Oberster Gerichtshof decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court for a preliminary ruling:

'1. Do Articles 1(1) and 2(1)(c) of … [Directive 89/665] … or other provisions of that directive preclude a national rule under which claims for damages for the contracting authority's infringement of Community procurement law are subject to the requirement of fault, including where that rule is applied in accordance with a presumption that fault lies with the contracting authority as a body and its reliance on a lack of individual abilities, hence on a lack of personal fault, is excluded?

2. If Question 1 is answered in the negative:

Is Article 2(7) of … [Directive 89/665] … to be interpreted as meaning that, for the purposes of the obligation thereunder to ensure the effective enforcement of decisions taken in review procedures, the decision of a procurement review body binds all parties to the procedure, thus also including the contracting authority?

3. If Question 2 is answered in the affirmative:

Is it permissible under Article 2(7) of … [Directive 89/665] … for the contracting authority to disregard a final decision of a procurement review body, or is it even obliged to disregard it and, if so, under what conditions?'

The questions referred

30 By Question 1, the referring court asks, in essence, whether Directive 89/665 must be interpreted as precluding national legislation which makes the right to damages for an infringement of public procurement law by a contracting authority conditional on that infringement being culpable, where the application of that legislation rests on a presumption that the contracting authority is at fault and on the fact that the latter cannot rely on a lack of individual abilities, hence on the defence that it cannot be held accountable for the alleged infringement.

31 In that regard, it should first of all be noted that Article 1(1) of Directive 89/665 requires the Member States to take the measures necessary to ensure the existence of procedures which are effective, and, in particular, as rapid as possible, for the review of decisions of contracting authorities which have 'infringed' EU law in the field of public procurement or national rules implementing that law. The third recital in the preamble to that directive notes, for its part, the need for the existence of effective and rapid remedies in the case of 'infringements' of those laws.

32 With regard, in particular, to the award of damages by way of legal remedy, Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665 provides that the Member States are to ensure that the measures taken concerning the review procedures specified in Article 1 include provision for the powers to award such damages to persons harmed by an infringement.

33 However, Directive 89/665 lays down only the minimum conditions to be satisfied by the review procedures established in domestic law to ensure compliance with the requirements of EU law concerning public procurement (see, inter alia, Case C-327/00 Santex [2003] ECR I-1877, paragraph 47, and Case C-315/01 GAT [2003] ECR I-6351, paragraph 45). If there is no specific provision governing the matter, it is therefore for the domestic law of each Member State to determine the measures necessary to ensure that the review procedures effectively award damages to persons harmed by an infringement of the law on public contracts (see, by analogy, GAT, paragraph 46).

34 Although, therefore, the implementation of Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665 in principle comes under the procedural autonomy of the Member States, limited by the principles of equivalence and effectiveness, it is necessary to examine whether that provision, interpreted in the light of the general context and aim of the judicial remedy of damages, precludes a national provision such as that at issue in the main proceedings from making the award of damages conditional, in the circumstances set out in paragraph 30 of this judgment, on a finding that the contracting authority's infringement of the law on public contracts is culpable.

35 In that regard, it should first be noted that the wording of Article 1(1), Article 2(1), (5) and (6), and the sixth recital in the preamble to Directive 89/665 in no way indicates that the infringement of the public procurement legislation liable to give rise to a right to damages in favour of the person harmed should have specific features, such as being connected to fault – proved or presumed – on the part of the contracting authority, or not being covered by any ground for exemption from liability.

36 That assessment is supported by the general context and aim of the judicial remedy of damages, as provided for in Directive 89/665.

37 According to settled case-law, while the Member States are required to provide legal remedies enabling the annulment of a decision of a contracting authority which infringes the law relating to public contracts, they are entitled in the light of the objective of rapidity pursued by Directive 89/665 to couple that type of review with reasonable limitation periods for bringing proceedings, so as to prevent the candidates and tenderers from being able, at any moment, to invoke infringements of that legislation, thus obliging the contracting authority to restart the entire procedure in order to correct such infringements (see, to that effect, inter alia, Case C-470/99 Universale-Bau and Others [2002] ECR I-11617, paragraphs 74 to 78; Santex, paragraphs 51 and 52; Case C-241/06 Lämmerzahl [2007] ECR I-8415, paragraphs 50 and 51; and Case C-406/08 Uniplex (UK) [2010] ECR I-0000, paragraph 38).

38 Furthermore, the second subparagraph of Article 2(6) of Directive 89/665 reserves to the Member States the right to limit the powers of the body responsible for the review procedures, after the conclusion of a contract following its award, to the award of damages.

39 Against that background, the remedy of damages provided for in Article 2(1)(c) of Directive 89/665 can constitute, where appropriate, a procedural alternative which is compatible with the principle of effectiveness underlying the objective pursued by that directive of ensuring effective review procedures (see, to that effect, inter alia, Uniplex (UK), paragraph 40) only where the possibility of damages being awarded in the event of infringement of the public procurement rules is no more dependent than the other legal remedies provided for in Article 2(1) of Directive 89/665 on a finding that the contracting authority is at fault.

40 As the European Commission states, it makes little difference in that regard that, by contrast with the national legislation referred to in Commission v Portugal, the legislation at issue in the main proceedings does not impose on the person harmed the burden of proving that the contracting authority is at fault, but requires the latter to rebut the presumption that it is at fault, while limiting the grounds on which it can rely for that purpose.

41 The reason is that that legislation, too, creates the risk that the tenderer who has been harmed by an unlawful decision of a contracting authority is nevertheless deprived of the right to damages in respect of the damage caused by that decision, where the contracting authority is able to rebut the presumption that it is at fault. However, as emerges from the present order for reference and as was confirmed at the hearing, such a possibility is not excluded in the present case, given that Stadt Graz is able to rely on the fact that the legal error it is alleged to have made is excusable, on account of the intervention of the decision of the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Steiermark of 10 June 1999 which dismissed the action brought by Strabag and Others.

42 At the very least, that tenderer runs the risk, under that legislation, of only belatedly being able to obtain damages, in view of the possible duration of civil proceedings seeking a finding that the alleged infringement is culpable.

43 However, in both cases, the situation would be contrary to the aim of Directive 89/665, set out in Article 1(1) thereof and in the third recital in the preamble thereto, which is to guarantee judicial remedies which are effective and as rapid as possible against decisions taken by contracting authorities in infringement of the law on public contracts.

44 It should also be noted that, even allowing for the possibility that, in the present case, Stadt Graz might have taken the view in June 1999 that it was required, because of the objective of efficiency relating to procedures for the award of public contracts, to take immediate steps to comply with the decision of the Vergabekontrollsenat des Landes Steiermark of 10 June 1999 without awaiting the expiry of the period for bringing an appeal against that decision, the fact remains – as the Commission noted at the hearing – that a declaration that an application for damages, brought by the unsuccessful tenderer following the annulment of that decision by an administrative court, is well founded cannot – contrary to the wording, context and objective of the provisions of Directive 89/665 which establish the right to such damages – depend, for its part, on a finding that the contracting authority involved is at fault.

45 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the reply to Question 1 is that Directive 89/665 must be interpreted as precluding national legislation which makes the right to damages for an infringement of public procurement law by a contracting authority conditional on that infringement being culpable, including where the application of that legislation rests on a presumption that the contracting authority is at fault and on the fact that the latter cannot rely on a lack of individual abilities, hence on the defence that it cannot be held accountable for the alleged infringement.

Questions 2 and 3

46 In the light of the answer to Question 1, there is no need to answer the other two questions referred.

Costs

47 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Third Chamber) hereby rules:

Council Directive 89/665/EEC of 21 December 1989 on the coordination of the laws, regulations and administrative provisions relating to the application of review procedures to the award of public supply and public works contracts, as amended by Council Directive 92/50/EEC of 18 June 1992, must be interpreted as precluding national legislation which makes the right to damages for an infringement of public procurement law by a contracting authority conditional on that infringement being culpable, including where the application of that legislation rests on a presumption that the contracting authority is at fault and on the fact that the latter cannot rely on a lack of individual abilities, hence on the defence that it cannot be held accountable for the alleged infringement.

Judgment

1 This reference for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Article 1(2)(a) and (d) and Article 1(4) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114).

2 The reference has been made in proceedings between Privater Rettungsdienst und Krankentransport Stadler (‘Stadler’) and the Zweckverband für Rettungsdienst und Feuerwehralarmierung Passau (Municipal Association for the Rescue Service and Fire Alarm, Passau; ‘Passau municipal association’) regarding the award of service contracts in the field of rescue services. The parties are in dispute, in particular, concerning the classification of those contracts as ‘public service contracts’ or ‘service concessions’.

Legal context

European Union legislation

3 Article 1 of Directive 2004/18 provides:

2. (a) “Public contracts” are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services within the meaning of this Directive.

(d) “Public service contracts” are public contracts other than public works or supply contracts having as their object the provision of services referred to in Annex II.

4. “Service concession” is a contract of the same type as a public service contract except for the fact that the consideration for the provision of services consists either solely in the right to exploit the service or in this right together with payment.

…’

National legislation

4 The Bavarian law on rescue services (Bayerisches Rettungsdienstgesetz; ‘the Bavarian law’) entered into force on 1 January 2009. The relevant provisions of that law for the purposes of the present case are as follows.

‘Article 1 Subject-matter and aim

This Law governs emergency rescue, transport of patients accompanied by a doctor, transport of the sick, mountain and cave rescue and water rescue (rescue service). The area-wide supply of rescue services is a public task and shall be ensured by a public rescue service …

Article 4 Bodies entrusted with the task

(1) Districts and municipalities not forming part of a district shall have the task of ensuring provision of the public rescue service in rescue service areas in accordance with this Law …

(2) The highest-level rescue service authority shall, after consulting the municipal umbrella organisations involved, determine by regulation the rescue service areas in such a way that the rescue service can be run in an effective and economic manner.

(3) The districts and the municipalities not forming part of a district that are within the same rescue service area shall perform their tasks under this Law in conjunction with a municipal association for the rescue service and fire alarm.

Article 13 Award of emergency rescue, of transport of patients accompanied by a doctor and of transport of the sick

(1) The municipal association for the rescue service and fire alarm shall entrust the carrying out on land of emergency rescue, of transport of patients accompanied by a doctor and of transport of the sick to

1. the Bayerisches Rotes Kreuz (Bavarian Red Cross)

2. the Arbeiter-Samariter-Bund (Workers' Samaritan Federation)

3. the Malteser-Hilfsdienst (Maltese Aid Service),

4. the Johanniter-Unfall-Hilfe (St. John's Accident Assistance) or

5. comparable aid organisations.

(2) In so far as the aid organisations are not prepared or in a position to take on the task, the municipal association for the rescue service and fire alarm shall entrust the carrying out of rescue services on land to third parties or shall carry them out itself or through its members.

(3) The municipal association for the rescue service and fire alarm shall make a decision in its discretion, after due assessment of the circumstances, as to the selection of the operator and as to the scope of the award. The selection decision shall be made transparently and in accordance with objective criteria. The municipal association for the rescue service and fire alarm shall publicise the forthcoming selection decision in an appropriate manner, so that interested service providers can apply.

(4) The legal relationship between the municipal association for the rescue service and fire alarm and the person entrusted with running the rescue service shall be governed by a public law contract.

Article 21 Requirement for authorisation

(1) Any person who engages in emergency rescue, transport of patients accompanied by a doctor or transport of the sick requires authorisation.

Article 24 Conditions for authorisation

(2) Authorisation for emergency rescue, the transport of patients accompanied by a doctor or transport of the sick in the public rescue service shall be granted if … a public law contract pursuant to Article 13(4) … is submitted …

(4) Authorisation for transport of the sick outside the public rescue service shall be refused if it is to be anticipated that the public interest in an efficient rescue service … will be compromised by exercise of the authorisation …

Article 32 Charging and basis of usage fees

Usage fees shall be charged for the provision of rescue services, including the involvement of doctors. The usage fees shall be based on the costs that can be estimated in accordance with economic principles applicable to undertakings and are consistent with proper provision of services, economical and cost-efficient management and efficient organisation …

Article 34 Usage fees of operators for emergency rescue, the transport of patients accompanied by a doctor and transport of the sick

(2) The social security institutions shall agree the usage fees to be paid by them for emergency rescue, the transport of patients accompanied by a doctor and transport of the sick in a uniform manner with the persons running the rescue service or their Land federations ...

(3) The usage fee agreement shall be concluded annually in advance.

(4) The costs of emergency rescue, of the transport of patients accompanied by a doctor and of transport of the sick shall be allocated in accordance with uniform standards to the users. The usage fees agreed with the social security institutions shall also be charged by the operators to all other persons and bodies which call upon the services of the public rescue service.

(5) The usage fees shall in each case be based on the estimated allowable costs under the second sentence of Article 32 of providing the services in the service areas of emergency rescue, transport of patients accompanied by a doctor and transport of the sick and on the estimated operation numbers in the operational period. The costs of providing the services shall also include in particular the costs of the involvement of doctors in the rescue service, … and the costs in respect of the activity of the Central Settlement Office for the Rescue Service in Bavaria in accordance with paragraph 8. The social security institutions shall agree in each case separately with the individual operators, with the operators of the integrated head offices and with the Central Settlement Office for the Rescue Service in Bavaria their estimated costs in the fee period. The costs can be agreed as a budget.

(6) If a usage fee agreement under paragraph 2 or an agreement under paragraph 5 does not materialise by 30 November in the financial year preceding the fee period, arbitration proceedings before the fee arbitration board … shall be held regarding the amount of the estimated costs and of the usage fees … Usage fees shall not be adjusted retroactively.

(7) The estimated costs agreed with the social security institutions or determined with binding force shall be met from the fees received for emergency rescue, for transport of patients accompanied by a doctor and in transporting the sick (revenue settlement). After a fee period has ended, every operator, every operator of an integrated head office and the Central Settlement Office for the Rescue Service in Bavaria shall prove the costs actually incurred in a final statement of account and compare them with those in the costs agreement (rendering of accounts). If a difference arises between the actual costs and the estimated costs recognised by the social security institutions for the costs agreement, the result of the rendering of accounts shall be dealt with at the next possible fee negotiations; this carrying forward is precluded if the costs of the operator … or the Central Settlement Office … have been agreed as a budget.

(8) In implementing paragraphs 2 to 7 and Article 35, the services of a Central Settlement Office for the Rescue Service in Bavaria shall be called upon, which shall in particular:

1. participate as an adviser in relation to agreeing the usage fees pursuant to paragraph 2 and in relation to the agreements under paragraph 5;

2. on the basis of the estimated costs of the parties involved and of the number of public rescue service operations to be anticipated, calculate the necessary usage fees and propose them for agreement to the parties involved; this shall also apply to the necessary adjustment of usage fees in the course of the current financial year;

3. collect the usage fees for the services of the public rescue service … from the persons liable to pay the costs …;

4. conduct the revenue settlement;

5. make [payments in respect of the] costs of providing the services to the operator of the service …;

6. examine the operators' … rendering of accounts with regard to plausibility and the correctness of the calculations;

7. draw up an audited overall final statement of account for the public rescue service.

The Central Settlement Office for the Rescue Service in Bavaria shall provide its services in this regard on a non-profit-making basis. All parties involved shall be obliged to support the Central Settlement Office for the Rescue Service in Bavaria in the performance of its tasks and to give to it the information and written documentation necessary for that purpose.

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

5 Stadler provided rescue services to the Passau municipal association, in Bavaria, until 31 December 2008, when their contract with the association was terminated. It contested the validity of that termination before the Verwaltungsgericht (Administrative Court) (Germany) and applied for an interim order allowing it to implement the contract pending a ruling in the main proceedings. All its claims were dismissed.

6 In the course of those proceedings, the Passau municipal association stated that it intended, without first putting the services out to tender, to entrust other undertakings with the carrying out of rescue services, initially on the basis of temporary contracts, before then awarding the final contract in the course of a procedure based on the selection procedure provided for under Article 13(3) of the Bavarian law.

7 The Passau municipal association drew up temporary contracts with the Malteser Hilfsdienst eV and the Bayerisches Rotes Kreuz.

8 Stadler, by letter of 17 December 2008, contested the procedure conducted by the Passau municipal association and brought an action before the Vergabekammer (Public Procurement Board), which dismissed it as inadmissible.

9 Stadler then appealed against that decision to the Oberlandesgericht München (Higher Regional Court, Munich) (Germany).

10 According to the referring court, the purpose of the proceedings is to determine whether the provision of the disputed services in Bavaria must be classified as a ‘service concession’ or a ‘service contract’ and what the legal consequences of that classification are. That classification depends on the interpretation of Article 1(4) of Directive 2004/18 which defines the concept of ‘service concession’.

11 In Passau, contracts concerning the provision of rescue services to the public are concluded according to a so-called ‘concession model’ between a contracting authority, the Passau municipal authority, and a service provider.

12 The amount of the usage fees for those rescue services is agreed between the social security institution and the selected service provider. According to Article 32, second sentence, of the Bavarian law, the usage fees must be calculated on the basis of the costs that can be estimated in accordance with economic principles applicable to undertakings and are consistent with proper provision of services, economical and cost-efficient management and efficient organisation. The estimated costs agreed are met by the fees received for emergency rescue, for transport of patients accompanied by a doctor and for transporting the sick. Where the social security institution and the service provider differ as to the amount of those fees, the matter may be brought before an arbitration board, the decisions of which can be contested before the administrative courts.

13 The service provider selected receives his fees from a central settlement office set up by the Bavarian Minister for Internal Affairs, the services of which it is legally bound to use. That office transfers payments on account, on a weekly or monthly basis, to that service provider on the basis of an overall annual amount of remuneration calculated in advance independently of the number of rescues actually carried out. If a deficit appears at the end of the year, it will be the subject of subsequent negotiations.

14 Privately-insured and uninsured persons who, according to the referring court, represent 10% of debtors, are obliged to pay the same usage fee as persons insured under the compulsory statutory scheme.

15 The referring court notes that, in Germany, there is an alternative method of rescue service provision, known as the ‘tender model’. In certain Länder, including Saxony, the contracting authority responsible for rescue services pays the service providers directly. The public bodies responsible for rescue services agree that remuneration in negotiations with the social security institutions and then pay it to the service providers. That model has already been classified by the Bundesgerichtshof (German Federal Court of Justice) as a ‘service contract’.

16 The differences between the ‘tender model’ of Länder such as Saxony and the ‘concession model’ of Länder such as Bavaria are that, in the first case, the usage fees provided for by law are negotiated between the contracting authority responsible for rescue services and another contracting authority (the social security institution) and that the service provider is bound by that agreement, whereas, in the second case, the service provider agrees the amount of the usage fee with another contracting authority (the social security institution).

17 Therefore, for the referring court, the question arises whether simply choosing another negotiating method can mean that, in one case, the rescue service must be put out to tender as a ‘service contract’ pursuant to Directive 2004/18 and, in the other case, the application of the rules governing the award of public service contracts could be ruled out on the ground that the contract constitutes a ‘service concession’.

18 In addition, the referring court is of the opinion that it can be inferred from the case-law of the Court of Justice that characterisation as a public service concession requires, where the remuneration is paid by a third party, that the contractor take the risk of operating the services in question. Thus, if the criterion for differentiating between a ‘service concession’ and a ‘service contract’ that is actually decisive is considered to be the assumption of the economic risk by the contractor, the question arises as to whether the assumption of a risk in any form suffices, so long as the entire risk otherwise falling on the contracting authority is assumed.

19 That distinction is all the more fine because, as the referring court emphasises, under the ‘concession’ model the service provider has to bear only a limited economic risk.

20 In those circumstances, the Oberlandesgericht München decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

‘(1) Is a contract relating to the supply of services (here, rescue services) under the terms of which the contracting authority does not make a direct payment of consideration to the contractor, but:

(a) the usage fee for the services to be provided is set by negotiation between the contractor and third parties who are contracting authorities (here, social security institutions),

(b) if agreement is not reached provision is made for a decision by an arbitration board established to this end, whose decision is subject to review by State courts, and,

(c) the fee is paid to the contractor not directly by the users, but in regular payments on account by a central settlement office whose services the contractor is statutorily required to call upon,

to be regarded for that reason alone as a service concession within the meaning of Article 1(4) of the Directive as distinct from a service contract for the purposes of Article 1(2)(a) and (d) of the Directive?

(2) If the first question referred is to be answered in the negative, is there a service concession where the operating risk connected with the public services is limited because:

(a) under a statutory provision, the usage fees for the provision of the services are to be based on the costs that can be estimated in accordance with economic principles applicable to undertakings and that are consistent with proper provision of services, economical and cost-efficient management and efficient organisation,

(b) the usage fees are due from solvent social security institutions,

(c) a certain exclusivity of exploitation is guaranteed in the contractually stipulated area,

but the contractor assumes this limited risk entirely?’

The questions referred for a preliminary ruling

21 As the two questions posed by the referring court are connected, it is appropriate to examine them together.

22 As a preliminary point, it must be noted that contracts concerning the provision of rescue services to the public, awarded by the Passau municipal association, are concluded in the form of the so-called ‘concession model’. That procurement model can be distinguished from the ‘tender’ model, which is a method of awarding a public service contract (see, to that effect, Case C-160/08 Commission v Germany [2010] ECR I-0000, paragraph 131), by the fact that, under the concession model, remuneration does not come from the contracting authority but from the sums collected from the users of the service by a central settlement office. The usage fees applicable to the service are agreed between the social security institution and the service provider selected by the Passau municipal authority.

23 In that regard, it must be recalled at the outset that the question whether an operation is to be classified as a ‘service concession’ or a ‘public service contract’ must be considered exclusively in the light of European Union law (see, inter alia, Case C-382/05 Commission v Italy [2007] ECR I-6657, paragraph 31, and Case C-196/08 Acoset [2009] ECR I-9913, paragraph 38).

24 It follows from a comparison of the definitions of a public service contract and a service concession provided, respectively, by Article 1(2)(a) and (d) and by Article 1(4) of Directive 2004/18, that the difference between a public service contract and a service concession lies in the consideration for the provision of services. A service contract involves consideration which, although it is not the only consideration, is paid directly by the contracting authority to the service provider (see, to that effect, Case C-458/03 Parking Brixen [2005] ECR I-8585, paragraph 39, and Commission v Italy, paragraphs 33 and 40), while, for a service concession, the consideration for the provision of services consists in the right to exploit the service, either alone, or together with payment (see, to that effect, Case C-206/08 Eurawasser [2009] ECR I-8377, paragraph 51).

25 In the case of a contract for the supply of services, the fact that the supplier is not remunerated directly by the contracting authority, but is entitled to collect payment from third parties, meets the requirement of consideration laid down in Article 1(4) of Directive 2004/18 (see Eurawasser, paragraph 57).

26 While the method of remuneration is, therefore, one of the determining factors for the classification of a service concession, it also follows from the case-law that the service concession implies that the service supplier takes the risk of operating the services in question and that the absence of a transfer to the service provider of the risk connected with operating the service shows that the transaction concerned is a public service contract and not a service concession (Eurawasser, paragraphs 59 and 68, and the case-law cited).

27 In the main proceedings, it is apparent from the order for reference that the provider of the rescue services also does not receive remuneration from the contracting authority which awarded the contract in question but from the usage fees which it is entitled to obtain, under the Bavarian law, from the social security institutions from which the insured persons received rescue services or even from the privately-insured or non-insured persons who received such services.

28 The fact that the amount of the usage fees is not determined unilaterally by the provider of the rescue services, but by agreement with the social security institutions which themselves have the status of a contracting authority (see, to that effect, Case C-300/07 Hans & Christophorus Oymanns [2009] ECR I-4779, paragraphs 40 to 59), and that those fees are not paid directly by the users of those services to the selected provider but through a central settlement office which is in charge of collecting and remitting those fees, by regular payments on account, does not affect that finding. The fact remains that all the remuneration obtained by the provider of the services comes from persons other than the contracting authority which awarded it the contract.

29 In a case such as that in the main proceedings, in order to find that there is a service concession within the meaning of Article 1(4) of Directive 2004/18, it is still necessary to establish whether the agreed method of remuneration takes the form of the right of the service provider to exploit the service and entails that it takes the risk of operating the service in question. While that risk may, at the outset, be very limited, it is necessary for classification as a service concession that the contracting authority transfer to the concession holder all or, at least, a significant share of the risk which it faces (see, to that effect, Eurawasser, paragraphs 77 and 80).

30 In the main proceedings, the Passau municipal authority conferred on the selected providers, over a number of years, the complete technical, administrative and financial implementation of the rescue services, for which it was responsible, in accordance with Article 4(1) of the Bavarian law.

31 The service providers selected are thus responsible for carrying out the rescue service, in accordance with the conditions laid down in the contract and in the Bavarian law, in the administrative district of Passau municipal authority.

32 Stadler contests the claim that, by that transaction, the Passau municipal authority also transferred a risk of operating the services in question to the selected service providers.

33 In that regard, it must be noted that, where the remuneration of the provider comes exclusively from a third party, the transfer by the contracting authority of a 'very limited' operating risk will suffice in order for a service concession to be found (see Eurawasser, paragraph 77).

34 It is not unusual that certain sectors of activity, in particular sectors involving public service utilities, such as those at issue in the main proceedings, are subject to rules which may have the effect of limiting the financial risks entailed. It must in particular remain open to the contracting authorities, acting in all good faith, to ensure the supply of services by way of a concession, if they consider that to be the best method of ensuring the public service in question, even if the risk linked to such an operation is very limited (Eurawasser, paragraphs 72 and 74).

35 In such sectors, the contracting authority has no influence on the detailed rules of public law governing the service, and thus on the level of the risk to transfer, and it would not, moreover, be reasonable to expect a public authority granting a concession to create conditions which were more competitive and involved greater financial risk than those which, on account of the rules governing the sector in question, exist in that sector (see Eurawasser, paragraphs 75 and 76).

36 It must also be stated that it is not for the Court of Justice to classify specifically the transactions at issue in the main proceedings. The Court's role is confined to providing the national court with an interpretation of European Union law which will be useful for the decision which it has to take in the dispute before it (see Parking Brixen, paragraph 32). The specific classification of the contract falls within the jurisdiction of the national court which must determine whether the established facts satisfy the general criteria laid down by the Court.

37 In that regard, it must be stated that the risk of the economic operation of the service must be understood as the risk of exposure to the vagaries of the market (see, to that effect, Eurawasser, paragraphs 66 and 67), which may consist in the risk of competition from other operators, the risk that supply of the services will not match demand, the risk that those liable will be unable to pay for the services provided, the risk that the costs of operating the services will not fully be met by revenue or for example also the risk of liability for harm or damage resulting from an inadequacy of the service (see, to that effect, Case C-234/03 Contse and Others [2005] ECR I-9315, paragraph 22, and Hans & Christophorus Oymanns, paragraph 74).

38 By contrast, risks such as those linked to bad management or errors of judgment by the economic operator are not decisive for the purposes of classification as a public service contract or a service concession, since those risks are inherent in every contract, whether it be a public service contract or a service concession.

39 In the case in the main proceedings, it must be observed, first, that the usage fees are not determined unilaterally by the provider of the rescue services but by agreement with the social security institutions on the basis of negotiations which must take place annually. Those negotiations, the results of which cannot fully be foreseen, involve the risk that the provider of the services must face constraints imposed throughout the duration of the contract. Those constraints may result inter alia from the need to make compromises during the negotiations or from the arbitration proceedings regarding the level of the usage fees.

40 Considering that – as stated by the referring court itself – the social security institutions with which the service provider is obliged to hold negotiations attach importance, with regard to their legal obligations, to fixing the usage fees at the lowest possible level, that service provider also runs the risk that those fees will not suffice to cover all operating expenses.

41 The service provider cannot guard against such eventualities by ceasing its activity since, first, it would not recoup the investments made by it and, second, it may face legal consequences as a result of its decision to terminate the contract early. In any case, an undertaking specialising in rescue services has only limited flexibility on the transport market.

42 Second, it is apparent from the Bavarian law that it does not guarantee full coverage of the operator's costs.

43 If the operator's actual costs exceed, in a given period, the estimated costs which serve as a basis for calculation of the usage fees, that operator may face a deficit and would have to ensure pre-financing of those costs from its own resources. It is a fact that the demand for rescue services can fluctuate.

44 In addition, if a difference arises between the actual costs and the estimated costs recognised by the social security institutions, the result of the rendering of accounts will be dealt with only at the next negotiations, which does not oblige the social security institutions to make good a possible deficit in the course of the following year and thus does not offer a guarantee of full compensation.

45 It should be added that if the costs are provided for in a budget, it is not possible for the undertaking to carry forward a surplus or deficit to the next financial year.

46 Third, the service provider selected is exposed, to a certain degree, to the risk of default by those liable for the usage fees. While a large majority of users of the services are insured by social security institutions, a not insignificant number of users is not insured or is privately insured. While the central settlement office is responsible for the technical recovery of their debts, it is not liable for the debts of non-insured or privately-insured persons and does not guarantee actual payment by those persons of usage fees. According to information provided to the Court, that central office does not enjoy the powers of a public authority.

47 Finally, it must be noted that, according to the statements of the referring court, the Bavarian law does not exclude the possibility that several operators may provide their services in the same area. Thus, in the main proceedings, Passau municipal authority concluded contracts with two service providers.

48 The answer to the questions posed must therefore be that, where the economic operator selected is fully remunerated by persons other than the contracting authority which awarded the contract concerning rescue services, where it runs an operating risk, albeit a very limited one, by reason inter alia of the fact that the amount of the usage fees in question depends on the result of annual negotiations with third parties, and where it is not assured full coverage of the costs incurred in managing its activities in compliance with the principles laid down by national law, that contract must be classified as a 'service concession' within the meaning of Article 1(4) of Directive 2004/18.

49 It should be added that while, as European Union law now stands, service concession contracts are not governed by any of the directives by which the European Union legislature has regulated the field of public procurement, the public authorities concluding them are bound to comply with the fundamental rules of the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union, including Articles 49 TFEU and 56 TFEU, and with the consequent obligation of transparency, where – that being a matter for the referring court to determine – the contract concerned has a certain transnational dimension (see, to that effect, Case C-91/08 Wall [2010] ECR I-0000, paragraphs 33 and 34, and case-law cited).

Costs

50 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Third Chamber) hereby rules:

Article 1(2)(d) and (4) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts must be interpreted as meaning that, where the economic operator selected is fully remunerated by persons other than the contracting authority which awarded the contract concerning rescue services, where it runs an operating risk, albeit a very limited one, by reason inter alia of the fact that the amount of the usage fees in question depends on the result of annual negotiations with third parties, and where it is not assured full coverage of the costs incurred in managing its activities in compliance with the principles laid down by national law, that contract must be classified as a 'service concession' within the meaning of Article 1(4) of that directive.

MAZÁK

Privater Rettungsdienst und Krankentransport Stadler
v
Zweckverband für Rettungsdienst und Feuerwehralarmierung Passau

(Reference for a preliminary ruling from the Oberlandesgericht München (Germany))

(Rescue service – Criteria for distinguishing between a public service contract and a service concession – Method of remuneration – Transfer of the risk connected with operating the services)

1. In the present case, the Court is once again called upon to rule on the criteria for distinguishing a service concession from a public service contract.

2. The questions referred for a preliminary ruling by the Oberlandesgericht München (Higher Regional Court, Munich) (Germany) are worded as follows:

‘1. Is a contract relating to the supply of services (here, rescue services) under the terms of which the contracting authority does not make a direct payment of consideration to the contractor, but:

(a) the usage fee for the services to be provided is set by negotiation between the contractor and third parties who are contracting authorities (here, social security institutions),

(b) if agreement is not reached provision is made for a decision by an arbitration board established to this end, whose decision is subject to review by State courts, and to be regarded for that reason alone as a service concession within the meaning of Article 1(4) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts, (2)as distinct from a service contract for the purposes of Article 1(2)(a) and (d) of the Directive?

(c) the fee is paid to the contractor not directly by the users, but in regular payments on account by a central settlement office whose services the contractor is statutorily required to call upon,

2. If the first question referred is to be answered in the negative, is there a service concession where the operating risk connected with the public services is limited because undertakings and that are consistent with proper provision of services, economical and cost-efficient management and efficient organisation,

(a) under a statutory provision, the usage fees for the provision of the services are to be based on the costs that can be estimated in accordance with economic principles applicable to

(b) the usage fees are due from solvent social security institutions,

(c) a certain exclusivity of exploitation is guaranteed in the contractually stipulated area,

but the contractor assumes this limited risk entirely?'

3. The Court's answers to the questions referred should assist the referring court to rule on an appeal brought by Privater Rettungsdienst und Krankentransport Stadler ('Stadler') against a decision of the Vergabekammer Südbayern (Public Procurement Board, Southern Bavaria) by which the latter dismissed an action brought by Stadler relating to the procedure for the award of service contracts in the field of rescue services followed by the Zweckverband für Rettungsdienst und Feuerwehralarmierung Passau (Municipal Association for the Rescue Service and Fire Alarm, Passau; 'Passau municipal association') in accordance with the Bavarian Law on Rescue Services (Bayerisches Rettungsdienstgesetz; 'the BayRDG') as inadmissible on the ground that the task of supplying rescue services constitutes a service concession which is not covered by public procurement legislation.

4. According to Stadler, which carried out rescue services for the Passau municipal association until 31 December 2008, (3) the contract at issue constitutes not a service concession within the meaning of Article 1(4) of Directive 2004/18, but a public service contract within the meaning of Article 1(2)(a) and (d) of that directive.

5. By contrast, the Passau municipal association, as defendant in the main proceedings, and two parties intervening in the main proceedings, namely the Malteser Hilfsdienst e.V. and the Bayerisches Rotes Kreuz (the Bavarian Red Cross), (4) consider that the contracts at issue constitute service concessions.

6. Written observations were submitted to the Court not only by the parties to the main proceedings, but also by the Federal Republic of Germany, the Czech Republic and the Commission of the European Communities. The Kingdom of Sweden and the latter, with the exception of the Czech Republic, presented oral argument at the hearing on 24 June 2010.

National legislation

7. In Germany, in the field of public rescue services, the local authorities, in their capacity as the authorities responsible for organising those services, conclude contracts with providers for the provision of such services to the entire population of the area within their remit.

8. With regard to the remuneration for the services in question, there are two different models in the various Länder. According to the first, so-called 'tender' model, remuneration is paid directly by the local municipality. (5) According to the second, so-called 'concession' model, the remuneration of the provider of the rescue services takes the form of the collection by it of payment from the patients or social security institutions.

9. The Land of Bavaria, in which the main proceedings take place, chose the concession model. The rescue services, covering emergency rescue, transport of patients accompanied by a doctor, transport of the sick, mountain and cave rescue and water rescue, are governed in Bavaria by the BayRDG, which entered into force on 1 January 2009.

10. With regard to emergency rescue services, transport of patients accompanied by a doctor and transport of the sick, Article 13(1) and (2) of the BayRDG provide that the municipal association for the rescue service and fire alarm is to entrust their implementation to aid organisations, such as the Bayerisches Rotes Kreuz, the Arbeiter-Samariter-Bund (Workers' Samaritan Federation), the Malteser-Hilfsdienst (Maltese Aid Service), or the Johanniter-Unfall-Hilfe (St. John's Accident Assistance). It is only where the aid organisations are not prepared or in a position to take on the task that the municipal association for the rescue service and fire alarm entrusts the carrying out on land of the services at issue to third parties or carries them out itself or through its members.

11. Under Article 13(4) of the BayRDG, the legal relationship between the municipal association for the rescue service and fire alarm and the person entrusted with running the rescue service is to be governed by a public law contract.

12. Article 21 of the BayRDG provides that any person who engages in emergency rescue, transport of patients accompanied by a doctor or transport of the sick requires authorisation. Under Article 24(2) of the BayRDG, that authorisation must be granted if a public law contract pursuant to Article 13(4) of that law is submitted.

13. Article 32 of the BayRDG provides that usage fees must be charged for the provision of rescue services, including the involvement of doctors, which must be based on the costs that can be estimated in accordance with economic principles applicable to undertakings and are consistent with proper provision of services, economical and cost-efficient management and efficient organisation.

14. Usage fees of operators for emergency rescue, the transport of patients accompanied by a doctor and transport of the sick are governed by Article 34 of the BayRDG, which is worded as follows:

(2) The social security institutions shall agree the usage fees to be paid by them for emergency rescue, the transport of patients accompanied by a doctor and transport of the sick in a uniform manner with the persons running the rescue service or their Land federations ...

(3) The usage fee agreement shall be concluded annually in advance.

(4) The costs of emergency rescue, of the transport of patients accompanied by a doctor and of transport of the sick shall be allocated in accordance with uniform standards to the users. The usage fees agreed with the social security institutions shall also be charged by the operators to all other persons and bodies which call upon the services of the public rescue service.

(5) The usage fees shall in each case be based on the estimated allowable costs under the second sentence of Article 32 of providing the services in the service areas of emergency rescue, transport of patients accompanied by a doctor and transport of the sick and on the estimated operation numbers in the operational period. The costs of providing the services shall also include in particular the costs of the involvement of doctors in the rescue service, … and the costs in respect of the activity of the Central Settlement Office for the Rescue Service in Bavaria in accordance with paragraph 8. The social security institutions shall agree in each case separately with the individual operators, with the operators of the integrated head offices and with the Central Settlement Office for the Rescue Service in Bavaria their estimated costs in the fee period. The costs can be agreed as a budget.

(6) If a usage fee agreement under paragraph 2 or an agreement under paragraph 5 does not materialise by 30 November in the financial year preceding the fee period, arbitration proceedings before the fee arbitration board … shall be held regarding the amount of the estimated costs and of the usage fees … Usage fees shall not be adjusted retroactively.

(7) The estimated costs agreed with the social security institutions or determined with binding force shall be met from the fees received for emergency rescue, for transport of patients accompanied by a doctor and in transporting the sick (revenue settlement). After a fee period has ended, every operator, every operator of an integrated head office and the Central Settlement Office for the Rescue Service in Bavaria shall prove the costs actually incurred in a final statement of account and compare them with those in the costs agreement (rendering of accounts). If a difference arises between the actual costs and the estimated costs recognised by the social security institutions for the costs agreement, the result of the rendering of accounts shall be dealt with at the next possible fee negotiations; this carrying forward is precluded if the costs of the operator … or the Central Settlement Office … have been agreed as a budget.

(8) In implementing paragraphs 2 to 7 and Article 35 the services of a Central Settlement Office for the Rescue Service in Bavaria shall be called upon, which shall in particular:

1. participate as an adviser in relation to agreeing the usage fees pursuant to paragraph 2 and in relation to the agreements under paragraph 5;

2. on the basis of the estimated costs of the parties involved and of the number of public rescue service operations to be anticipated, calculate the necessary usage fees and propose them for agreement to the parties involved; this shall also apply to the necessary adjustment of usage fees in the course of the current financial year;

3. collect the usage fees for the services of the public rescue service … from the persons liable to pay the costs;

4. conduct the revenue settlement …;

5. make [payments in respect of the] costs of providing the services to the operator of the service …;

6. examine the operators' … rendering of accounts with regard to plausibility and the correctness of the calculations;

7. draw up an audited overall final statement of account for the public rescue service.

The Central Settlement Office for the Rescue Service in Bavaria shall provide its services in this regard on a non-profit-making basis. All parties involved shall be obliged to support the Central Settlement Office for the Rescue Service in Bavaria in the performance of its tasks and to give to it the information and written documentation necessary for that purpose.'

15. The composition of the fee arbitration board with jurisdiction concerning usage fees is set out in Article 48 of the BayRDG. According to that article, in disputes concerning land rescue usage fees, it comprises three members for the land rescue operators and three members for the social security institutions together with the chairman who is appointed jointly by the operators of the public rescue service, the Bavarian Association of Health-Insurance Doctors, the persons responsible for ensuring the presence of doctors to accompany transported patients and the social security institutions.

16. With regard to the Central Settlement Office for the Rescue Service in Bavaria, Article 53 of the BayRDG authorises the highest-level rescue service authority, namely the Bavarian Ministry of Internal Affairs, to establish it by regulation.

Assessment

17. The referring court is called upon to determine whether the contracts concluded according to the concession model must be classified as a service concession or, notwithstanding the name of the model in question, as a service contract. In that regard, it should be noted that that question must be considered exclusively in the light of European Union law, (6) in this case, in the light of the definitions of the concepts 'public contracts', 'public service contracts' and 'service concession' set out in Article 1(2)(a) and (d) and (4) of Directive 2004/18, and in the light of the relevant case-law of the Court.

18. Since Article 17 of Directive 2004/18 precludes the application of that directive to service concessions, the classification of the contracts at issue influences the procedure for the conclusion thereof. None the less, even though, as European Union law now stands, service concession contracts are not governed by any of the directives by which the European Union legislature has regulated the field of public procurement, the public authorities concluding them are nevertheless bound to comply with the fundamental rules of the EC Treaty, including Articles 43 EC and 49 EC, and with the consequent obligation of transparency. (7)

19. In that regard, it should be pointed out that it is not for the Court in preliminary ruling proceedings, but for the national court, to classify contracts concluded according to the concession model. The task of the Court, in response to the two questions referred for a preliminary ruling, which are closely connected and which should, in my opinion, be examined together, is to explain and clarify the criteria which are useful for the purposes of that classification. (8)

20. It should be noted at the outset that the questions referred in the present case are similar to those referred in Eurawasser. (9) In both cases, the referring courts raised the question, in essence, whether, first, the fact that the service provider is not remunerated directly by the public authority with which it has a contractual relationship means, in itself, that the contract must be classified as a service concession and, second, whether, for the purposes of that classification, it is decisive that the operating risk connected with the service which is the subject of the contract at issue and is borne by the service provider be limited from the outset, that is to say even where the service is provided by the public authority concerned.

21. The questions referred for a preliminary ruling therefore relate to the two criteria which the Court uses to distinguish a service concession from a service contract. At issue are, first, the 'lack of direct remuneration' of a service provider, that is to say the situation where the remuneration is paid not by the public authority assigning the service in question but by third parties, and, second, the 'assumption of the risk of operating the service at issue'.

22. The Court explained the relationship between those two criteria in Parking Brixen (10) by holding that the fact that the service provider is not paid directly means that the provider assumes the risk of operating the services in question and is characteristic, therefore, of a public service concession.

23. In Commission v Italy, (11) the Court, in accordance with the definition of the concept 'service concession' given by Directive 2004/18, replaced the criterion of lack of direct remuneration with that of 'remuneration consisting of the right of the provider to exploit its own service'. In application of that criterion, the Court then held that a service concession exists where the agreed method of remuneration consists in the right to exploit the service and the provider assumes the risk of operating the services in question. The Court subsequently confirmed that judgment in Acoset. (12)

24. In Eurawasser, (13) the Court returned to the criterion of lack of direct remuneration by explaining that the fact that the service provider is remunerated by payments from third parties is one means of exercising the right, granted to the provider, to exploit the service.

25. In my view, the Court's findings cited above allow it to be concluded that the criterion of lack of direct remuneration is decisive for the purposes of classifying a contract relating to the supply of services as a service concession, since, according to the Court, the lack of direct remuneration of the service provider is one means of exercising the right, granted to the provider, to exploit the service and at the same time means that the provider assumes the risk of operating the services in question. (14)

26. I come to the same conclusion if I take into consideration the relationship between the definition of the concept of public service contract and of service concession set out in Directive 2004/18. Those definitions cover all contracts relating to services concluded by public authorities. It follows that if the contract at issue is not a public service contract, it must necessarily be a service concession, and vice-versa. Consequently, since the Court has repeatedly held that consideration paid directly by the contracting authority to the service provider constitutes the criterion for the definition of a public service contract, (15) the lack of such a method of remuneration necessarily means that a service concession is at issue.

27. In summary, as is shown by the case-law cited above, the lack of direct remuneration of the service provider means that the service contract at issue should be classified as a service concession.

28. However, the existence of direct remuneration of the service provider by the public authority concerned does not necessarily imply that there is a public service contract. It follows from the finding of the Court that indirect remuneration is 'one means of' exercising the right, granted to the provider, to exploit the service, (16) that there are also other means of exercising that right. That explains why, in Contse and Others, (17)Commission v Italy (18) and Hans & Christophorus Oymanns, (19) the Court examined whether the contracts at issue could constitute service concessions, even though the service providers had been remunerated directly by the public authorities concerned.

29. In those judgments, the Court established 'subsidiary criteria' allowing it to be concluded, where there is direct remuneration, that the service provider assumed the risk of exploiting the service at issue, such as the criterion of the delegation of liability for all harm suffered on account of a failure of the service at issue, (20) or the criterion of the existence of a certain economic freedom to determine the conditions under which a particular service is exploited. (21) Furthermore, the Court has also set out, evidently without claiming that they are exhaustive, the characteristics which are not decisive for the purposes of classifying the agreements at issue, such as the length of the agreements at issue, the significant initial investment for which the service provider is responsible, or a large degree of independence of performance on the part of the service provider. (22)

30. It must nevertheless be noted that the 'subsidiary criteria' were used only where the service provider was remunerated directly. That could establish that the lack of direct remuneration of the service provider is a sufficient criterion for classifying a contract at issue as a service concession.

31. In the present case, it is clear that the provider of the rescue service at issue is remunerated not by the public authority which assigned to it the service in question, but by third parties, namely by social security institutions, privately insured persons and uninsured persons. (23)

32. Subject to verification by the referring court, it seems to me that, even if the social security institutions themselves could be considered as the contracting authority within the meaning of the definition in Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18, they represent persons who are sufficiently distinct from and independent of the public authority which assigned the service in question in order to justify the finding that the service provider was remunerated 'by third parties'. (24)

33. The peculiar feature of the present case is that the entities which enjoy the right of use, namely the social security institutions, privately insured persons and uninsured persons, pay for that right not the rescue service provider directly, but the Central Settlement Office for the Rescue Service in Bavaria. It remains therefore to be established whether that fact can affect the finding that the lack of direct remuneration of the service provider constitutes a sufficient criterion for the purposes of classifying the contract at issue as a service concession.

34. In my opinion, that question should be answered in the negative. The fact that some 'intermediary' comes between the service provider and the party paying for that service in no way calls into question the other finding, namely that the service provider is not remunerated directly by the public authority which assigned to it the service in question, in particular where the public authority concerned has no influence over the remuneration.

35. That leads me to the conclusion that the lack of direct remuneration of the service provider by the public authority which assigned to it the service in question represents a sufficient criterion for the purposes of classifying the contract at issue as a service concession. In that regard, it is not important to know, first, who pays the remuneration due in respect of the services provided, assuming that it is a body which is sufficiently distinct from and independent of the public authority which assigned the service in question, or, second, what the procedures for collection of the remuneration are.

36. With regard to the question whether it is decisive, for the purposes of classifying such a service contract as a service concession, that the operating risk connected with the service at issue assumed by the service provider be limited from the outset, that is even where the service is provided by the contracting authority, I consider that the answer should be based on Eurawasser. (25)

37. It is true that, in the present case, the question of the degree of operating risk connected with the rescue service is open to debate. However, those are findings of fact which, so far as necessary, are to be undertaken by the referring court.

38. The degree of operating risk connected with the service in question is not decisive. What is decisive is the transfer to the service provider of the risk to which the public authority assigning the service in question would itself be exposed if it had to perform the service itself. (26)

Conclusion

39. In the light of the foregoing considerations, I propose that the Court should answer as follows the questions referred by the Oberlandesgericht München:

The lack of direct remuneration of the service provider by the public authority which assigned to it the service in question constitutes a sufficient criterion for the purposes of classifying a contract as a service concession within the meaning of Article 1(4) of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts. In that regard, it is not important to know, first, who pays the remuneration due in respect of the services provided, assuming that it is a body which is sufficiently distinct from and independent of the public authority which assigned the service in question, second, what the procedures for collection of the remuneration are or, third, whether the operating risk connected with the service at issue is limited from the outset.

3 – The contracts concluded between Stadler, on the one hand, and Passau municipal association, on the other hand, were terminated on the initiative of Passau municipal association. It appears that the termination of the contracts was connected with the BayRDG, which entered into force on 1 January 2009, and, more specifically, with Article 13(1) thereof, containing a list of organisations which must be given priority in the assignment of the rescue services.

Arrêt

1 Par sa requête, la Commission des Communautés européennes demande à la Cour de constater que, en n'appliquant pas uniformément, au cours d'une procédure de passation de marché public, les dispositions de l'avis de marché et, notamment, en rejetant une offre sur le fondement d'un critère qui n'était pas clairement mentionné dans l'avis de marché ainsi que, en ne fournissant pas au plaignant les informations nécessaires quant aux motifs de son rejet afin qu'il puisse bénéficier pleinement de la protection procédurale, la République de Chypre a manqué aux obligations qui lui incombent en vertu de l'article 4, paragraphe 2 et des principes généraux connexes de transparence et d'égalité de traitement des candidats visés à l'article 31, paragraphe 1, de la directive 93/38/CEE du Conseil, du 14 juin 1993, portant coordination des procédures de passation des marchés dans les secteurs de l'eau, de l'énergie, des transports et des télécommunications (JO L 199, p. 84) ainsi que de l'article 1^er^, paragraphe 1, de la directive 92/13/CEE du Conseil, du 25 février 1992, portant coordination des dispositions législatives, réglementaires et administratives relatives à l'application des règles communautaires sur les procédures de passation des marchés des entités opérant dans les secteurs de l'eau, de l'énergie, des transports et des télécommunications (JO L 76, p. 14).

Le cadre juridique

2 Aux termes de l'article 4, paragraphe 2, de la directive 93/38:

«Les entités adjudicatrices veillent à ce qu'il n'y ait pas de discrimination entre fournisseurs, entrepreneurs ou prestataires de services.»

3 L'article 31, paragraphe 1, de ladite directive prévoit:

4 L'article 1er, paragraphe 1, de la directive 92/13 dispose:

«Les États membres prennent les mesures nécessaires pour assurer que les décisions prises par les entités adjudicatrices peuvent faire l'objet de recours efficaces et, en particulier, aussi rapides que possible, [...]»

Les antécédents du litige et la procédure précontentieuse

5 Archi Ilektrsimou Kyprou (ci-après «AIK») est une entreprise publique dont l'activité consiste à mettre à disposition ou à exploiter des réseaux fixes destinés à la fourniture de services publics dans le domaine de la production, du transport et de la distribution d'électricité.

6 AIK a lancé un appel d'offres dans le cadre d'une procédure ouverte de passation de marché portant sur la conception, la livraison et la construction de la quatrième unité de la centrale thermoélectrique de Vassilikos, de type cycle combiné, ainsi que sur un contrat de maintenance à long terme du système des turbines, pour une valeur estimée à 170 000 000 euros.

7 Deux groupes ont soumis des offres dans le cadre de cette procédure, le groupe Babcock Hitachi Europe/Itochu Corporation & J&P Avax ainsi que le groupe Ansaldo Energia SpA & METKA SA. L'offre du groupe Ansaldo Energia SpA & METKA SA a été rejetée lors de la deuxième phase de la procédure d'évaluation des offres techniques.

8 Estimant que tant le rejet de son offre que l'acceptation de l'offre de l'autre soumissionnaire étaient contraires au droit communautaire, le groupe Ansaldo Energia SpA & METKA SA a déposé une plainte auprès de la Commission.

9 La Commission a adressée une lettre de mise en demeure, le 18 octobre 2006, aux autorités chypriotes, lesquelles ont répondu, selon la Commission, le 14 mai 2007, et, selon le gouvernement chypriote, le 29 janvier 2007.

10 N'ayant pas été convaincue par les explications fournies, la Commission a adressé, le 26 juin 2008, à la République de Chypre un avis motivé et a invité cet État membre à prendre les mesures nécessaires pour se conformer à cet avis dans un délai de deux mois à compter de la réception de celui-ci. Les autorités chypriotes ont répondu par lettre du 8 août 2008.

11 Non satisfaite de cette réponse, la Commission a décidé d'introduire le présent recours.

Sur le recours

Sur la recevabilité

12 La République de Chypre soulève une exception d'irrecevabilité fondée sur deux moyens.

13 La République de Chypre argue, en premier lieu, que la Commission n'a pas démontré que le principe de collégialité a été respecté lors de l'adoption des décisions relatives à l'émission de l'avis motivé et à l'introduction du recours en manquement. Cet État membre reproche notamment à la Commission de ne pas lui avoir transmis, à la suite d'une demande écrite formée le 15 septembre 2009, une copie des décisions du collège des commissaires d'émettre un avis motivé.

14 L'article 1er du règlement intérieur de la Commission (JO 2005, L 347, p. 83) établit que «la Commission agit en collège conformément aux dispositions du présent règlement».

15 Selon la Commission, les décisions d'envoyer l'avis motivé et d'introduire un recours dans la présente affaire ont été prises dans le cadre d'une procédure écrite, conformément à ce règlement intérieur. Cette procédure, qui est la procédure habituelle de prise de décision du collège, prévoit que le projet de décision est soumis à tous les membres de la Commission, puis réputé adopté si, dans un délai déterminé, aucun membre n'a formulé d'observations ou de réserves.

16 La Commission a précisé que, aux fins de la décision d'envoyer un avis motivé ou d'introduire un recours en manquement, une «fiche d'infraction», qui résume les faits, la procédure précontentieuse, les principaux griefs émis à l'encontre de l'État membre, les arguments de défense de ce dernier ainsi que la base juridique de l'avis motivé ou du recours envisagé, est communiquée aux membres du collège.

17 Au regard des éléments produits par la Commission et notamment de la «fiche d'infraction» sur le fondement de laquelle a été décidé d'envoyer l'avis motivé, de la lettre du secrétariat général de la Commission attestant de la clôture de la procédure écrite qui a conduit à envoyer cet avis, de la «fiche d'infraction» sur le fondement de laquelle a été décidé d'introduire le recours ainsi que de la lettre du secrétariat général de la Commission attestant de la clôture de la procédure écrite qui a conduit à l'introduction du recours, il y a lieu de considérer que ces décisions ont été adoptées dans le respect du principe de collégialité, tel que prévu à l'article 1er du règlement intérieur de la Commission.

18 La République de Chypre soutient, en second lieu, que la Commission n'a pas respecté la règle selon laquelle l'objet du recours en manquement est délimité par l'avis motivé. En effet, la violation de l'article 31, paragraphe 1, sous a), de la directive 93/38 ne figurerait pas dans le dispositif de l'avis motivé du 26 juin 2008.

19 À cet égard, il y a lieu de relever que, en vertu d'une jurisprudence constante, l'objet du recours introduit en vertu de l'article 226 CE est circonscrit par la procédure précontentieuse prévue par cette disposition et que, par conséquent, l'avis motivé de la Commission et le recours doivent être fondés sur des griefs identiques (voir arrêts du 17 novembre 1992, Commission/Grèce, C-105/91, Rec. p. I-5871, point 12; du 18 juillet 2007, Commission/Allemagne, C-490/04, Rec. p. I-6095, point 36, et du 22 janvier 2009, Commission/Portugal, C-150/07, point 20).

20 Cette exigence répond à la finalité de la procédure précontentieuse qui, selon une jurisprudence établie, consiste à donner à l'État membre concerné l'occasion, d'une part, de se conformer à ses obligations découlant du droit de l'Union et, d'autre part, de faire utilement valoir ses moyens de défense à l'encontre des griefs formulés par la Commission (voir arrêts du 15 janvier 2002, Commission/Italie, C-439/99, Rec. p. I-305, point 10, et Commission/Portugal, précité, point 20).

21 En l'espèce, la Commission a admis que la mention, dans le dispositif de l'avis motivé, de l'article 33 de la directive 93/38 au lieu de l'article 31 de celle-ci était due à une erreur de frappe. Elle a toutefois précisé que tant la lettre de mise en demeure que l'argumentation qui précède le dispositif de l'avis motivé font clairement référence à l'article 31, paragraphe 1, sous a), de ladite directive.

22 La Commission a également ajouté, ce que la Cour a pu constater, que la République de Chypre a présenté, dans sa réponse à l'avis motivé, des observations relatives à la violation qui lui était reprochée sur le fondement de l'article 31, paragraphe 1, sous a), de la directive 93/38 et non sur celui de l'article 33 de celle-ci.

23 Il résulte de ces éléments que la République de Chypre a été en mesure de faire valoir utilement ses moyens de défense à l'encontre des griefs formulés par la Commission.

24 L'exception d'irrecevabilité doit, par conséquent, être rejetée.

Sur le fond

Sur le premier grief de la Commission

– Argumentation des parties

25 La Commission fait valoir que AIK, en rejetant l'offre du plaignant, au motif qu'il n'a pas fourni de rendements garantis dans des conditions de fréquence variable, alors que ce critère n'apparaissait pas expressément et incontestablement comme tel dans le dossier d'appel d'offres, a violé les articles 4, paragraphe 2, et 31, paragraphe 1, de la directive 93/38.

26 La Commission considère, notamment, que AIK a violé les principes d'égalité de traitement entre les soumissionnaires et de transparence, tels que garantis par les dispositions susmentionnées et la jurisprudence de la Cour, en modifiant, après la procédure d'attribution, les critères d'attribution du marché.

27 À titre subsidiaire, la Commission allègue que AIK a violé le principe d'égalité de traitement entre les soumissionnaires, dès lors que le soumissionnaire retenu n'a mentionné les rendements qu'il pouvait garantir dans des conditions de fréquence variable que lors des réponses données aux demandes de précisions orales formulées par l'entité adjudicatrice et qu'il a subordonné les valeurs fournies à certaines conditions, elles-mêmes contraires aux modalités prévues par le pouvoir adjudicateur dans les documents contractuels. La Commission reproche également le fait que AIK a retenu un soumissionnaire qui ne satisfaisait pas à la condition de participation à la procédure tenant à l'expérience demandée en matière de construction.

28 La République de Chypre estime que l'exigence des rendements garantis a été formulée de manière claire.

29 Cet État membre aurait fourni à la Commission, dans sa réponse à la lettre de mise en demeure, des avis d'experts attestant que, dans la procédure de passation de marché litigieuse, l'existence d'une telle condition allait de soi pour un soumissionnaire expérimenté. L'offre proposée par le soumissionnaire retenu contenait, d'ailleurs, les rendements garantis.

30 La République de Chypre conteste également l'appréciation de l'expérience acquise par le soumissionnaire retenu à laquelle se livre la Commission.

31 Selon cet État membre, la Commission n'a pas démontré que AIK avait traité différemment les deux soumissionnaires, en violation de l'article 4, paragraphe 2, de la directive 93/38.

32 La Commission rétorque que la République de Chypre confond les connaissances requises pour l'exécution du marché et l'exigence préalable de clarté dans la formulation dont doit faire preuve le pouvoir adjudicateur, particulièrement lorsqu'il est question d'un critère décisif pour l'attribution du marché.

33 Pour la Commission, l'obligation de fournir des rendements garantis dans des conditions de variations de fréquence du réseau est apparue, a posteriori, lors des demandes de précisions orales formulées par l'entité adjudicatrice. La question posée par le pouvoir adjudicateur ainsi que la réponse donnée par le soumissionnaire retenu démontreraient que ce dernier n'avait pas compris qu'il devait donner des valeurs garanties en mode de fonctionnement adapté aux variations de fréquence.

34 La Commission disposerait de quatre avis élaborés par des experts internationaux concluant que l'avis de marché ne prévoyait pas l'obligation de fournir des valeurs garanties dans des conditions de variations de fréquence du réseau. Pour cette institution, en admettant que cette obligation était prévue par l'avis de marché, elle n'y figurait pas clairement, même pour des personnes expérimentées.

– Appréciation de la Cour

35 À titre liminaire et concernant l'applicabilité de l'article 31 de la directive 93/38 à la procédure de passation de marché public en cause, il importe de prendre en compte le fait que cette dernière était une procédure ouverte. Or, ainsi que l'a souligné la République de Chypre, ledit article vise explicitement les procédures restreintes ou négociées et non les procédures ouvertes.

36 La Commission a indiqué, lors de l'audience, qu'elle renonçait à invoquer la violation de l'article 31 de la directive 93/38.

37 Dans ces conditions, il y a lieu de conclure que la Commission ne fonde son premier grief que sur la violation du principe d'égalité de traitement entre les soumissionnaires, tel que garanti par l'article 4, paragraphe 2, de la directive 93/38.

38 Ce principe, qui constitue la base des directives relatives aux procédures de passation des marchés publics, implique une obligation de transparence, afin de permettre de vérifier son respect (voir, notamment, arrêts du 7 décembre 2000, Telaustria et Telefonadress, C-324/98, Rec. p. I-10745, point 61; du 12 décembre 2002, Universale-Bau e.a., C-470/99, Rec. p. I-11617, point 91, ainsi que du 29 avril 2004, Commission/CAS Succhi di Frutta, C-496/99 P, Rec. p. I-3801, point 109).

39 Les principes d'égalité de traitement et de transparence signifient, notamment, que les soumissionnaires doivent se trouver sur un pied d'égalité aussi bien au moment où ils préparent leurs offres qu'au moment où celles-ci sont évaluées par le pouvoir adjudicateur (voir, notamment, arrêts du 18 octobre 2001, SIAC Construction, C-19/00, Rec. p. I-7725, point 34; du 16 décembre 2008, Michaniki, C-213/07, Rec. p. I-9999, point 45, et du 12 novembre 2009, Commission/Grèce, C-199/07, Rec. p. I-10669, point 37).

40 Cela implique, plus particulièrement, que les critères d'attribution doivent être formulés, dans le cahier des charges ou dans l'avis de marché, de manière à permettre à tous les soumissionnaires raisonnablement informés et normalement diligents de les interpréter de la même manière (arrêts SIAC Construction, précité, point 42, ainsi que du 4 décembre 2003, EVN et Wienstrom, C-448/01, Rec. p. I-14527, point 57) et que, lors d'une évaluation des offres, ces critères doivent être appliqués de manière objective et uniforme à tous les soumissionnaires (arrêt SIAC Construction, précité, point 44).

41 Il ressort des éléments du dossier que l'unité de la centrale thermoélectrique de Vassilikos devrait pouvoir fonctionner selon deux choix principaux de fonction, à savoir en «fonction de réponse fréquence» et en «fonction de contrôle de charge».

42 Si la Commission n'a nullement remis en cause la clarté de l'exigence tenant à ce que cette unité de la centrale thermoélectrique soit capable de répondre à des variations de fréquence réseau, elle affirme cependant que l'obligation de fournir des valeurs garanties dans de telles conditions n'apparaissait pas explicitement dans le cahier des charges. Selon la Commission, cette obligation n'est apparue que lors des demandes de précisions orales formulées par l'entité adjudicatrice.

43 À ce propos, le volume III du cahier des charges indiquait que les rendements garantis devaient être fournis dans des conditions de réseaux de fréquence de 50 Hertz sans qu'il soit précisé que ces quantités garanties concernaient un mode de fonctionnement donné. Toutefois, le volume II dudit cahier, notamment les articles relatifs au «Plant design criteria», mettait l'accent sur la spécificité du réseau chypriote, eu égard à la nécessité de maintenir une fréquence stable et précisait que toute variation de la courbe de la température de combustion, dont dépend le rendement de l'unité de la centrale thermoélectrique de Vassilikos, devait être précisée par le soumissionnaire.

44 Il ne résulte pas des éléments figurant au dossier sur les quantités garanties en «fonction de réponse en fréquence» que AIK ait modifié postérieurement les critères d'attribution du marché.

45 En outre, à supposer même que l'exigence tenant à la fourniture de quantités garanties en «fonction de réponse en fréquence» aurait pu être énoncée avec davantage de clarté dans les documents contractuels, il ne peut être présumé que ce prétendu manque de clarté est à l'origine d'une inégalité de traitement entre les soumissionnaires.

46 Conformément à une jurisprudence constante, dans le cadre d'une procédure en manquement en vertu de l'article 226 CE, il incombe à la Commission, qui a la charge d'établir l'existence du manquement allégué, d'apporter à la Cour les éléments nécessaires à la vérification par celle-ci de l'existence dudit manquement, sans pouvoir se fonder sur une présomption quelconque (voir, notamment arrêts du 25 mai 1982, Commission/Pays-Bas, 96/81, Rec. p. 1791, point 6, et du 8 juillet 2010, Commission/Portugal, C-171/08, non encore publié au Recueil, point 19).

47 Or, en l'espèce, la Commission n'est pas parvenue à établir que le prétendu manque de clarté dans l'énoncé de ce critère d'attribution a abouti à une violation du principe d'égalité de traitement entre les soumissionnaires.

48 Il n'est, notamment, pas contesté que, lors des demandes de précisions orales formulées par l'entité adjudicatrice, tous les soumissionnaires ont été interrogés sur les quantités garanties en «fonction de réponse en fréquence». AIK a, ainsi, mis les deux soumissionnaires en mesure de préciser leur offre sur ce point.

49 La Commission n'a, par ailleurs, pas établi que les éléments contenus dans la lettre adressée par le soumissionnaire retenu à AIK, afin de compléter les réponses apportées aux demandes de précisions orales formulées par le pouvoir adjudicateur, ne respectaient pas les modalités prévues dans le dossier d'appel d'offres.

50 En outre, la Commission n'a pas démontré que le soumissionnaire retenu ne remplissait pas le critère relatif à l'expérience professionnelle dans le domaine de la construction.

51 Dès lors, il ne ressort pas des éléments présentés à la Cour que le pouvoir adjudicateur a violé le principe d'égalité de traitement entre les soumissionnaires tel que garanti par l'article 4, paragraphe 2, de la directive 93/38.

52 Le premier grief doit, en conséquence, être rejeté.

Sur le second grief de la Commission

– Argumentation des parties

53 La Commission estime que AIK a violé le droit à un recours effectif garanti par l'article 1er, paragraphe 1, de la directive 92/13, tel qu'interprété par la jurisprudence de la Cour. L'entité adjudicatrice n'aurait pas communiqué, en temps utile, les motifs de rejet de son offre – à tout le moins, n'aurait pas précisé en quoi consistait la violation des conditions contractuelles – empêchant, par voie de conséquence, le soumissionnaire évincé d'exercer un recours efficace contre cette décision de rejet.

54 La République de Chypre soutient que AIK a communiqué à ce soumissionnaire les motifs de rejet de son offre, à savoir la violation des conditions contractuelles.

55 L'entité adjudicatrice n'aurait pas exposé plus en détails les motifs de rejet de l'offre, car ledit soumissionnaire avait connaissance de ces motifs. En tout état de cause, l'ouverture d'une procédure de recours hiérarchique aurait assuré au candidat évincé un accès à l'ensemble du dossier d'AIK, lui permettant ainsi de prendre connaissance des motifs de la décision de rejet.

– Appréciation de la Cour

56 L'objectif de la directive 92/13 est de garantir que les décisions illégales des pouvoirs adjudicateurs peuvent faire l'objet de recours efficaces et aussi rapides que possible (voir, en ce sens, arrêts Universale-Bau e.a., précité, point 74, ainsi que du 23 décembre 2009, Commission/Irlande, C-455/08, point 26).

57 Certes, la directive 92/13, dans sa version en vigueur au moment des faits, ne contenait pas de dispositions relatives au contenu de la motivation devant accompagner la notification de la décision de rejet d'une offre aux soumissionnaires exclus.

58 Néanmoins, la motivation de la décision de rejet d'une offre doit être communiquée aux soumissionnaires concernés, en temps utile, afin que les soumissionnaires évincés aient la possibilité d'introduire efficacement un recours (voir, en ce sens, arrêt Commission/Irlande, précité, point 34).

59 En l'espèce, le pouvoir adjudicateur a communiqué sa décision de rejet au soumissionnaire évincé par une lettre, en date du 1er février 2006, sur laquelle figuraient les délais et voies de recours qui lui étaient ouverts. Ce dernier a, conformément à la législation nationale, demandé au pouvoir adjudicateur les motifs de la décision de rejet, par une lettre du 3 février 2006. AIK a répondu par une lettre du 8 février 2006. Il est constant que, selon la législation chypriote, ce n'est qu'à compter de la réception de cette dernière que le délai de recours a commencé à courir.

60 Il est également constant que la lettre, en date du 8 février 2006, faisait référence aux dispositions du cahier des charges qui n'avaient pas été respectées. Ces dispositions concernaient des clauses techniques, à savoir le volume II dudit cahier relatif au «Plant design criteria», telles que mentionnées au point 43 du présent arrêt.

61 Les raisons ayant conduit AIK à rejeter l'offre du soumissionnaire évincé ont ainsi été portées à la connaissance de celui-ci.

62 La Commission n'ayant pas démontré que le pouvoir adjudicateur a violé le droit à un recours effectif, tel que garanti à l'article 1er, paragraphe 1, de la directive 92/13, le second grief doit être également rejeté.

63 Au vu de ce qui précède, il y a lieu de rejeter le recours de la Commission.

Sur les dépens

64 En vertu de l'article 69, paragraphe 2, du règlement de procédure, toute partie qui succombe est condamnée aux dépens, s'il est conclu en ce sens. La République de Chypre ayant conclu à la condamnation de la Commission et cette dernière ayant succombé en ces moyens, il y a lieu de la condamner aux dépens.

Par ces motifs, la Cour (deuxième chambre) déclare et arrête:

1) Le recours est rejeté.

2) La Commission européenne est condamnée aux dépens.

JUDGMENT OF THE COURT (Fourth Chamber)

18 November 2010 (*)

(Failure of a Member State to fulfil obligations – Directive 2004/18/EC – Public procurement procedures – Award of a contract for interpretation and translation services – Services falling within the ambit of Annex II B of the Directive – Services not subject to all the requirements of the Directive – Weighting of the award criteria determined after tenders have been submitted – Weighting altered following an initial review of the tenders submitted – Compliance with the principle of equal treatment and the obligation of transparency)

In Case C-226/09,

ACTION under Article 226 EC for failure to fulfil obligations, brought on 19 June 2009,

European Commission, represented by M. Konstantinidis and A.-A. Gilly, acting as Agents, with an address for service in Luxembourg, applicant,

v

Ireland, represented by D. O'Hagan, acting as Agent, and A.M. Collins, SC, with an address for service in Luxembourg, defendant,

THE COURT (Fourth Chamber),

composed of J.-C. Bonichot, President of the Chamber, K. Schiemann, L. Bay Larsen (Rapporteur), C. Toader and A. Prechal, Judges, Advocate General: P. Mengozzi,

Registrar: A. Calot Escobar,

having regard to the written procedure,

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 29 June 2010,

gives the following

Judgment

1 By its application, the Commission of the European Communities seeks a declaration from the Court that, by attributing weightings to the criteria for the award of a contract for the provision of interpretation and translation services after the closing date for the submission of tenders and by altering those weightings following an initial review of the tenders submitted, Ireland has failed to fulfil its obligations under the principles of equal treatment and transparency, as interpreted by the Court of Justice of the European Union.

Legal context

2 Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114) ('the Directive') provides, in Chapter III of Title II thereof, for a 'two-tier' approach to public service contracts.

3 Article 20 of the Directive provides that contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex II A to the Directive are to be awarded in accordance with the provisions laid down in Articles 23 to 55 of the Directive.

4 Those articles set out the specific rules governing specifications and contract documents (Articles 23 to 27), procedures (Articles 28 to 34), advertising and transparency (Articles 35 to 43) and the conduct of the procedure (Articles 44 to 55).

5 Article 21 of the Directive, on the other hand, provides that '[c]ontracts which have as their object services listed in Annex II B shall be subject solely to Article 23 and Article 35(4)'.

6 Since interpretation and translation services are not listed in Annex II A to the Directive, they fall within Category 27, entitled 'Other services', of Annex II B.

7 Article 23 of the Directive lays down rules governing the technical specifications to be set out in the contract documentation.

8 Article 35(4) of the Directive provides that, after a contract has been awarded, the contracting authorities which have awarded the contract are to send the Commission a notice of the results of the award procedure.

9 Article 37 of the Directive provides as follows:

'Contracting authorities may publish in accordance with Article 36 notices of public contracts which are not subject to the publication requirement laid down in this Directive.'

10 Article 53 of the Directive, entitled 'Contract award criteria', which does not apply to the award of contracts listed in Annex II B to the Directive, provides in paragraph 2 thereof as follows:

'Without prejudice to the provisions of the third subparagraph, in the case [where the award is made to the most economically advantageous tender] the contracting authority shall specify in the contract notice or in the contract documents … the relative weighting which it gives to each of the criteria chosen to determine the most economically advantageous tender.

Where, in the opinion of the contracting authority, weighting is not possible for demonstrable reasons, the contracting authority shall indicate in the contract notice or contract documents … the criteria in descending order of importance.'

The factual background to the case and the pre-litigation procedure

11 On 16 May 2006, the Irish Department of Justice, Equality and Law Reform ('the contracting authority') published contract notice No 2006/S 92-098663 in the Official Journal of the European Union (OJ 2006 S 92) for the award of a contract for the provision of interpretation and translation services to a number of competent institutions dealing with asylum matters ('the contract at issue').

12 Section IV.2.1 of the contract notice stated that the contract would be awarded to the most economically advantageous tender on the basis of the following seven criteria:

'1. Completeness of tender documentation.

2. Stated ability to meet requirements.

3. Range of lots [the contract was subdivided into several lots], services and languages.

4. Qualifications, relevant experience.

5. Cost.

6. Suitability of proposed arrangements.

7. Reference sites.’

13 Section VI.3 of the notice stated that the seven criteria were not listed in descending order of importance.

14 The invitation to tender document set out the criteria in a similar manner and they were numbered 1 to 7. However, unlike the contract notice, that document did not expressly state that the criteria were not listed in descending order of importance.

15 Accordingly, the relative weighting to be attributed to each of the seven criteria selected to determine the most economically advantageous tender from the point of view of the contracting authority was not specified either in the contract notice or in the invitation to tender document. Nor was it stated in those documents whether relative weightings would subsequently be attributed to those criteria.

16 Twelve companies, three of which are established outside Ireland, submitted a tender before the closing date set for that purpose, which was 9 June 2006.

17 On that day, the members of the evaluation committee received an evaluation matrix suggesting that the following relative weightings should be applied to the seven criteria in question:

‘1. Completeness of tender documentation: 0%.

2. Stated ability to meet requirements: 7%.

3. Range of lots, services and languages: 25%.

4. Qualifications, relevant experience: 30%.

5. Cost: 20%.

6. Suitability of proposed arrangements: 10%.

7. Reference sites: 8%.’

18 The purpose of the evaluation matrix was to enable each member of the evaluation committee to carry out an initial review, on an individual basis, of the tenders submitted.

19 On 13 June 2006, after examining some of the tenders in that manner, one of the members of the committee sent an email to the member of the contracting authority’s services who had drawn up the evaluation matrix and communicated the tenders received to the committee, in which he proposed varying the weightings attributed to the award criteria.

20 On 22 June 2006, at its first meeting, the evaluation committee decided, before evaluating, collectively, the tenders submitted, to alter the relative weighting of the criteria by reducing to 25% the weighting to be attributed to the fourth criterion (previously set at 30%), and by raising to 15% the weighting to be attributed to the sixth criterion (previously set at 10%). The weighting attributed to the remaining evaluation criteria remained unchanged.

21 The committee then went on to evaluate the tenders and to award the contract, applying to the seven criteria the new weightings which had just been approved.

22 After receiving a complaint, the Commission exchanged correspondence with Ireland during May 2007.

23 In the light, inter alia, of Ireland's replies to both the letter of formal notice of 17 October 2007 and the reasoned opinion of 18 September 2008, the Commission took the view that the procedure for the award of the contract at issue had been conducted in breach of the principle of equal treatment and the consequent obligation of transparency and it therefore decided to bring the present action.

The action

24 First, it is not disputed that the contract at issue comes within the scope of the Directive and that the interpretation and translation services in question belong to the category of non-priority services listed in Annex II B thereto.

25 It should be recalled that Article 21 of the Directive provides that '[c]ontracts which have as their object services listed in Annex II B shall be subject solely to Article 23 and Article 35(4)'.

26 It is clear from a reading of Article 21 in conjunction with Articles 23 and 35(4) of the Directive that where, as in the present case, the contracts relate to services falling within the ambit of Annex II B to the Directive, the contracting authorities are required to comply only with the rules governing technical specifications and to send the Commission a notice setting out the results of the award procedure for those contracts.

27 By contrast, the other rules laid down by the Directive in relation to the coordination of procedures, in particular those applicable to the requirements to put out contracts to competition by means of prior advertising and those laid down in Article 53 of the Directive relating to the contract award criteria, are not applicable to such contracts.

28 As far as concerns the services listed in Annex II B to the Directive, full application of the Directive should, as stated in recital 19 in the preamble thereto, be limited for a transitional period to contracts where its provisions will permit the full potential for increased cross-frontier trade to be realised.

29 However, even though contracting authorities which conclude contracts listed in Annex II B to the Directive are not subject to the rules laid down in the Directive relating to the requirements to put contracts out to competition by means of prior advertising, they nevertheless remain subject to the fundamental rules of the European Union, in particular to the principles laid down by the Treaty on the Functioning of the European Union (TFEU) on the right of establishment and the freedom to provide services (Case C-507/03 Commission v Ireland [2007] ECR I-9777, paragraph 26).

30 According to settled case-law, the purpose of coordinating at European Union level the procedures for the award of public contracts is to eliminate barriers to the freedom to provide services and goods and therefore to protect the interests of traders established in another Member State (Commission v Ireland, paragraph 27 and the case-law cited).

31 It follows that the system established by the European Union legislature for contracts relating to services falling within the ambit of Annex II B to the Directive cannot be interpreted as precluding application of the principles deriving from Articles 49 TFEU and 56 TFEU, in the event that such contracts are nevertheless of certain cross-border interest (see, to that effect, Commission v Ireland, paragraph 29) or, therefore, of the requirements designed to ensure transparency of procedures and equal treatment of tenderers (see, to that effect, Case C-91/08 Wall [2010] ECR I-0000, paragraph 37).

32 The obligation of transparency applies where the contract for the provision of services in question may be of interest to an undertaking located in a Member State other than that in which the contract is to be awarded (see, to that effect, Commission v Ireland, paragraph 29).

33 That the contract at issue in the present case may have been of interest to undertakings located in a Member State other than Ireland is apparent both from the publication of a notice for that contract in the Official Journal of the European Union and from the fact that three of the tenderers were undertakings established in a Member State other than Ireland (see, to that effect, Wall, paragraph 35).

34 It is in the light of those considerations that it is necessary to examine the merits of the two complaints raised by the Commission, which do not refer to either of the two provisions of the Directive laying down the rules governing the award of a contract falling within the ambit of Annex II B thereto, namely Articles 23 and 35(4), but are based on two requirements under European Union primary law, namely respect for the principle of equal treatment and the consequent obligation of transparency.

The first complaint: weightings were attributed to the award criteria after the closing date for the submission of tenders

Arguments of the parties

35 The Commission submits that Ireland has infringed the principles of equal treatment and transparency by not attributing relative weightings to the seven award criteria for the contract at issue until after the closing date for the submission of tenders.

36 According to the Commission, the belated weighting significantly altered the relative importance of the criteria by comparison with that attached to the criteria as originally published and with the weighting which tenderers could reasonably have expected on the basis of the contract documents.

37 In that connection, Ireland submits, first, that, contrary to what the Commission stated in its application initiating proceedings, at no time prior to the submission of the tenders did the contracting authority state, either impliedly or expressly, that the award criteria set out in the contract notice and the invitation to tender were listed in descending order of importance.

38 To the contrary, the contract notice stated that the award criteria were not listed in descending order of importance and at no time did the contracting authority subsequently give any indication to suggest that that position had changed.

39 Moreover, while it acknowledges that the evaluation committee appointed by the contracting authority attributed relative weighting to the award criteria after the closing date for the submission of tenders, Ireland disputes that that determination of the relative weighting of the various criteria infringed the principles of equal treatment and transparency.

Findings of the Court

40 First, the fact that Ireland requested the publication of the relevant notice in the Official Journal of the European Union, as permitted under Article 36 of the Directive, does not mean that that Member State is under any obligation to award that contract in accordance with the provisions of the Directive which are applicable to public contracts falling within the ambit of Annex II A thereto (see, by analogy, concerning a public contract outside the scope of a directive, Case 45/87 Commission v Ireland [1988] ECR I-4929, paragraphs 9 and 10).

41 In order for it to be accepted that the first complaint is well founded, it would be necessary for the specific rule governing the prior weighting of the award criteria for a contract falling within the ambit of Annex II A to the Directive to be regarded as constituting a direct consequence of the fact that the contracting authorities are required to comply with the principle of equal treatment and the consequent obligation of transparency.

42 It is true that, according to the Court’s case-law relating to public contracts awarded in accordance with all the provisions of the various public procurement directives which preceded the adoption of the Directive, the purpose of the requirement to inform tenderers in advance of the award criteria and, where possible, of their relative weighting, is to ensure that the principles of equal treatment and transparency are complied with (see, inter alia, Case C-470/99 Universale-Bau and Others [2002] ECR I-11617, paragraph 98, and Case C-331/04 ATI EAC and Viaggi di Maio and Others [2005] ECR I-10109, paragraphs 22 to 24).

43 However, while the requirement to state the relative weighting for each of the award criteria at the stage of publication of the contract notice, as now provided for under Article 53(2) of the Directive, meets the requirement of ensuring compliance with the principle of equal treatment and the consequent obligation of transparency, it cannot legitimately be argued that the scope of that principle and that obligation extends, in the absence of a specific provision to that effect in the Directive, to requiring that, in the context of contracts not subject to a provision such as Article 53 of the Directive, the relative weighting of criteria used by the contracting authority is to be determined in advance and notified to potential tenderers when they are invited to submit their bids. Indeed, as the Court indicated by the use of the phrase 'where possible' in the case-law referred to in the paragraph 42 above, the reference to the weighting of the award criteria in the case of a contract that is not subject to a provision such as Article 53(2) of the Directive does not constitute an obligation for the contracting authority.

44 It follows that Ireland, which had granted potential tenderers access to appropriate information concerning the contract at issue prior to the closing date for the submission of tenders, did not infringe the principle of equal treatment or the consequent obligation of transparency by attributing weightings to the award criteria without granting the tenderers access to those weightings before the closing date for the submission of tenders.

45 Specifically, in the call for tenders at the origin of this case, the contracting authority provided more information than is required by the Directive and the award criteria for the contract at issue were not formulated in the contract documentation in such a way that there could be held to be a difference in treatment to the detriment of undertakings located in a Member State other than Ireland which might have been interested in the contract.

46 By attributing weightings to those criteria, the contracting authority simply set out the terms on which the tenders submitted were to be evaluated, without in any way infringing the obligation to interpret the award criteria in the same way, since they were not listed in descending order of importance.

47 It cannot be assumed from the fact that the award criteria have been listed without any indication of a relative weighting for each individual criterion that they are necessarily listed in descending order of importance or that the award criteria have the same weighting.

48 Moreover, the relative weighting of the award criteria communicated to the members of the evaluation committee in the form of a matrix would not have provided potential tenderers, had they been aware of that weighting at the time the bids were prepared, with information which could have had a significant effect on that preparation and did not constitute an alteration of those criteria (see, to that effect, ATI EAC and Viaggi di Maio and Others, paragraph 32).

49 It should be added that there is no evidence in the present action, as presented before the Court, that the relative weighting of the award criteria was fixed after the envelopes containing the tenders submitted were opened.

50 Accordingly, the first complaint relied on by the Commission in support of its action must be rejected as unfounded.

The second complaint: the weighting of the criteria was altered after an initial review

Arguments of the parties

51 The Commission submits that, by altering the relative weighting of the award criteria for the contract at issue, as set out in the evaluation matrix, after the initial review of the tenders submitted, Ireland infringed the principles of equal treatment and transparency.

52 It states that such an alteration, made after an initial review of the tenders, constitutes an infringement of the principle of equal treatment, without there being any need to ascertain whether the initial review of the tenders was carried out on an individual basis by the various members of the evaluation committee or collectively by all the committee members.

53 Ireland maintains that the weighting was altered only once and before the committee had even carried out a collective evaluation of a single tender.

54 Consequently, in its view, the weighting thus attributed to the criteria was applied consistently throughout the procedure for the award of the contract at issue and the procedure did not therefore infringe the principle of equal treatment.

55 Moreover, Ireland states that there was only a minor alteration of the relative weighting of the award criteria and that could not have given rise to discrimination against any of the tenderers. A retrospective analysis demonstrated that the successful tenderer would have won the contract even if it had been awarded on the basis of the criteria as originally weighted.

Findings of the Court

56 The Commission claims that the Court should declare that the alteration of the relative weighting of the award criteria infringes the principle of equal treatment deriving from the provisions of the TFEU.

57 With regard, first, to the conduct of the procedure for the award of the contract at issue, it should be noted that the weighting of the award criteria for that contract was indeed altered after the contracting authority had communicated the relative weighting of the criteria in the form an evaluation matrix to the members of the evaluation committee in order to enable them to carry out an initial review of the tenders submitted.

58 Not only did the members of the evaluation committee have the opportunity to review the tenders, on an individual basis, before the committee first met as a collective body, but they were also encouraged to carry out such an initial review in order to facilitate the collective evaluation within the committee.

59 Next, it should be noted that, in such a factual context, as the Court has already held, the principles of equal treatment and transparency of tender procedures imply an obligation on the part of contracting authorities to interpret the award criteria in the same way throughout the procedure (see, by analogy, Case C-448/01 EVN and Wienstrom [2003] ECR I-14527, paragraph 92).

60 As far as the award criteria themselves are concerned, it is a fortiori clear that they must not be amended in any way during the tender procedure (see, by analogy, EVN and Wienstrom, paragraph 93).

61 A stage during which the tenders submitted are reviewed by the members of the evaluation committee, on an individual basis, before the committee meets, forms an integral part of the procedure for the award of the contract in question.

62 In those circumstances, if the award criteria are altered after that stage, during which the tenders were reviewed for the first time, the criteria on the basis of which the initial review was carried out would effectively be altered. Such conduct is not consistent with the principle of equal treatment or the consequent obligation of transparency.

63 Lastly, it should be noted, first, that, contrary to Ireland’s submissions, the second complaint relied on by the Commission can be held to be well founded without there being any need to demonstrate that the alteration of the relative weighting discriminated against one of the tenderers. It is sufficient for that purpose that it cannot be ruled out that, at the time the alteration was made, it might have had such an effect.

64 Second, as the finding of a failure by a Member State to fulfil its obligations is not bound up with a finding as to the damage flowing therefrom (Case C-263//96 Commission v Belgium [1997] ECR I-7453, paragraph 30), Ireland cannot rely on the fact that no tenderer suffered damage, arguing that, even if the initial weighting of the award criteria had been used, the contract at issue would not have been awarded to a contractor other than the one who was chosen at the conclusion of the procedure.

65 The second complaint relied on by the Commission in support of its action must therefore be upheld.

66 In the light of all the foregoing considerations, it must be held that, by altering the weighting of the award criteria for the contract at issue following an initial review of the tenders submitted, Ireland has failed to fulfil its obligations under the principle of equal treatment and the consequent obligation of transparency, as interpreted by the Court.

67 The action is dismissed as to the remainder.

Costs

68 Under Article 69(2) of the Rules of Procedure, the unsuccessful party is to be ordered to pay the costs if they have been applied for in the successful party's pleadings. Under Article 69(3) of those rules, the Court may order that the costs should be shared or that the parties are to bear their own costs where each party succeeds on some and fails on other heads.

69 Since the Commission's application has been upheld only in part, each party must be ordered to bear its own costs.

On those grounds, the Court (Fourth Chamber) hereby:

1. Declares that, by altering the weighting of the award criteria for a contract for the provision of interpretation and translation services following an initial review of the tenders submitted, Ireland has failed to fulfil its obligations under the principle of equal treatment and the consequent obligation of transparency, as interpreted by the Court of Justice of the European Union;

2. Dismisses the action as to the remainder;

3. Orders the European Commission and Ireland to bear their own costs.

OPINION OF ADVOCATE GENERAL
MENGOZZI delivered on 29 June 2010 1

Case C-226/09

European Commission
v
Ireland

(Public works contracts – Annex II B of Directive 2004/18/EC – Weighting of the award criteria determined after the closing date for the submission of bids and modified after an initial review of those same bids)

1. In the context of this action for failure to fulfil an obligation, the Court is asked to clarify the extent to which European Union law is applicable to a public works contract in respect of which the relevant directives require that only certain minimum provisions be applied. At issue in this case is a contract for the provision of translation services, in regard to which Directive 2004/18/EC (2) requires only that the technical specifications of the service be set out and a notice of the results of the award procedure be published. The Commission, however, takes the view that, in the light of the Court's case-law, the Irish [contracting] authority ought to have complied with a number of other obligations, and it is the failure to fulfil those obligations that has given rise to the current application.

I – Legislative background

2. The European Union law that constitutes the basic reference framework in this case comprises both the Treaties and the abovementioned Directive 2004/18 ('the directive').

3. It is common ground between the parties that the services at issue in this case are among those listed in Annex II B of the directive. Translation services constitute '[o]ther services' included in category 27 of that annex.

4. Article 21 of the directive, entitled '[s]ervice contracts listed in Annex II B' stipulates that:

'Contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex II B shall be subject solely to Article 23 and Article 35(4)'.

5. Article 23 of the directive, entitled '[t]echnical specifications', is not the subject of dispute, and it is therefore unnecessary to cite the full text of that article here. It is a very lengthy and detailed provision which requires bodies awarding public works contracts to furnish a clear and exact definition of the requirements of the service put out to tender, in order to prevent any difference in the treatment of persons interested in entering into the contract with the authority.

6. Article 35(4) of the directive requires contracting authorities which have awarded a public contract to send a notice of the results of the award procedure. The Commission does not allege that Ireland infringed that provision either.

II – Facts and pre-litigation procedure

7. On 16 May 2006, the Irish Government published a notice (3) in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Union concerning a contract for the provision of interpretation and translation services for the office responsible for matters relating to refugees.

8. The contract notice specified the category of services called for and set a closing date (9 June 2006) for the submission of requests to participate in the tendering procedure. As regards the procedure for the award of the contract, it was stated that the most economically advantageous tender would be selected on the basis of the following criteria:

(1) completeness of tender documentation;

(2) stated ability to meet requirements;

(3) range of lots, (4) services and languages;

(4) qualifications, relevant experience;

(5) cost;

(6) suitability of proposed arrangements; and

(7) reference sites.

9. The contract notice further stated that the award criteria should not be construed as being listed in descending order of importance.

10. Twelve companies submitted requests to participate in the procedure, and three of them were established outside Ireland.

11. Immediately after the closing date for submitting tenders, the members of the evaluation team were given an evaluation matrix indicating the relative weightings to be attributed to the award criteria. The weightings ranged from 0% (for criterion No 1 concerning the completeness of the documentation) to 30% (for criterion No 4). As regards the remaining criteria, the matrix attributed a weighting of 7% to criterion No 2, of 25% to criterion No 3, of 20% to criterion No 5, of 10% to criterion No 6 and of 8% to criterion No 7.

12. In the days that followed, the members of the evaluation team individually undertook an initial review of the various bids submitted.

13. On 22 June 2006, the evaluation team met for the first time. Before reviewing the various bids, it decided to alter the weightings attributed to the criteria, reducing to 25% the weighting for criterion No 4 (originally 30%) and increasing to 15% the weighting for criterion No 6 (originally 10%). The weighting attributed to the other criteria remained unchanged. The evaluation team then moved on to evaluate the bids and award the contract, applying the new, recently approved weightings.

14. The Commission received a complaint from an unsuccessful tenderer. Following an exchange of information with Ireland, it issued a letter of formal notice on 23 October 2007 and, after receiving, from the Irish Government, a reply which it considered to be insufficient, the Commission issued a reasoned opinion on 23 September 2008.

III – Procedure before the Court and forms of order sought

15. The Commission was not satisfied with the Irish authorities' response to the reasoned opinion and, as a result, brought the present action for failure to fulfil an obligation on 19 June 2009.

16. The Commission asks the Court:

– to declare that, by attributing weightings to the award criteria following the closing date for the submission of the bids and by modifying them after an initial review of the submitted bids, Ireland has failed to fulfil its obligations under the principles of equal treatment and transparency as interpreted by the Court of Justice; and – to order Ireland to pay the costs.

17. Ireland asks the Court:

– to dismiss the application; and – to order the Commission to pay the costs.

IV – The failure to fulfil an obligation

A – The legal nature of the contract at issue

18. Before considering the alleged failure to fulfil an obligation, it is necessary, as a preliminary issue, to clarify the nature of the invitation to tender published by the Irish authorities, in order to determine the legal regime applicable to it.

19. As I mentioned earlier, it is common ground between the parties that the services awarded by the Irish Government in the context of this dispute fall within Annex II B of the directive. Consequently, the only obligations explicitly imposed by the directive related to the technical specifications (Article 23 of the directive) and the notice of the results of the award procedure (Article 35(4)), the Commission has not, however, made any complaint against Ireland in either regard.

20. It is, however, well known that the European Union law applicable to public procurement consists of more than the specific provisions laid down in the relevant directives. In particular, in its case-law, the Court has always emphasised the need to take account, in that context, of the importance of primary law.

21. It must be pointed out that the Court has consistently held that the purpose of coordinating, at Community level, the procedures for the award of public contracts is to eliminate barriers to the freedom to provide services and goods and therefore protect the interests of traders established in a Member State who wish to offer goods or services to contracting authorities established in another Member State. (5)

22. Consequently, if a public contract involves a cross-border interest, even if merely a potential cross-border interest, the rules that arise from the Treaty must apply. (6) Clearly, those rules apply in addition to any formal requirements laid down by the applicable legislation: in this case, for example, the obligations concerning the technical specifications and the notice of the results of the award procedure.

23. There are, in essence, two obligations that derive, in this regard, from primary law and from the principles of freedom of establishment and the freedom to provide services more particularly. First, the authorities must respect the principles of non-discrimination on grounds of nationality and of equal treatment. Second, they must observe a duty of transparency in order to make it possible to verify compliance with those principles. (7)

24. The parties do not appear actually to disagree about the existence of the obligations set out in the preceding paragraphs or, indeed, about the fact that the contract at issue involved a cross-border interest, as demonstrated both by the decision to advertise it in the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Union, and the fact that some of the tenderers were undertakings established outside Ireland. (8) What is a matter of dispute is whether, in the particular circumstances of the case, the conduct of the Irish authority met the standards set out above.

B – Arguments of the parties

25. In its brief application, the Commission contends that the Irish authority was in breach of the obligations laid down by European Union law in two separate respects, in both instances breaching the principles of equal treatment and transparency imposed by the Court's case-law.

26. In the first place, according to the Commission, the Irish authorities acted unlawfully by failing to weight the criteria for the award of the contract until after the closing date for the submission of bids.

27. Secondly, again according to the Commission, the fact that the weighting was modified after an initial review of the submitted bids is also unlawful.

28. The Commission further points out that the invitation to tender sent to the undertakings after the notice had been published in the Official Journal no longer stated that the award criteria were not listed in descending order of importance, with the result that undertakings taking part in the tender could reasonably have expected that this was the order in which the criteria were ranked. However, since the weighting did not attribute to the criteria the importance that their position in the list implied, the Irish authorities had misled tenderers. In its reply, however, the Commission explained that the question of the specific order in which the criteria were listed was not the basis of its application which is, therefore, founded solely on the two elements described: the fact that the relative weighting to be attributed to the criteria was not decided until after the closing date for the submission of bids and the fact that the weighting was modified after an initial review of the bids by the individual members of the evaluation team.

29. Ireland, for its part, essentially accepts the facts as set out by the Commission, (9) but denies that they constitute a breach of European Union law.

30. More specifically, the Irish Government points out that the modification made to the criteria on 22 June was insignificant (a reduction of 5% in the weighting attributed to criterion No 4 and a corresponding increase of 5% in the weighting attributed to criterion No 6), and entirely incapable of advantaging or disadvantaging any given tenderer compared with another. Indeed, a retrospective analysis would demonstrate that the successful tenderer would also have won the contract on the basis of the criteria as originally weighted.

31. Since, according to the Irish Government there has, consequently, been no breach of the principle of equal treatment of tenderers, it is also unnecessary to evaluate compliance with the principle of transparency, as the Court's case-law treats the latter principle as merely ancillary to the principle of equal treatment.

C – Analysis

32. For reasons of logic and clarity of argument, I shall begin my analysis of the legal aspects of this case with some observations concerning the principle of transparency in relation to public procurement. I shall then move on to analyse the Commission's two complaints and, finally, briefly discuss an aspect which, it seems to me, the parties have mistakenly overlooked.

1. The principle of transparency

33. Ireland, as we have seen, maintains that the principle of transparency in relation to public procurement is subsidiary to the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination; consequently, in Ireland's view, once it has been established that there has been no infringement of the latter two principles, an assessment of compliance with the principle of transparency becomes superfluous.

34. Ireland's argument cannot be upheld.

35. It is true that, in terms of the rationale underlying the settled case-law in this field, the principle of transparency has an ancillary role compared with the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination. However, the fact that it is ancillary does not make it subordinate, as envisaged by the Irish Government. Quite the reverse, the duty of transparency is ancillary in the sense that its observance makes it possible to ascertain whether the other two 'main' obligations have been complied with. If the authority fails to act transparently, it becomes difficult, if not impossible, to ascertain whether or not it may have failed to fulfil the requirements of equal treatment and non-discrimination.

36. Moreover, observance of the duty of transparency is a vital precondition for guaranteeing that all potential tenderers are properly informed of the tendering procedure, thereby ensuring equality of treatment. (10)

37. Consequently, if the conditions laid down in case-law for the application to a public contract of the principles derived from primary European Union law are met, it will always be necessary to confirm that the principle of transparency has been respected. In fact, logic would suggest that an assessment of compliance with the principle of transparency must precede any assessment of respect for the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination.

2. The Commission's first complaint

38. By its first complaint, the Commission criticises Ireland, as we have seen, for having determined the weighting to be attributed to the various award criteria only after the closing date for the submission of bids. According to the Commission, that late determination of the weightings breached the principles of equal treatment and transparency.

39. It seems to me that it is not possible to uphold this first complaint, for the following reasons.

40. Firstly, it is indisputable that the directive did not require that the importance attaching to the award criteria should be set out in advance. As the Commission itself in fact acknowledges in its application, Article 40 of the directive, which provides for an obligation of this nature in Article 40(5)(e), was not applicable to the contract at issue. Indeed, to be precise, in this case, the directive did not even require that the award criteria be stated in advance, although the Irish authorities did indicate them.

41. Secondly, an obligation of that nature cannot be derived from case-law either. In particular, we may cite, by analogy, a judgment in which, in a case which fell completely within the ambit of the public procurement directives, the Court recognised the legitimacy of the conduct of an authority that had weighted the subheadings of an award criterion after bids had been submitted but before the envelopes containing the bids had been opened. (11)

42. It is, of course, necessary to consider whether the obligation to set out in the notice itself the weighting attributed to the various award criteria may be regarded as a natural consequence of the duty to observe the principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination and transparency. However, in the light of the Court's case-law in particular, I do not consider that this can be the case.

43. The case-law concerning tenders caught by all of the provisions of the various public procurement directives in fact regards the obligation to inform tenderers of the award criteria in advance as an expression of the principles of equal treatment and transparency (that obligation, it is worth pointing out, is specifically provided for by the rules in such cases). (12) Again, according to that case-law, the abovementioned principles give rise to the obligation to interpret the award criteria in the same way throughout the entire procedure (13) and to the prohibition on amending them during the tender procedure. (14)

44. It is clear that, in Directive 2004/18, the obligation to set out in advance the weighting attributed to the award criteria for contracts coming entirely within the ambit of the directive itself also reflects the need to guarantee respect for the principles of equal treatment and transparency. In my view, however, it is necessary to steer clear of the automatic assumption that the principles in question have the same scope in relation to both contracts subject to the directive and contracts not subject to the directive (or, as in this instance, subject to the directive in part only). If, in fact, the transparency required in relation to contracts excluded from the scope of the directive were regarded as necessarily the same as that required in relation to contracts coming within the ambit of the directive, this would open the way for the directive to be covertly applied to a whole range of circumstances to which the legislature explicitly considered that it should not apply. To some degree, in fact, the purpose of the whole directive is to put into effect the fundamental principles of the Treaty: (15) if the procedure under the directive were the only way of achieving those principles in relation to public contracts, it would have to be applied to all cases with a cross-border interest.

45. Generally speaking, the practical methods of guaranteeing observance of the principles of the Treaty where the directive does not apply, or applies in part only, cannot be laid down once and for all, and must be assessed on a case-by-case basis. (16)

46. In the case in point, the Irish authority published a notice that set out the award criteria, but without indicating the relative weightings attributed to those criteria. I consider that, in the light of the considerations set out in the preceding points, there has been no breach of the principle of non-discrimination, the principle of equal treatment or the principle of transparency. The contracting authority provided more information than the directive required, and did not discriminate between potential tenderers.

47. As the case-law has made clear, the purpose of the transparency requirement is, in principle, to ensure for any potential tenderer a degree of advertising sufficient to enable the market to be opened up to competition and the impartiality of procurement procedures to be reviewed. (17) In this case, the decision to use the Supplement to the Official Journal of the European Union must clearly be regarded as appropriate sufficiently to advertise the competitive procedure for the award of the contract.

48. Moving on to the principles of non-discrimination and equal treatment, the fact that weightings were not attributed to the criteria until after the bids had been submitted did not, of itself, create any difference in treatment between tenderers, who were placed on an equal footing.

49. It must be pointed out that the Commission's first complaint would have had to be assessed differently, had the contracting authority set out the award criteria in the contract notice, listing them in descending order of importance. Had it done so, then the authority would have modified the importance attributed to the criteria during the course of the procedure, since, as we saw earlier, in this case, the importance attributed to the criteria has no bearing on the order in which they are listed in the notice, with the most important criteria for the award of the contract being listed in third and fourth position.

50. However, even though the Commission suggested, in its application, that the list of criteria contained in the notice and subsequent invitation to tender implied a listing in descending order of importance, various factors contradict that claim.

51. Firstly, the notice published in the Official Journal expressly stated that the order in which the criteria were listed did not reflect their relative weighting.

52. Secondly, the first criterion listed related to the completeness of the documentation supplied. Not even the least astute of tenderers could have regarded this as the main award criterion; in point of fact, it seems more in the nature of a condition of admission to the tender than an award criterion, and it is no coincidence that it was subsequently attributed a 0% weighting. (18)

53. Thirdly, in its reply, the Commission itself appears, if not to have abandoned, then certainly to have revised, its position on the descending order of importance of the award criteria. That decision by the Commission seems to me to be entirely proper but, at the same time, it deprives the first complaint of the only sustainable ground on which it could be based.

54. I therefore consider that the Commission's first complaint must be rejected.

3. The Commission's second complaint

55. As we have seen, by its second complaint, the Commission claims that, by modifying the weighting attributed to the award criteria after an initial brief review of the bids submitted, Ireland was in breach of the principles of equal treatment and transparency.

56. As I stated above, the facts are clear and undisputed. The weighting of the criteria was in fact modified a few days after it had initially been determined. At the time it was modified, the evaluation team had yet to begin its work, but the members of the team had, individually, been able to view the tenders submitted.

57. The second complaint, unlike the first, must be upheld.

58. I pointed out earlier that Community law, as interpreted by the Court, considers any modification of the award criteria that takes place during the procedure to be incompatible with the principles of equal treatment and non-discrimination. (19) That is exactly what happened in this case.

59. That finding is unaffected by the fact that the evaluation team did not start work collectively until after the award criteria had been finally modified. The principle according to which the criteria must not be modified during the procedure would be deprived of all effectiveness, if a stage at which the members of the evaluation team had sight of the bids submitted by tenderers before the team itself met were not, to all intents and purposes, regarded as a part of the procedure.

60. Even though the original weighting of the criteria was not an official act but simply a kind of 'preliminary proposal', that does not make the conduct of the authority any less unlawful. In my view, in order to guarantee that tenders are treated equally, it is crucial that the weighting attributed to the award criteria should be determined before the bids are reviewed, even if only by the members of the evaluation team acting individually. There has to be a clear separation between the process of weighting the criteria and the process of evaluating the bids. To be legitimate, 'joint consideration' by the members of the evaluation team of the weighting of the various criteria should have taken place before there was any review of the bids.

61. It is also necessary to reject the arguments of the Irish Government according to which the same tenderer would have been successful even if the weighting as originally determined had been attributed to the various criteria, instead of the weighting consequent on the subsequent modification.

62. In that regard, it must be pointed out that, according to settled case-law, in the context of actions for failure to fulfil an obligation, there is no condition regarding the interest in bringing an action. (20) The purpose of the procedure is to establish whether there has been a breach of the law of the Union, and not to consider the consequences that flow from that breach. It follows that the fact that the outcome of the procedure would have been the same if the award criteria had been attributed the importance originally attached to them is immaterial for the purposes of determining whether or not there has been a failure to fulfil an obligation.

63. In conclusion, the second of the Commission's complaints is well founded and must be upheld.

4. The possible illegality of attributing zero weighting to a criterion

64. A final point worth considering, although the parties have not paid particular attention to it, relates to the possibility of regarding as incompatible with European Union law the fact that, when weighting the various award criteria, the Irish authority accorded one of them zero weighting (0%). I am, obviously, referring to the criterion of the 'completeness of tender documentation'.

65. In my view, to list an award criterion in the contract notice and then attribute to it, after the closing date for the submission of bids, a weighting equivalent to 0% is, to all intents and purposes, tantamount to modifying the criteria. The practical outcome is, in fact, the same as it would be if the criterion were deleted from the list: a criterion that was set out in the notice is not subsequently applied for the award of the contract. In other words, the Irish authorities probably infringed European Union law by attributing zero weighting to the criterion of the completeness of tender documentation.

66. In this case, the Court cannot, however, give a ruling condemning that infringement.

67. Firstly, the question arises, as I pointed out earlier, of whether the 'award criterion' relating to the completeness of tender documentation ought not, in reality, to be regarded simply as a condition for participation in the tender. By definition, either the documentation is complete, that is to say meets the requirements set out in the contract notice, or it is not. It is hard to envisage any middle way. But the fact remains that, even if the completeness of tender documentation was not to be regarded as an award criterion, it was presented as such in the contract notice, and could therefore raise doubts concerning compatibility with the principles of the Treaty.

68. Secondly, however, the fact remains that the Commission does not cite this failure. It is not explicitly stated, nor can it be considered to be in any way implied, in the application, which, as we have seen, merely criticises the fact that the weighting of the criteria was not determined until after the closing date for submitting bids and that the weightings were modified after the members of the evaluation team individually had reviewed the bids. The Irish Government thus did not have the opportunity to state a view on this issue.

V – Conclusions

69. On the basis of my analysis, I therefore propose that the Court uphold the second of the Commission's two complaints. As regards the costs, since Ireland has been unsuccessful in part only, I propose that it be ordered, pursuant to Article 69(3) of the Court's Rules of Procedure, to pay half of the Commission's costs.

70. On the basis of the foregoing considerations, I propose that the Court should rule as follows:

– by modifying the weightings attributed to the award criteria for a contract after an initial review of the submitted bids, Ireland has failed to fulfil its obligations under the principles of equal treatment, non-discrimination and transparency;

– the application is dismissed as to the remainder;

– Ireland is order to pay half of the costs;

– the Commission is ordered to bear half of its own costs.

---

6 – The requirement of a cross-border interest is not always clearly stated in the Court's case-law which sometimes contains statements that seem to imply that the principles that arise from the Treaty apply unconditionally: see, for example, Case C-324/98 Telaustria and Telefonadress [2000] ECR I-10745, paragraph 60, and Case C-59/00 Vestergaard [2001] ECR I-9505, paragraph 20. In other judgments, however, that requirement is explicitly set out: see, for example, in regard to concessions, Case C-231/03 Coname [2005] ECR I-7287, paragraph 20, and Case C-91/08 Wall [2010] ECR I-0000, paragraph 34. As regards services that are not of priority interest (in other words, services coming within the ambit of Annex II B of Directive 2004/18), see Commission v Ireland, cited in footnote 5 (paragraph 29)). The Commission itself acknowledged the need for there to be a cross-border interest in its Interpretative Communication on the Community law applicable to contract awards not or not fully subject to the provisions of the Public Procurement Directives (OJ 2006, C 179, p. 2, paragraph 1.3).

7 – The case-law in this regard is consistent: see, for example, Case C-458/03 Parking Brixen [2005] ECR I-8585, paragraphs 47-49.

---

8 – The Commission has set out more extensive arguments seeking to demonstrate the existence of a cross-border interest in relation to the contract at issue, and has clearly done so in order to respect the principle that, in this regard, it bears the burden of proof. See Commission v Ireland, cited in footnote 5 (paragraph 32).

---

9 – The Irish Government's particular insistence on the fact that the weighting attributed to the criteria was modified before the evaluation team began its review of the bids does not, however, cast doubt on the fact that the individual members of that team had, in the meantime, already made an initial review of those bids on an individual basis. That is in fact clearly shown in the documents annexed by the Commission to its application.

It is also interesting to note that in the directives applicable in the judgments that I have just cited, the authorities are merely asked to set out in advance the weighting attributed to the award criteria only 'where possible', listing them in the order of importance attributed to them (see Article 30(2) of Directive 93/37/EEC and Article 27(2) of Directive 90/531/EEC).

Judgment

1 This reference for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of the relevant provisions, in the light of the circumstances of the dispute in the main proceedings, of Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2001 L 134, p. 114).

2 The reference was made in the course of proceedings between Mehiläinen Oy and Terveystalo Healthcare Oy, formerly Suomen Terveystalo Oyj, limited companies incorporated under Finnish law, and Oulun kaupunki (City of Oulu), concerning the legal classification, from the point of view of the European Union rules on public procurement, of a contract concluded between Oulun kaupunki and ODL Terveys Oy, a private company independent of Oulun kaupunki ('the private partner'), concerning the creation of a joint enterprise, ODL Oulun Työterveys Oy ('the joint enterprise').

Legal context

European Union legislation

3 In accordance with the definitions contained in Article 1(2) of Directive 2004/18:

'(a) "Public contracts" are contracts for pecuniary interest concluded in writing between one or more economic operators and one or more contracting authorities and having as their object the execution of works, the supply of products or the provision of services within the meaning of this Directive.

(d) "Public service contracts" are public contracts other than public works or supply contracts having as their object the provision of services referred to in Annex II.

…'

4 Article 2 of Directive 2004/18, entitled 'Principles of awarding contracts', provides:

'Contracting authorities shall treat economic operators equally and non-discriminatorily and shall act in a transparent way.'

5 Pursuant to Article 7 of that directive, entitled 'Threshold amounts for public contracts', as amended by Commission Regulation (EC) No 1422/2007 of 4 December 2007 amending Directives 2004/17/EC and 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council in respect of their application thresholds for the procedures for the award of contracts (OJ 2007 L 317, p. 34), Directive 2004/18 applies to public service contracts awarded by contracting authorities other than central government authorities, which have a value exclusive of value-added tax (VAT) estimated to be equal to or greater than EUR 206 000.

6 In accordance with Annex II B of Directive 2004/18, health care services fall within Category 25 thereof entitled 'Health and social services'.

7 Under Article 21 of Directive 2004/18:

'Contracts which have as their object services listed in Annex II B shall be subject solely to Article 23 and Article 35(4).'

8 Article 23 of Directive 2004/18, in Chapter IV thereof, entitled 'Specific rules governing specifications and contract documents' relates to technical specifications in contract documentation, and Article 35(4), which appears in Chapter VI of that directive, entitled 'Rules on advertising and transparency', refers to the contracting authorities' obligations to give notice of the results of the award procedure.

National legislation

9 Finnish law 1383/2001 on occupational health care (Työterveyshuoltolaki) requires public and private employers to protect the health of their employees at work.

10 According to the first subparagraph of paragraph 3 of that law, occupational health care is the activity, carried out on the responsibility of the employer, by which occupational health professionals and experts promote the prevention of work-related illness and accidents, ensure that work-stations do not imperil workers' health or safety, promote an adequate working environment and the correct functioning of the staff as a group and the workers' health, efficiency and performance.

11 Under the first subparagraph of Paragraph 4 of that law, the employer must arrange occupational health care at his own expense in order to prevent and control impairment of health and health risks caused by work and working conditions and to protect and ensure the safety, working capacity and health of his staff.

12 Under Paragraph 7 of Law 1383/2001, an employer may organise occupational health care services within the meaning of that law by acquiring the services he needs from a 'health centre', within the meaning of Law 66/1972 on Public Health (Kansanterveyslaki), arranging, himself or together with other employers, the occupational health care services needed or by acquiring the services in question from another entity or person entitled to provide occupational health care services.

13 In accordance with the first subparagraph of Paragraph 87a of Finnish Law 365/1995 on local government (Kuntalaki), as amended by Law 519/2007, which entered into force on 15 May 2007, a local authority or association of local authorities may set up a municipal entity for the purposes of business or a task to be discharged according to commercial principles. Such municipal entities are not independent legal persons, but are components of the local authority organisation and legislation on the activities of local authorities applies to the activity of a municipal entity.

14 Directive 2004/18 was transposed into Finnish law by Law 348/2007 on public procurement (Hankintalaki), the first subparagraph of Paragraph 5 thereof contains a definition of 'public contract' which corresponds to that in Article 1(2)(a) of that directive.

15 In accordance with the preparatory materials which led to the adoption of that law (Government Proposal 50/2006 vp), a public contract is normally a private-law contract between two separate legal persons. That is why, contracts within an organisation are not generally to be regarded as public contracts. A contract is not to be regarded as a public contract if its main object is other than the award of a contract. What needs to be examined in particular is whether the arrangement or bundle of agreements constitutes or constitute an indivisible whole, from which the contract in question cannot be separated.

16 Under Paragraph 10 of the law, the latter does not apply to contracts awarded by a contracting authority to an entity distinct from it in form and independent of it in terms of decision making, but over which it exercises, alone or with other contracting authorities, a control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments so long as that distinct entity carries out the essential part of its activities with those contracting authorities. That provision constitutes the adaptation of the national rules to the case-law of the Court (Case C-107/98 Teckal [1999] ECR I-8121, paragraph 50).

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

17 On 21 April 2008, Oulu City Council decided to set up a joint venture with its private partner, to be governed by Law 624/2006 on limited companies, and to commence its activities on 1 June 2008. The capital of the joint venture is divided equally between the two partners and its management is shared.

18 The joint venture's activity was to consist in providing occupational heath care and welfare services and the two partners intended its activities to be chiefly and increasingly, focused on private clients. However, for a transitional period of four years ('the transitional period'), they undertook to purchase from the joint venture the health services they are required, as employers, to provide for their staff in accordance with national law.

19 According to Oulun kaupunki, the joint venture's estimated turnover was approximately EUR 90 million during the transitional period, EUR 18 million of which represented the value of services that it was to provide to its staff.

20 The two partners were to transfer to the joint venture, as a capital contribution, their respective units responsible internally for providing occupational health care services to their employees in accordance with the applicable national law. Thus, Oulun kaupunki transferred to the joint venture the municipal entity Oulun Työterveys ('the municipal entity'), responsible internally for the supply of occupational health care services, the value of which was between EUR 2.5 and 3.4 million, while the private partner transferred its corresponding unit of an estimated value of between EUR 2.2 and 3 million.

21 According to Oulun kaupunki, the occupational health care services supplied to the city's employees represent about 38% of the municipal entity's turnover. The remainder of the turnover is obtained by the supply of services to private clients.

22 The minutes of the Oulun kaupunki City Council meeting which led to the decision of 21 April 2008 state as follows:

'The parties have furthermore agreed to purchase occupational health and welfare services from the newly founded company over a four year transitional period. The City shall purchase these services on the same scale as it has from the current Oulun Työterveys municipal entity. … The [Law on public procurement] requires the City to put out to tender its occupational health services once they have become the responsibility of the [joint venture]. During the transitional stage, however, the City is justified in continuing its customer relationship with the [joint venture] on account of at least the following:

– the arrangement will safeguard the position of staff transferring from the City

– the City's current contract is favourable and competitive

– the joint venture will begin its operations in favourable conditions.'

23 In accordance with those minutes, on 24 April 2008 Oulun kaupunki signed an agreement with the private partner, according to which it undertook to entrust to the future joint venture the task of providing municipal employees with occupational health and welfare services during the transitional period. When that transitional period expired, Oulun kaupunki intended, according to its statement, to make the award of the services concerned subject to a procedure for the award of a procurement contract.

24 Thus, it is clear from those minutes that Oulun kaupunki, as the contracting authority, failed to invite tenders during the transitional period for the provision of occupational health care and welfare services which it had a duty to provide for its employees in accordance with national law. It is also common ground that the choice of private partner was not made following a competitive procedure.

25 The referring court, hearing an action brought by competing undertakings interested in providing occupational health care and welfare services for the employees of Oulun kaupunki temporarily restrained the latter, on pain of a EUR 200 000 fine, from implementing, in any way whatsoever, the City Council's decision of 21 April 2008 in so far as it concerns the occupational health care and welfare services for the City's staff. Pending the final decision of the court hearing the proceedings, on 26 August 2008 Oulun kaupunki decided to transfer the municipal entity's activities to the joint venture, excluding, however, from that transfer the occupational health care services provided to its staff.

26 Having regard to the arguments put forward by the parties to the main proceedings concerning the nature of the contested transaction, in the light of European Union law on public procurement, the Markkinaoikeus decided to stay its proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'1. Is an arrangement by which a municipal contracting authority concludes with a private undertaking in the form of a company which is separate from it a contract establishing a new undertaking in the form of a share company, on an equal share basis both in terms of ownership and of power of control, from which the municipal contracting authority commits itself, when setting up the company, to purchasing occupational health and welfare services for its own staff, on an overall assessment, an arrangement which must be put out to tender, on the ground that the bundle of agreements amounts to the award of a public service contract for the purposes of Directive 2004/18/EC … or is the arrangement to be regarded as the establishment of a joint venture and the transfer of the business activity of a municipal entity to which that directive and the consequent obligation to put out to tender are not applicable?

2. Should any significance in this case also be attached:

(a) to the fact that Oulun kaupunki, as a municipal contracting authority, has undertaken to acquire in return for consideration the services referred to above over a four-year transitional period, after which the municipal contracting authority intends, according to its decision, once again to put out to tender the occupational health care services it requires;

(b) to the fact that, prior to the arrangement in question, most of the turnover of the municipal enterprise that was part of Oulun kaupunki's organisation came from occupational health care services other than those produced for the City's own employees;

(c) to the fact that the new undertaking has been created by the transfer, by way to a contribution in kind, of the activity of the municipal entity, which comprises the production of occupational health care services both for the City's employees and for private customers?'

The questions referred for a preliminary ruling

27 By its two questions, which it is appropriate to examine together, the national court asks essentially whether Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that it applies to an arrangement by which a municipal contracting authority concludes with a private undertaking independent of it, a contract establishing a joint venture in the form of a share company, from which the municipal contracting authority commits itself, when setting up the company, to purchasing occupational health and welfare services for its own staff.

28 It is clear from the wording of those questions and the context in which they arise that they relate more specifically to the supply by the joint venture, to Oulun kaupunki of occupational health care and welfare services for its staff, since that supply corresponds to the undertaking entered into by the City to purchase from the joint venture, during a transitional period of four years, such services which were previously provided to it by a municipal entity which is a component of its organisation.

29 As a preliminary point, it must be noted that it is common ground in the case in the main proceedings that Oulun kaupunki has the status of a contracting authority within the meaning of Article 1(9) of Directive 2004/18, and that the services concerned fall within the definition of 'health care … services' for the purpose of Category 25 of Annex II B to that directive. The undertaking by Oulun kaupunki to purchase the services concerned for its staff from the joint venture implies the existence of a contract for pecuniary interest between the City and that joint venture. Moreover, it is clear from the information provided by the national court that the estimated value of the contract of EUR 18 million exceeds the relevant threshold for the application of Directive 2004/18.

30 It should also be recalled that Directive 2004/18 makes no distinction between public contracts awarded by a contracting authority for the purposes of fulfilling its task of meeting of public interest needs and those which are unrelated to that task, such as the need to fulfil an obligation imposed on it, as in the present case, as an employer with respect to its employees (see, in particular, Case C-271/08 Commission v Germany [2010] ECR I-0000, paragraph 73 and the case-law cited).

31 After making that point clear, it should be recalled that a public authority may perform the public interest tasks conferred on it by using its own resources, without being obliged to call on outside entities not forming part of its own departments, and that it may do so in cooperation with other public authorities (see Case C-480/06 Commission v Germany [2009] ECR I-4747, paragraph 45). Similarly, as stated in point 1 of the Commission's Interpretative Communication on the Application of Community law on Public Procurement and Concessions to Institutionalised (PPPI) (OJ 2008 C 91,

p. 4), public authorities are free to pursue economic activities themselves or to assign them to third parties, such as mixed capital entities founded in the context of a public-private partnership.

32 Furthermore, the application of European Union law on public procurement is excluded if the control exercised by the contracting authority over the contracting entity is similar to that exercised by the contracting authority over its own departments and if, at the same time, that entity carries out the essential part of its activities with the controlling local authority (see Teckal, paragraph 50). However, the holding, even a minority holding, of a private undertaking in the capital of a company in which the contracting authority in question also has a holding too means that, on any view, it is impossible for that contracting authority to exercise over that company control similar to that which it exercises over its own departments (see, in particular, Case C-573/07 Sea [2009] ECR I-8127, paragraph 46, and Case C-196/08 Acoset [2009] ECR I-9913, paragraph 53).

33 As regards, more specifically, the national court's question whether or not Oulun kaupunki's undertaking to purchase health care and welfare services for its staff from the joint venture during the transitional period falls outside the scope of the rules in Directive 2004/18 on account of the fact that that undertaking forms part of a contract setting up a joint venture, it must be observed that the creation of a joint venture by a contracting authority and a private economic operator is not covered as such by Directive 2004/18. That finding is also set out in point 66 of the Green Paper on public-private partnerships and Community law on public contracts and concessions (COM(2004) 327 final).

34 However it should be observed, as is clear from point 69 of that Green Paper, that it is necessary to ensure that such a capital transaction does not in reality conceal the award to a private partner of contracts which might be considered to be public contracts or concessions. Furthermore, as stated at paragraph 2.1 of the Commission Interpretative Communication, the fact that a private entity and a contracting entity cooperate within a mixed-capital entity cannot justify failure to observe the provisions on public procurement when awarding such a contract to that private entity or to that mixed capital entity (see, to that effect, Acoset, paragraph 57).

35 Having regard to those general guidelines, it must be established whether, and to what extent, Directive 2004/18 may be applicable in the case in the main proceedings.

36 In that connection, it is clear from the case-law of the Court that, as regards a mixed contract, the different aspects of which are inseparably linked and thus form an indivisible whole, that contract must be examined as a whole for the purposes of its legal classification in the light of the rules on public contracts, and must be assessed on the basis of the rules which govern the aspect which constitutes the main object or predominant feature of the contract (Joined Cases C-145/08 and C-149/08 Club Hotel Loutraki and Others [2010] ECR I-0000, paragraphs 48 and 49 and the case-law cited).

37 It follows that, for the purposes of the application of Directive 2004/18, it must be ascertained whether the aspect constituted by the health care services for Oulun kaupunki's staff, which fall in principle within the scope of that directive, is severable from that contract.

38 In that connection, reference should be made to the minutes of the municipal council meeting of Oulun kaupunki of 21 April 2008, which sets out the reasons for the undertaking entered into by it when the joint venture was set up. Furthermore, it is clear from the explanations provided by Oulun kaupunki at the hearing that it regards that aspect of the contract as indivisible, on account of the fact that the value of the undertaking to purchase health care services from the joint venture during the transitional period was part of its capital contribution to that venture and that that contribution was, economically, a condition of the creation of that venture.

39 It should be pointed out that the expressed or presumed intentions of the contracting parties to regard the various aspects making up a mixed contract as indivisible are not sufficient, but must be supported by objective evidence capable of justifying them and of establishing the need to conclude a single contract.

40 As far as concerns Oulun kaupunki's argument that the situation of the City Council's employees transferred to the joint venture is guaranteed by the undertaking entered into, it must be observed that such a guarantee could also have been made under a procedure for the award of a public contract in accordance with the principles of non-discrimination and transparency, in which the requirement relating to that guarantee would be part of the conditions to which the award of the contract would be subject.

41 As regards Oulun kaupunki's arguments that 'the current contract is advantageous and competitive' and that, by that undertaking, 'the joint venture will commence its activities in favourable conditions', it must be recalled that, according to the case-law of the Court, the award of a public contract to a semi-public company without a call for tenders would interfere with the objective of free and undistorted competition and the principle of equal treatment, in that such a procedure would offer a private undertaking with a capital holding in that company an advantage over its competitors (Acoset, paragraph 56 and the case-law cited). Such arguments do not support the conclusion that the aspect constituted by the health care services for the staff of Oulun kaupunki is indissociable from the rest of the contract.

42 Furthermore, it must be held that the alleged but unsubstantiated inclusion of the value of the undertaking entered into by Oulun kaupunki with respect to its capital contribution to the joint venture constitutes, in those circumstances, a legal technicality which does not justify the view that that aspect of the mixed contract is indivisible from the latter.

43 In addition, as the Czech Government and the Commission argue, the fact that, in the case in the main proceedings, the contracting authority expressed its intentions to launch a call for tenders for the purchase of health care services for its staff at the end of the transitional period also constitutes evidence to support the severable nature of that aspect from the remainder of the mixed contract.

44 Similarly, the fact that the joint venture has operated since August 2008 without that aspect tends to show that the two partners appear to be in a position to deal with any impact that that absence might have on the financial position of that venture, which is further relevant evidence as the divisible nature of that aspect.

45 Accordingly, unlike the circumstances which gave rise to the judgment in Loutraki and Others, the abovementioned findings fail to demonstrate objectively the need to conclude that mixed contract with a single partner (see, to that effect, Loutraki and Others, paragraph 53).

46 Since the component of the mixed contract consisting in the undertaking by Oulun kaupunki to purchase health care services for its staff from the joint venture is severable from that contract, it follows that in a context such as that in the main proceedings, the relevant provisions of Directive 2004/18 are applicable to the award of that aspect.

47 In the light of the foregoing considerations, the answer to the questions referred is that Directive 2004/18 must be interpreted as meaning that, where a contracting authority concludes with a private company independent of it a contract establishing a joint venture in the form of a share company, the purpose of which is to provide occupational health care and welfare services, the award by the contracting authority of the contract relating to the services for its own staff, the value of which exceeds the threshold laid down by that directive, and which is severable from the contract establishing that company, must be made in accordance with the provisions of that directive applicable to the services in Annex II B thereof.

Costs

48 Since these proceedings are, for the parties to the main proceedings, a step in the action pending before the national court, the decision on costs is a matter for that court. Costs incurred in submitting observations to the Court, other than the costs of those parties, are not recoverable.

On those grounds, the Court (Third Chamber) hereby rules:

Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts must be interpreted as meaning that, where a contracting authority concludes with a private company independent of it a contract establishing a joint venture in the form of a share company, the purpose of which is to provide occupational health care and welfare services, the award by the contracting authority of the contract relating to the services for its own staff, the value of which exceeds the threshold laid down by that directive, and which is severable from the contract establishing that company, must be made in accordance with the provisions of that directive applicable to the services in Annex II B thereof.

after hearing the Opinion of the Advocate General at the sitting on 15 April 2010,

gives the following

Judgment

1 This reference for a preliminary ruling concerns the interpretation of Articles 49 EC and 50 EC and of the relevant provisions, particularly Article 24, of Council Directive 93/37/EEC of 14 June 1993 concerning the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts (OJ 1993 L 199, p. 54).

2 The reference was made in the course of proceedings between, on the one hand, Bâtiments et Ponts Construction SA ('BPC'), a company incorporated under Belgian law, and WISAG Produktionsservice GmbH ('WIG'), formerly ThyssenKrupp Industrieservice GmbH, formerly WIG Industrieinstandhaltung GmbH, a company incorporated under German law, and, on the other, Berlaymont 2000 SA ('Berlaymont 2000'), a company incorporated under Belgian law, concerning the exclusion by the latter, in its capacity as contracting authority, from participation in a public works contract of the consortium formed for that purpose by the two former companies.

Legal context

Legislation of the Union

3 The provisions, relevant to the main proceedings, of Directive 93/37, which, in the meantime, has been replaced by Directive 2004/18/EC of the European Parliament and of the Council of 31 March 2004 on the coordination of procedures for the award of public works contracts, public supply contracts and public service contracts (OJ 2004 L 134, p. 114), are those of Article 6 of Directive 93/37 and those in Title IV thereof, and more particularly in Chapter 2, entitled 'Criteria for qualitative selection', of Title IV, which chapter contains Articles 24 to 29.

4 Article 6(6) of Directive 93/37 was in the following terms:

'Contracting authorities shall ensure that there is no discrimination between the various contractors.'

5 Article 24 of Directive 93/37 provided as follows:

'Any contractor may be excluded from participation in the contract who:

(a) is bankrupt or is being wound up, whose affairs are being administered by the court, who has entered into an arrangement with creditors, who has suspended business activities or who is in any analogous situation arising from a similar procedure under national laws and regulations;

(b) is the subject of proceedings for a declaration of bankruptcy, for an order for compulsory winding up or administration by the court or for an arrangement with creditors or of any other similar proceedings under national laws or regulations;

(c) has been convicted of an offence concerning his professional conduct by a judgment which has the force of res judicata;

(d) has been guilty of grave professional misconduct proved by any means which the contracting authorities can justify;

(e) has not fulfilled obligations relating to the payment of social security contributions in accordance with the legal provisions of the country in which he is established or with those of the country of the contracting authority;

(f) has not fulfilled obligations relating to the payment of taxes in accordance with the legal provisions of the country in which he is established or those of the country of the contracting authority;

(g) is guilty of serious misrepresentation in supplying the information required under this Chapter.

Where the contracting authority requires of the contractor proof that none of the cases quoted in (a), (b), (c), (e) or (f) applies to him, it shall accept as sufficient evidence:

– for points (a), (b) or (c), the production of an extract from the "judicial record" or, failing this, of an equivalent document issued by a competent judicial or administrative authority in the country of origin [or] in the country whence that person comes showing that these requirements have been met;

– for points (e) or (f), a certificate issued by the competent authority in the Member State concerned.

Where the country concerned does not issue such documents or certificates, they may be replaced [by] a declaration on oath or, in Member States where there is no provision for declarations on oath, by a solemn declaration made by the person concerned before a judicial or administrative authority, a notary or a competent professional or trade body, in the country of origin or in the country whence that person comes.

Member States shall designate the authorities and bodies competent to issue these documents and shall forthwith inform the other Member States and the Commission thereof.'

6 The first and third indents of Article 25 of Directive 93/37 provided:

'Any contractor wishing to take part in a public works contract may be requested to prove his enrolment in the professional or trade register under the conditions laid down by the laws of the Member State in which he is established:

– in Belgium the "Registre du Commerce – Handelsregister",

– in Germany, the "Handelsregister" and the "Handwerksrolle"'.

7 Article 26 of Directive 93/37 provided:

'1. Evidence of the contractor's financial and economic standing may, as a general rule, be furnished by one or more of the following references:

(a) appropriate statements from bankers;

(b) the presentation of the firm's balance sheets or extracts from the balance sheets, where publication of the balance sheet is required under the law of the country in which the contractor is established;

(c) a statement of the firm's overall turnover and the turnover on construction works for the three previous financial years.

2. The contracting authorities shall specify in the notice or in the invitation to tender which reference or references they have chosen and what references other than those mentioned under paragraph 1(a), (b) or (c) are to be produced.

3. If, for any valid reason, the contractor is unable to supply the references requested by the contracting authorities, he may prove his economic and financial standing by any other document which the contracting authorities consider appropriate.'

8 Article 27 of Directive 93/37 was worded as follows:

'1. Evidence of the contractor's technical capability may be furnished by:

(a) the contractor's educational and professional qualifications and/or those of the firm's managerial staff and, in particular, those of the person or persons responsible for carrying out the works;

(b) a list of the works carried out over the past five years, accompanied by certificates of satisfactory execution for the most important works. These certificates shall indicate the value, date and site of the works and shall specify whether they were carried out according to the rules of the trade and properly completed. Where necessary, the competent authority shall submit these certificates to the contracting authority direct;

(c) a statement of the tools, plant and technical equipment available to the contractor for carrying out the work;

(d) a statement of the firm's average annual manpower and the number of managerial staff for the last three years;

(e) a statement of the technicians or technical bodies which the contractor can call upon for carrying out the work, whether or not they belong to the firm.

2. The contracting authorities shall specify in the invitation to tender which of these references are to be produced.'

9 Article 28 of Directive 93/37 was in the following terms:

'Within the limits of Articles 24 to 27, the contracting authority may invite the contractor to supplement the certificates and documents submitted or to clarify them.'

10 Article 29 of Directive 93/37 provided:

'1. Member States who have official lists of recognized contractors must adapt them to the provisions of Article 24(a) to (d) and (g) and of Articles 25, 26 and 27.

2. Contractors registered in the official lists may, for each contract, submit to the contracting authority a certificate of registration issued by the competent authority. This certificate shall state the reference which enabled them to be registered in the list and the classification given in this list.

3. Certified registration in the official lists by the competent bodies shall, for the contracting authorities of other Member States, constitute a presumption of suitability for works corresponding to the contractor's classification only as regards Articles 24(a) to (d) and (g), 25, 26(b) and (c) and 27(b) and (d).

Information which can be deduced from registration in official lists may not be questioned. However, with regard to the payment of social security contributions, an additional certificate may be required of any registered contractor whenever a contract is offered.

The contracting authorities of other Member States shall apply the above provisions only in favour of contractors who are established in the country holding the official list.

4. For the registration of contractors of other Member States in an official list, no further proofs and statements may be required other than those requested of nationals and, in any event, only those provided for under Articles 24 to 27.

5. Member States holding an official list shall communicate to other Member States the address of the body to which requests for registration may be made.'

National legislation

11 The market in question in the main proceedings was governed, in particular, by the Royal Decree of 22 April 1977 concerning public works, supply and service contracts (Moniteur belge of 26 July 1977, p. 9539). Article 15 thereof, in Section 2, entitled 'Drawing up the tender', provided:

'…

3. A Belgian tenderer which employs staff to whom the Law of 27 June 1969 amending the Decree-Law of 28 December 1944 on social security for workers applies must, for its tender to be regarded as valid, attach thereto a certificate of the National Social Security Office stating that it has paid social security and subsistence protection contributions or present such a certificate to the administration before the opening of tenders …

4. A foreign tenderer must, for its tender to be regarded as valid, attach thereto or present to the administration before the opening of tenders:

(a) a certificate issued by the competent authority stating that the tenderer has complied with its obligations relating to the payment of social security contributions in accordance with the legal provisions of the country in which it is established …

7. A tenderer must, for its tender to be regarded as valid, be registered as a contractor pursuant to Article 299a of the Income Tax Code and Article 30a of the Law of 27 June 1969 amending the Decree-Law of 28 December 1944 on social security for workers.'

12 The detailed rules of that registration obligation are governed by the Royal Decree of 5 October 1978 (Moniteur belge of 7 October 1978, p. 11707; 'the Royal Decree of 1978').

13 Article 2 of the Royal Decree of 1978, in Section 1 entitled 'Conditions to be satisfied in order to be registered as a contractor', provides in its paragraph 1:

'Registration as a contractor … shall be granted only to contractors which satisfy the following conditions:

2. in respect of an activity referred to in Article 1, they must be registered in the companies' register or professional register in accordance with the requirements laid down in the legal provisions of the Member State in which they are established;

7. where a company is involved, the directors, managers or persons empowered to enter into obligations on behalf of the company may not include any persons who are prohibited from performing such tasks under Royal Decree No 22 of 24 October 1934 referred to in subparagraph 6;

10. they must not have committed, during the five year period preceding the application for registration, any repeated or serious infringements relating to tax obligations …

11. they must not, at the time of the application for registration, be in arrears with the payment of taxes, contributions levied by the National Social Security Office or contributions levied by the Subsistence Protection Fund or on its behalf; …;

12. they must possess sufficient financial, administrative and technical resources to ensure fulfilment of their tax and social security obligations.'

14 Under Article 8 of the Royal Decree of 1978, an application to be registered as a contractor must be submitted to the Chairman of the 'Registration Committee' of the province in which the applicant has its principal place of business. In the case of applicants not established in Belgium, the committee of the province in which the construction site in question is situated is to be competent.

15 Article 10 of the Royal Decree of 1978 is in the following terms:

'(1) For it not to be inadmissible, the following documents must be attached to the application:

3. from each applicant: a copy of the entry in the professional register on the conditions laid down in the legal provisions of the country in which it is established …;

5. from a [foreign] applicant: certificates issued by the competent authority in the Member State in which it is established confirming that it is not in arrears with the payment of taxes or social security contributions in that Member State.

2. The registration committee referred to in Section 4 below can require the applicant to provide further documents or information which it deems necessary to determine whether or not the conditions laid down in Article 2(1) have been fulfilled.

…'

16 Article 16 of the Royal Decree of 1978, in Section 4, entitled 'Registration Committee', provides:

'(1) Each registration committee shall be composed of nine members appointed by Us in accordance with the procedures set out below:

1. three members who shall be officials appointed on the proposal of, respectively,

(a) the Minister for Social Security;

(b) the Minister for Finance;

(c) the Minister for Employment and Work;

2. three members shall be appointed on the proposal of the organisations representing employers in the construction industry;

3. three members shall be appointed on the proposal of the organisations representing employees in the construction industry; …

(2) Each committee shall be chaired by one of the officials referred to in Paragraph (1)(1)(a) and (b) appointed by Us for this purpose on the proposal of the two ministers referred to therein …'

The dispute in the main proceedings and the questions referred for a preliminary ruling

17 On 18 September 1990, Berlaymont 2000 was formed by the Régie des Bâtiments (Buildings Agency), a legal person established under Belgian public law, and three banking institutions. Berlaymont 2000's main purpose was the renovation of the Berlaymont Building and the drawing up of the contract documents, work schedule and budget associated with that renovation. That building had been constructed on land acquired by the Belgian State in 1960 and occupied by the Commission's services until 1991. It has again been occupied by the Commission's services since the completion of the renovation works in 2004.

18 In 1994, Berlaymont 2000 invited tenders for the renovation works, the value of which was estimated at around BEF 1.4 billion. It drew up, to that end, special contract conditions and had a contract notice published in the Official Journal of the European Communities on 23 December 1994. Article 1.G of the special contract conditions stated: 'As regards the works which form the subject-matter of the present contract, the contractor must be registered in Belgium'.

19 On 16 February 1995, Berlaymont 2000 published an amended notice in the Official Journal of the European Communities which provided certain additional information regarding the registration requirements for tenderers.

20 That notice stated that:

‘As regards the works which form the subject-matter of the present contract, the contractor must furnish proof that it is regarded as having fulfilled its obligations relating to social security contributions, tax and VAT; this proof must be contained in a registration.

The application for registration is to be made in accordance with the Royal Decree of 3 October 1978.

As regards the validity of the tender (at the time it is submitted), it will be sufficient for a copy of the application for registration to be attached to the tender. No decision to award the contract will be taken before the competent authority has ruled on the application.’

21 The special conditions were also consequentially amended and state that ‘[i]n its tender, the tenderer will confirm that it has taken account of this amendment notice No 1, failing which its tender will be void’.

22 In order to participate in the tender proceedings, BPC and WIG formed a consortium named BPC-WIG (‘BPC-WIG’). On 16 March 1995, BPC-WIG submitted a tender for the contract in question. WIG had attached to that tender two certificates issued by the German tax and social security authorities dated 4 August 1994 and 3 February 1995 according to which ‘the tax administration has no objection to WIG’s participation in a public works contract’ and ‘all social security contributions have always been paid punctually by WIG’. However neither WIG not BPC-WIG attached to their tender evidence of their registration or of their applications for registration as required, however, by the Belgian legislation. Applications for registration were not submitted by those two entities until after the expiry of the time-limit for submitting tenders, that is to say by BPC-WIG on 28 April 1995 and by WIG on 3 May 1995 and the registrations were not granted until July 1995, which was after the contract was awarded. BPC, as a company incorporated under Belgian law, was already registered in Belgium.

23 By decision of 20 June 1995, Berlaymont 2000’s Board of Directors awarded the contract to another consortium.

24 BPC and WIG brought an action for annulment of that award decision before the Conseil d’État (Council of State). By judgment of 10 March 1999 a Chamber of the Council of State dismissed the proceedings before it on the grounds that WIG was not, at the time its tender was submitted, registered as a contractor in accordance with Article 15(7) of the Royal Decree of 22 April 1977 concerning public works, supply and service contacts, and held that at the date of the decision to award the contract, the applicants were ineligible for such award and rejected their claim.

25 Meanwhile, on 18 June 1996, BPC and WIG brought before the Tribunal de première instance de Bruxelles (Court of First Instance, Brussels) an action for damages for the loss caused by their exclusion from the contract. By judgment of 5 November 2002, that court dismissed the action as inadmissible. By application of 15 April 2003, BPC and WIG brought an appeal against that decision. By judgment of 14 March 2007, the Cour d’appel de Bruxelles (Court of Appeal, Brussels) upheld the decision at first instance.

26 The referring court has set out, in its decision, the reasoning followed by the Cour d’appel de Bruxelles. It points out that the applicants had not attached to their tender the applications for registration which were, however, necessary for WIG and BPC-WIG. The tax and social security certificates issued by the competent German authorities and attached to the tenders of WIG and BPC-WIG did not amount to registration but met a different production requirement, whilst also being necessary to obtain registration. Thus, the applicants failed to satisfy an essential requirement of the Belgian legislation and, therefore, their tender was null and void, which excluded them automatically and at the outset from the award procedure.

27 As regards the additional registration obligation, the Cour d’appel de Bruxelles accepted that the first paragraph of Article 24 of Directive 93/37 does not include failure to register among the grounds referred to therein for exclusion from participation in a contract. It accepted also that, under the second paragraph of Article 24 of that directive, where the contracting authority requires of the contractor proof that the cases referred to in points (e) and (f) of the first paragraph do not apply to it, the authority is to accept as sufficient evidence a certificate issued by the competent authority in the Member State concerned. However, that court considered that other provisions of Directive 93/37 led to the conclusion that the registration obligation, on pain of exclusion from the contract, was not prohibited.

28 It points out, in that regard, that the logical reason for the registration procedure was to enable the Belgian authorities to satisfy themselves that a contractor possessed sufficient financial, administrative and technical resources to ensure fulfilment of its tax and social security obligations. Consequently, the certificates emanating from the German authorities would not suffice to provide such a guarantee. The Cour d'appel de Bruxelles refers in that regard to Articles 26, 27 and 29(4) of Directive 93/37, which, in its view, confer on the contracting authority the right to require from contractors additional evidence and declarations. Consequently, that court considered that a reference to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling would be irrelevant.

29 Their appeal dismissed, BPC and WIG, on 28 September 2007, appealed on a point of law to the Cour de cassation (Court of Cassation).

30 Harbouring doubts as regards the compliance of the legislation in question in the main proceedings with the provisions of the EC Treaty in respect of the free movement of services and the provisions of Article 24 of Directive 93/37, the Cour de cassation decided to stay the proceedings and to refer the following questions to the Court of Justice for a preliminary ruling:

'1. Is the obligation to hold a registration in order to be awarded a public contract in Belgium, such as that imposed by Article 1.G of the special conditions, applicable in the present case, contrary to the principle of freedom of movement within the European Union and to the second paragraph of Article 24 of Directive 93/37 … if it had to be interpreted as permitting the Belgian contracting authority to exclude from the tender procedure a foreign contractor who does not hold a registration but has produced equivalent certificates from his national authorities?

2. Is it contrary to the principle of freedom of movement within the European Union and to the second paragraph of Article 24 of Directive 93/37 to grant a Belgian contracting authority the power to require foreign tenderers to submit to a Belgian authority – the committee for the registration of contractors – for assessment of the validity of the certificates which have been issued to them by the tax and social security authorities of their State, attesting that they have fulfilled the obligations imposed on them relating to tax and social security?'

The questions referred for a preliminary ruling

Admissibility of the reference for a preliminary ruling

31 The Commission expresses doubts as regards the admissibility of the request for a preliminary ruling, because the referring court confines itself, in the order for reference, to reproducing the reasoning in the judgment of the Cour d'appel de Bruxelles, does not define sufficiently the factual and legislative context of the dispute in the main proceedings and does not give sufficient explanation of the reasons for selecting the provisions of the law of the Union, the interpretation of which it seeks.

32 Those doubts are unfounded.

33 First of all, the referring court cannot be accused of merely repeating, in its decision, the judgment of the Cour d'appel de Bruxelles which forms the subject matter of the appeal on a point of law before it. The referring court expresses, by such repeat, its doubts as regards the compliance of the conclusions reached in that judgment with the relevant provisions of the law of the Union, namely those of the Treaty in respect of free movement of services and those of Article 24 of Directive 93/37.

34 As the Advocate General noted in paragraph 33 of her Opinion, the order for reference explains sufficiently what is at issue in the main proceedings and the factual and legislative context in which the questions referred arose, matters which have, moreover, enabled the parties concerned, for the purposes of the second paragraph of Article 23 of the Statute of the Court of Justice of the European Union, properly to submit their observations.

35 Finally, the relationship between the context thus described of what is at issue in the main proceedings and the provisions of Union law, the interpretation of which is sought, is abundantly clear from the contents of the Court file and needs no particular explanation.

36 Therefore, the information thus provided is sufficient to meet the requirements of the Court's settled case-law (see, to that effect, Case C-42/07 Liga Portuguesa de Futebol Profissional and Bwin International [2009] ECR I-0000, paragraph 40 and the case-law cited) and to enable the Court to provide helpful replies to the referring court. Accordingly, the reference for a preliminary ruling is admissible.

The first question

37 By this question, the national court is asking, in essence, whether the general principles of the law of the Union on public procurement and the second paragraph of Article 24 of Directive 93/37 are to be interpreted as precluding national legislation, such as that at issue in the main proceedings, which imposes on a contractor established in another Member State an obligation to hold a registration, in the contracting authority's Member State, in order to be awarded a contract in the latter Member State, notwithstanding the fact that the contractor has produced certificates issued by the authorities of its Member State of establishment which attest, in particular, that it has fulfilled, in that State, its obligations relating to the payment of social security contributions and taxes.

38 At the outset, it is important to make clear that the registration at issue in the main proceedings is not covered by the provisions of Article 25 or 29 of Directive 93/37.
